ARTICLE I

ISSUANCE, AUTHENTICATION, NEGOTIATION, AND REGISTRATION OF BONDS

SECTION 1. The company covenants that it will proceed to, and have engraved or lithographed within 90 days from the date of delivery of this instrument all of said above described permanent or definitive bonds and interest coupons thereto to be affixed and that, as soon as the said permanent bonds to be secured hereby shall be ready, and of the numbers, from 1 to 5105, both first and last numbers, inclusive, and having an aggregate principal amount of $2,500,000, said bonds shall be executed and sealed by it, and be delivered to the said American Trust and Safe Deposit Company, corporate trustee herein designated and appointed as such, at its office in Chicago, Illinois, for certification, and upon certification of each of said definitive bonds by it, and the execution of the certificate of the New York Title and Mortgage Company endorsed thereon, thereupon all of said definitive bonds shall be by the said corporate trustee delivered in exchange for, and upon cancellation, of the temporary bond as in section 3 of this article is provided. Said corporate trustee shall deliver to the holder or holders of said temporary bond the said permanent or definitive bonds of the numbers and not exceeding the aggregate amount aforesaid and above specified, and the receipt for said permanent bonds of the holder or holders of said temporary bond and the delivery to said corporate trustee for cancellation of the aforesaid temporary bond shall be full and complete acquittance of said corporate trustee for such delivery and exchange. All of said permanent bonds as specified in said schedule thereof as shown in the preambles of this instrument shall be of even date herewith and shall bear interest from May 15, 1925, at the rate of six and one-half per cent (6½%) per annum, until their respective maturities, and payable semi-annually, plus normal tax of the United States when claimed as aforesaid, not exceeding two (2%) per centum of such tax, until maturity, and without deduction for other taxes, against any of the holders thereof, levied or assessed against principal or interest in either of the States of Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, and after maturity said bonds shall bear interest at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum, payable semi-annually, until paid, and shall each be signed in the corporate name of said company by its president in office at the time, sealed with its corporate seal, and attested by its secretary. No bond shall be secured or entitled to any benefit or lien hereunder unless it bears the signed certificate of said New York Title and Mor

The coupons attached to all definitive bonds issued and to be issued hereunder shall bear the facsimile of the signature of the treasurer of the company, and if not paid when due, shall bear interest thereafter until paid at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum.

Said bonds, coupons, and certificates thereon shall be substantially of the respective forms, numbers, dates of maturity, and denominations above set forth.

Section 2. Any of said bonds signed by the president, or the vice president of grantor, at the time of such signing and any such interest coupons bearing the facsimile signature of the treasurer of the company, shall, notwithstanding any change of officers prior to certification or issue, bind the company and be its valid and lawful obligations, and be secured hereby as if no such change had occurred.

Section 3. Pending the preparation of said permanent bonds the company has executed and delivered to the corporate trustee one temporary bond for the aggregate principal sum of two million five hundred thousand dollars ($2,500,000) substantially of the tenor of said permanent bonds (except for the necessary variations in language respecting said definitive bonds it represents and its exchange and cancellation in manner as aforesaid), with the words of legend printed in red letters one-half inch in height across the face and text thereof, viz: "Construction bond", and also bears a statement that the required U. S. revenue stamps for the amount of said temporary bond have been placed on the trust deed securing it, and canceled. When the corporate trustee shall have certified said temporary bond the same shall be redelivered to the president or treasurer of the company and may be sold and negotiated. Said temporary bond shall be subject to all the terms and provisions hereof and shall be exchangeable without expense to the holder or holders thereof, for the permanent bonds represented thereby above described and designated in the aggregate as permanent bonds numbered from bond numbered 1 to and including bond numbered 5105, when the same are ready and properly certified as aforesaid; and upon such exchange said temporary bond shall be corporate trustee and retained by it until this instrument is discharged and released, whereupon it shall be delivered to the grantor. Until so exchanged and canceled said temporary bond shall be entitled to the same security as said permanent bonds to the same effect as though the same were recited at length herein, and all the terms and conditions therein set forth are fully enforceable hereunder to the same extent as if the same were here recited. The grantor expressly covenants and agrees with the holder or holders of the said temporary bond hereinbefore described, and each successive holder thereof, that it, the said grantor, shall and will execute, seal, and have certified as a have the same signed, sealed, and delivered to the said corporate trustee, within twenty (20) days after the said definitive bonds are ready for execution and certification, for purposes of exchange for said temporary bond as aforesaid within ninety days from the date of the delivery of this instrument as aforesaid, that the holder or holders of said temporary bond and/or the said individual trustee in his discretion or upon request of a holder of said temporary bond may declare the whole amount of the indebtedness secured hereby due and payable with the interest, and the same shall be due and payable with the same effect as if said principal indebtedness or the interest thereon had fallen due on regular maturity according to the tenor hereof and of said temporary bond and of the said definitive bonds as herein provided and a foreclosure hereof had as in other cases of default as herein otherwise provided. The grantor or its agents shall not be responsible for delays caused by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or by any engraver or lithographer in the engraving or lithographing of said permanent bonds and coupons, by reason of labor troubles or other unforeseen casualty which is beyond the control of the grantor and which it could not by any reasonable diligence foresee or avoid, and the ninety days' time aforesaid shall be extended automatically for the length of time of any such delay.

Sectron 4. There shall be kept by the American Bond and Mortgage Company. Inc. at its office in the city of Chicago in the SECTION 4. There shall be kept by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., at its office in the city of Chicago in the State of Illinois, as transfer agent of the company, a register for the registration and transfer of said bonds, in which the transfer agent, on payment of its reasonable charges, will register any such bonds: such registry shall be noted on the bond by the transfer agent and thereafter no transfer thereof shall be valid unless made on said register by the owner in person or by attorney thereunto in writing duly authorized and also noted on the bond, but the same may be discharged from registration by being in like manner transferred to bearer and thereupon transferability by delivery shall be restored, but any such bond may again from time to time be registered or transferred to bearer as before. No such registration shall affect the negotiability of the coupons, which shall always be transferable by delivery merely. The holder of any of said bonds which shall not at the time be registered, and the holder of any coupon, shall be deemed the owners respectively of such bond or coupon, and none of the parties hereto shall be affected by any notice to the contrary. In the event that at any time the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., shall be incapacitated to act as such transfer agent, and registrar, the said American Trust and Safe Deposit Company, the corporate trustee hereunder or its successor then in office, shall be such transfer agent and registrar, with all the rights, powers, and duties as such, as above provided.

Section 5. In case any bond issued hereunder, with the coupons thereto pertaining, shall, prior to the payment thereof, be mutilated, lost, or destroyed a new bond, including coupons, of like tenor and date and bearing the same distinctive number may, at the discretion of the company and the corporate trustee, be executed, certified, and delivered in exchange for and upon cancellation of the mutilated bond and its coupons or in substitution for the bond and coupons trustees, or the one so paying the amount aloresald for the amount so paid, with interest.

Section 5. In case any bond issued hereunder, with the coupons thereto pertaining, shall, prior to the payment thereof, be mutilated, lost, or destroyed a new bond, including coupons, of like tenor and date and bearing the same distinctive number may, at the discretion of the company and the corporate trustee, be executed, certified, and delivered in exchange for and upon cancellation of the mutilated bond and its coupons, or in substitution for the bond and coupons so lost or destroyed, upon receipt of (1) presentment of the mutilated bond and coupons or satisfactory evidence of the loss or destruction of such bond and its coupons; (2) proof of ownership thereof; (3) indemnity satisfactory to American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., the company and the corporate trustee; and (4) payment of cost of preparing said bonds and coupons, or American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or said corporate trustee, as the case may be, may in its discretion, but without obligation so to do, and at the time when the bond or bonds or coupon or coupons so lost, mutilated, or destroyed would by its or their terms be due and payable, pay any bond or coupon which may have been so lost, mutilated, or destroyed upon presentation to it and to the company of like (1) evidence, (2) proof, and (3) indemnity. The corporate trustee and American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., shall incur no liability for anything done by either of them under this section. In the event that American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or said corporate trustee or individual trustee, shall pay any bond or coupon pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section 5, the company shall promptly reimburse said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or the said trustees, or the one so paying the amount aforesaid for the amount so paid, with interest.

Section 6. Each of the bonds and each of the coupons secured by this indenture are or may be issued and delivered, and are intended, to circulate, as negotiable instruments with title thereto to pass by delivery thereof, without any endorsement. No purchaser before maturity of any of said bonds or of said couponshall, as to the title or lien which this indenture creates, be affected by any equities that may at any time exist between the company and the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or the trustee, or any previous holder or owner of such bond, and until grantor, its successors or assigns, shall so pay the same, the amount of any such payment shall bear interest at the rate of 7 percent per annum from its maturity until paid and be secured hereby in the same manner as other unpaid bonds outstanding secured hereby

Section 7. If the time of payment of the principal of any of said bonds or of said coupons shall be extended, by an agreement between the holder thereof and the company or its assigns, to a date later than the stated maturity thereof, then, unless the legal holders of all other of the bonds secured hereby then outstanding shall have consented to such extension by a writing delivered to the individual trustee, the lien and security hereof shall, as to every such bond or coupon, whose time of payment is so extended, be postponed and made subordinate to the lien and security of all the other bonds and coupons then outstanding and unpaid.

ARTICLE II

PAYMENT AND REDEMPTION

SECTION 1. The company hereby covenants and agrees that it will duly and punctually pay or cause to be paid in gold coin of the standard of weight and fineness as now fixed by law of the United States of America, or its equivalent in lawful money of the United States of America, the principal indebtedness of $2,500,000 aforesaid, evidenced and to be evidenced by the bonds issued, certified, and delivered under the provisions hereof, and interest thereon at the rate of six and one-half per centum per annum as it accrues semi-annually, to the respective holders of the bonds and coupons issued hereunder, when due as above specified in the schedule of said bonds and maturities thereof, and that it will pay the interest as it bonds and maturities thereof, and that it will pay the interest as it accrues and becomes due thereon semi-yearly on the fifteenth day of November and of May in each year as aforesaid, together with the normal United States income tax or taxes, not exceeding two per cent in any event, levied or assessed upon said interest against any bondholder as an income taxpayer, when claimed, and all without deduction from principal or interest of certain other taxes and excises as hereinafter specified; and further as an additional security grantor company specifically covenants and agrees to pay, commencing on and continuing after December 1, 1925, certain sums of money monthly to meet and pay said maturing interest in the following manner: in the following manner:

in the following manner:

Beginning on the 1st day of December 1925 and on the first day of each month next immediately succeeding thereafter, until and including May 1, 1937, regardless of the time of presentation or surrender of any bonds or coupons, and as further and additional security, the company agrees to pay to the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., at its office in Chicago, Illinois (or the corporate trustee as hereinafter specified), for the account of the bondholders, a sum of money in gold coin or its equivalent in lawful money, as aforesaid, which shall be equal to one-sixth of the entire aggregate of the semiannual interest accruing during the then current semi-annual period, as evidenced by the coupons maturing at the end of each such semi-annual period respectively. For example, the monthly payments from December 1, 1925, to then current semi-annual period, as evidenced by the coupons maturing at the end of each such semi-annual period respectively. For example, the monthly payments from December 1, 1925, to and including May 1, 1926, shall each be one-sixth of the amount of coupons maturing on May 15, 1926, the monthly payments from and including June 1, 1926, to and including November 1, 1926, shall each be one-sixth of the amount of coupons maturing on November 15, 1926, the payment on account of interest on December 1, 1926, and monthly subsequent thereto, shall be on the basis of the method here outlined.

Beginning on the 1st day of January 1927 and on the first days of February, March, and of April, in the year 1927, and on the first days of each of the first four months, January, February, March, and April, in each year successive thereafter, until and including April 1, 1937, regardless of the time of presentation or surrender of any of said bonds or coupons, the grantor will pay to the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., at its office in Chicago, Illinois, for the account of the bondholders, and as additional security for payment of maturing principal a sum of money in gold coin as aforesaid, which shall be equal to one-fourth of the principal of bonds then next maturing, on May 15th of each of said years from 1927 to 1937, both years inclusive, provided that during the last annual period prior to date of the last maturity, and being the period from May 15, 1936, to May 15, 1937, the said installments to apply on principal shall be the same in amount per month as in the last annual period prior to and ending May 15, 1936.

The intent of the foregoing provisions is as follows:
With respect to interest (as evidenced by coupons), the aggregate amount of such monthly payments shall, before the date of each semi-annual interest payment, be sufficient to meet all of such interest payments or coupons when due and as they mature. With respect to principal (as evidenced by bonds maturing), the aggregate amount of such monthly payments shall, before the first principal payment and also before each next succeeding annual principal payment date (except the principal payment due May 15, 1937), be sufficient to meet each such principal payments (or bonds maturing) when and as they mature on and prior to May 15, 1937, except the principal sum of $1,375,000 due May 15, 1937, as aforesaid. 1937, as aforesaid.

Five days prior to the date of each semi-annual interest payment date the grantor covenants and agrees to pay the said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., at its office in Chicago, Illinois (or the corporate trustee in the events hereinafter named), as and

On November 10, 1925, and on May 10, 1926, respectively, said semi-annual payment shall be an amount equal to two per centum (2%) of the semi-annual interest on all bonds outstanding as represented by coupons due, respectively, November 15, 1925, and May 15, 1926, as and for income taxes on said interest levied by the United States against the holders of the bonds and coupons as aforesaid. Thereafter each such semi-annual payments to meet such income taxes shall be an amount in gold coin or its equivalent as aforesaid equal to the aggregate of the amounts deducted and also paid by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or the corporate trustee as aforesaid to said bondholders claiming such normal income tax or the amounts paid directly by the holders of said bonds and claimed by them in manner hereinafter provided as normal Federal income taxes (not exceeding two per cent of the amount of the interest matured as aforesaid) on income represented by interest on said bonds, or the income on such bonds whose holders pay and claim such income tax or taxes since the last preceding 15th day of May or of November in each year, as the case may be. One year after the payment of all said bonds and coupons and the discharge of this mortgage, any balance of such payments theretofore made to American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or said corporate trustee, with respect to such normal Federal income taxes remaining undistributed or paid to bondholders, pursuant to the provisions hereof, shall be paid to the grantor or to the then owner of the premises, whichever shall have made said payment.

Such examination and search and certificate shall be made by a reputable examiner of titles, lawyer, or title insurance company or public officer having in his custody and control all county, city, or town records where any such liens, conveyances, decrees, judgments, attachments, or other suits are required to be entered under the laws of Florida, at the sole cost and expense of said grantor, and which cost indicates the said specification. at the sole cost and expense of said grantor, and which certificate of search shall state and show that said goods and chattels, mortgaged or to be mortgaged, and covered by said above-mentioned supplemental chattel mortgage or mortgages, as the case may be, are free and clear of any and all such liens and claims of record or other that the statement of the said control of the said c chattel mortgages, conditional sales and conveyances, judgments, attachments, and decrees.

Said grantor covenants and agrees to pay all of the expense of making such chattel mortgages, acknowledging and proving of the same, and the fees for recording or filing the same. Such confirmatory chattel mortgages shall be in confirmation of the lien of this instrument and be construed as a part hereof, and on foreclosure the said individual trustee or bondholders, as aforesaid, may foreclose said supplemental and confirmatory chattel mortgages, either, any, or all of them, with this instrument, and the mortgaged premises herein conveyed in one suit, and the sale of the goods and chattels may be under decree with the real estate, buildings, and improvements as an entirety or separately, as the court may order or as the exigencies of the case may require.

The said grantor, for itself, its successors and assigns, hereby expressly covenants with said individual trustee, his successors and assigns, and with each of the holders of the said bonds and interest coupons secured hereby, that the mortgaged premises hereby conveyed shall never be used at any time for gaming or gambling purposes of any kind or nature whatsoever, and if said grantor, its successors or assigns, shall violate this covenant or in any way break the same, the said individual trustee may thereupon declare all of the indebtedness secured hereby then due and pay-able and have foreclosure hereof at once, anything in this deed or instrument otherwise to the contrary notwithstanding.

Section 2. The company further covenants that it will not at any time suffer any statutory or mechanics' liens for work, labor, or materials done, performed, or furnished in or about the erection of any buildings or improvements or repairs or alteration thereof now or hereafter on the said mortgaged lands, to be established against said premises buildings and improvements. established against said premises, buildings, and improvements, or goods and chattels therein, or any part thereof; that it will pay all taxes and assessments, extraordinary as well as ordinary, pay all taxes and assessments, extraordinary as well as ordinary, water rents, municipal, governmental, and other rates, charges, and impositions which shall at any time be or have been assessed, levied, or imposed upon the above-described lands, buildings, and improvements thereon, and all goods and chattels therein or upon the grantor, arising from any interest it has or may have in said mortgaged premises, buildings, improvements, and personal property, or any interest, estate, or title in said mortgaged property of the said individual trustee and his successors, and will make such payments, respectively, from time to time in each year after the same shall become, respectively, due and payable or become a lien on the mortgaged premises and property, in due time to prevent any delinquency thereof or any forfeiture or sale thereof and at all events covenants and agrees to pay any and all general taxes levied on all of said property forfeiture or sale thereof and at all events covenants and agrees to pay any and all general taxes levied on all of said property on or before April 1st in each year, and any and all special assessments or installments thereof levied on said mortgaged property, due in each year hereafter on or before April 1st in each year, and will produce and deliver to the individual trustee at his office in Chicago, Illinois, receipts therefor or other satisfactory evdence of each such payment within ten days thereafter and on or before the dates aforesaid.

The grantor further covenants and agrees that it will not suffer either the mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, or any interest or estate therein created hereby or hereunder to be sold for any taxes or assessments whatsoever, nor do, nor permit to be done to, in, upon, or about said premises, or any part thereof, anything that may in anywise impair the value thereof or weaken, diminish, or impair the security intended to be given under and by virtue of or impair the security intended to be given under and by virtue of this indenture.

The grantor further covenants and agrees that it will pay all income taxes, assessments, or charges levied or payable upon its income under any law of the United States of America which it or said individual trustee may be required to pay on the income yielded from its said property and preserve said estate and property from all liens thereof.

The grantor further covenants and agrees that it will pay all normal United States income taxes, assessments, or charges which the grantor, or either of the trustees herein named, or the said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., may be required to pay on the interest and income yielded by said bonds, or to deduct or retain therefrom under or by reason of any present or future law or laws of the United States, but not exceeding two per centum of such interest, and the grantor agrees to pay to the corporate trustee or the individual trustee or American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., a sum equivalent to the amount of said taxes, assessments, and charges so required to be deducted and any part of such taxes, and charges so required to be deducted and any part of such taxes, assessments, and charges which the bondholders may have to pay directly on account of the income represented by the interest on the bonds secured hereby, to be reimbursed and paid to the holder as provided in this indenture; but the liability of the grantor to or for account of any bondholder for such normal United States income taxes, assessments, and charges for any one year shall not exceed two per cent of any such annual interest and income on the bonds held by him and accruing thereon.

In case the corporate trustee or the American Bond and Mort In case the corporate trustee or the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or a bondholder pays or is required to pay directly any such normal Federal income tax, assessment, or charge which the grantor has herein covenanted and agreed to pay, said trustee and/or the bondholder shall be entitled to reimbursement therefor under the foregoing covenants only upon written application made to the corporate trustee or American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., which application shall set forth the numbers or principal amounts of bonds on which the interest or income has been so taxed, the date when such taxes were imposed and that the taxes were assessed upon or are assessable against the applicant-bondholder. The corporate trustee or American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., shall thereupon make reimbursement to the bondholder or pay said taxes to the United States of America for each such bondholder who is such income taxpayer, from and out of the funds deposited with it by income taxpayer, from and out of the funds deposited with it by income taxpayer, from and out of the funds deposited with it by the grantor for such purpose (if grantor has any such moneys on deposit) and shall be fully protected in so doing; and if the corporate trustee or American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., have not funds sufficient for such purpose when the application for reimbursement is so made, the grantor covenants to pay the funds forthwith required for such reimbursement. And it is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall be construed to be a requirement that said American Bond and Mortgage. to be a requirement that said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., shall give or disclose or be required to give or dis-Company, Inc., shall give or disclose or be required to give or disclose to the grantor or to the corporate trustee the names or addresses of any such bondholders. Unless such request for such income tax shall be made within sixty days after all of such income tax shall become finally due and payable by such bondholder, there shall be no liability to reimburse the bondholder for such past accrued income tax, and in no event shall there be any liability to make reimbursement for any interest or penalty assessed to or paid by the bondholder in addition to the amount of such taxes originally assessed.

Nothing in this indenture contained shall require the grantor to pay any tax, assessment, impost, charge, claim, demand, or lien whatsoever assessed or imposed against the land or buildings and whatsoever assessed of imposed against the land of buildings and personal property covered by this deed of trust or any interest or estate therein created by this trust deed by any governmental agency or agencies so long as it shall in good faith and by appropriate legal proceedings contest the validity thereof if the grantor shall deposit with said individual trustee or county collector (treasurer) of said Palm Beach County, State of Florida, or other proper public official whose duty it is to collect any such tax, assessment, excise, or charge, an amount of money sufficient to discharge such excise, or charge, an amount of money sufficient to discharge such tax, assessment, impost, charge, claim, or lien in full, including costs and interest, to be used by the individual trustee, or collector, or other public official, as the case may be, for the purpose of discharging the same in the event that the grantor shall be unsuccessful in said contest. In lieu of depositing such cash the grantor shall also have the right to give to the individual trustee a bond, with a surety or other security satisfactory to him, in such reasonable sum as will in the judgment of the individual trustee be sufficient for the purpose, conditioned to pay such contested charge or lien in full, including costs and interest, in case the grantor, if it shall be unsuccessful in said contest, shall not forthwith discharge such tax charge or lien in full. such tax charge or lien in full.

The said grantor hereby expressly covenants and agrees with the said trustee, for the use, benefit, and security of each and all of the bondholders and coupon holders secured hereby, that upon the filing of any notice by any person, firm, or corporation claiming a statutory lien upon said premises or any part thereof, or any improvements thereon, or any goods and chattels located or to be located therein, for any materials furnished or delivered thereat or thereupon or therein, or for any work or labor done and performed in and about the making of any repairs, alterations, or the erection and construction of any buildings and improvements upon said mortraged premises or any part thereof, or any mathe erection and construction of any buildings and improvements upon said mortgaged premises or any part thereof, or any materials furnished for or any work and labor done and performed in and about the fabrication or installation of any of the said goods and chattels to be located and placed within said buildings upon said mortgaged premises, or any part thereof, or if suit shall be commenced for the enforcement of any such claim or lien upon said premises or buildings, improvements, goods and chattels, it shall and will at once bond off any such lien by filing a bond in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of Palm Beach County, Fforida, or elsewhere and otherwise as shall or may be required by the laws of the State of Florida now or at the time hereafter by giving and filing a bond or bonds with such good and sufficient securities or sureties to be approved and payable to the person claiming a lien in such sum and upon such conditions as is now or which shall hereafter be enacted and provided by the laws of the State of Florida, and thereby effectually have said lien of such mechanic, upholsterer, manufacturer, laborer, workman, architect, contractor, sub-contractor, or materialman removed man, architect, contractor, sub-contractor, or materialman removed and released, and the said mortgaged premises, buildings, and improvements or the said goods and chattels, as the case may be, released and discharged from any, every, and all of such lien or liens, claim or claims; and that if the said grantor shall neglect or shall refuse to so bond off and release said premises, buildings and improvements, goods and chattels from any such statutory lien and claim and the same shall continue for sixty days after the filing of any such notice or the commencement of any such and improvements, goods and chattels from any such statutory lien and claim and the same shall continue for sixty days after the filing of any such notice or the commencement of any such suit to enforce such lien, such neglect and refusal shall constitute default hereunder, and then and thereupon, anything in this deed to the contrary notwithstanding hereinbefore or hereinafter written, said individual trustee may declare the whole of the indebtedness and bonds outstanding and secured hereby due and payable and have foreclosure hereof, or in lieu thereof, said individual trustee may order and direct the American Bond & Mortgage Co., Inc., to pay and discharge any such lien and claim and have the same released from and out of any mortgage funds secured hereby and not then expended or paid out hereunder, and in such case the said individual trustee shall be under no duty or obligation to inquire into the validity of any such claim or notice, and if such payment shall be made by him or through his direction and order as aforesaid, the same shall be good and valid and binding upon the grantor, its successors, and assigns.

Section 3. The grantor covenants and agrees with the said individual trustee and the owners and holders of the said temporary and/or said permanent or definitive bonds that it is making this mortgage and deed of trust and borrowing the money herein specified for the purpose, in part, of paying off and discharging a prior purchase money mortgage upon the Whitehall property first above described in said county and State, and that said mortgage indebtedness amounts to $350,000 and interest, and the said grantor hereby directs the said individual trustee, American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or the holder or holders of said temporary bond or the said definitive bonds, to pay off and discharge said purchase money mortgage and obtain a release and discharge said purchase money mortgage and encumbrance; and upon and in the event of the making of such payment and advance from the mortgage funds secu gage and encumbrance; and upon and in the event of the making of such payment and advance from the mortgage funds secured hereby, said individual trustee and the holder or holders of said temporary bond, and thereafter each and every of the said permanent or definitive bonds shall be subrogated to the mortgage lien temporary bond, and thereatter each and every of the said permanent or definitive bonds shall be subrogated to the mortgage lien and title of the mortgagee, Louise Wise Lewis, or her assigns, to the lien and title of said purchase money mortgage and the amount thereof and interest and costs and expenses of releasing and discharging the same, and which mortgage is dated September 30, 1924, and recorded on or about February 12, 1925, in Book 91 of Mortgages, page 395, in the office of the clerk of the circuit court as recorder of deeds of Palm Beach County, State of Florida, and which said prior purchase money mortgage shall be released and discharged at the time of the payment of said money from said mortgage funds secured hereby.

Section 4. The company for itself, its successors, and assigns covenants and agrees that without the consent of the trustee it and they will not hereafter apply for any deduction by reason of any mortgage from the taxable value of the lands embraced in this indenture and will not claim any credit on principal or interest on said bonds on account of the payment of any taxes upon said land, and in case of any such deduction or claim said trustee or the company shall have the option either to pay or contest the payment of said taxes, in which event the amount so voluntarily paid by the trustee or which he may be ultimately obliged to pay after contest, shall forthwith become a first lien hereaved in favor of the trustee upon said mortgaged premises obliged to pay after contest, shall forthwith become a first lien hereunder in favor of the trustee upon said mortgaged premises paramount to all liens thereon, and the company covenants and agrees to reimburse and repay to the trustee upon demand the amount so paid by him.

amount so paid by him.

Section 5. At all times until the payment of all the bonds issued hereunder, principal and interest, the grantor and any subsequent grantee of the premises shall maintain an office in Palm Beach County, State of Florida, where notices or demands in respect to such bonds or coupons or this indenture may be served, and from time to time the grantor and such subsequent grantee will give written notice to either of the trustees hereunder and the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., of the location of such office. All notices and demands by either of the trustees or the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., hereunder shall be deemed to Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., hereunder shall be deemed to be duly given, if either delivered personally to an officer or director of the grantor or any subsequent grantee of the premises, or deposited in any general or branch post office, letter-box, or mail chute, enclosed in a registered post-paid envelope, addressed to the grantor, or to a subsequent grantee of the above-described premises, at the last address furnished to said trustees or the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., and if no such address has been furnished, by mailing such notice or demand to anyone in possession of the mortgaged premises at the premises.

Section 6. The grantor covenants that it will not execute or deliver any absolute conveyance of the above premises divesting itself of all title thereto, prior to the time when said grantor shall have completed all building operations covenanted to be performed hereunder, and shall have procured the furniture and furnishings for said hotel buildings free and clear of all statutory or mechanic's liens, and its goods and chattels in said hotel buildings hereafter acquired subjected to a chattel mortgage duly executed, proven, acknowledged, and recorded as herein otherwise provided; any such absolute conveyance, if made at any time, shall always be made subject to this mortgage lien and for the full amount of the indebtedness at such time, unpaid and secured hereby; and the grantor further expressly covenants not to place upon the premises, buildings and property herein described at any time, any other lien or encumbrance, whether the same be a second or other junior mortgage, a deed of trust, lease, or other lien, unless there shall be inserted in the instrument of mortgage or lease creating such lien and in each of the notes, bonds, or other evidences of the indebtedness or other consideration to be secured by any such mortgage a covenant and condition that any such mortgage conveyance or lease and the lien, title, and security created by any such instrument is and shall at all times be subject, junior, sub-ordinate, and subservient to the lien, title, and security created by this first mortgage or deed of trust for the full amount of said principal indebtedness and interest above specified and secured hereby, and without regard to the maturity, time of delivery, negotiation of the bonds secured hereby, or the time when the grantor shall or may receive the proceeds or other consideration of each and all of scid first mortgage bonds secured hereby and above described or the proceeds of any and each such junior mortgage or of the bonds, notes, or other evidences of the debt secured thereby or the consideration of any mortgage conveyance or lease. No junior mortgage shall at any time be made by grantor of the goods and chattels of grantor covered or to be covered hereby and by supplemental chattel mortgages as herein provided. Any breach of any of the foregoing covenants

ARTICLE IV

ERECTION AND MAINTENANCE OF BUILDINGS

Section 1. The grantor covenants and hereby contracts and agrees with said trustee and bondholders that it will forthwith proceed with reasonable dispatch and by continuous operation to erect and complete, free of all statutory or mechanic's liens, ready for occupancy on said premises on or before December 15, 1925, the remodeling and alterations of the present Whitehall building and basement or basements and the erection of a new ten-story fireproof hotel and basement adjacent thereto, and employees' building, with all equipment, furniture and furnishings, for use as a hotel, upon the parcels of land respectively above described and conveyed hereby; said buildings and improvements shall be constructed and erected substantially in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by Martin L. Hampton, architect, and E. A. Ehmann, associate architect, or such other architect or architects as shall be employed by and with the consent of the said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or of said individual trustee, and in accordance with such additional or amended plans, details, and specifications as may be from time to time approved by the individual trustee and American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., and grantor, and also submitted to and deposited with and approved by the 'awful department, bureau, or governmental office, bureau, or board having jurisdiction of such matters under any law or statute of Florida, and any ordinance, law, or regulation of the said municipality of Palm Beach, State of Florida.

Any delays in time of completion of said building caused by insurrection, riots, strikes, storms, fire, act of God, or any unavoidable shortage of materials or labor, or unusual causes beyond the control of the grantor company, and which by the exercise of reasonable prudence, diligence, and foresight it could not have avoided, shall be added to the time specified above for completion of said building and the date of completion extended or postponed for the length of each such delay, if any; said trustee shall have power to extend such time for any reasonable further period fixed by him, but shall not be obligated so to do except as aforesaid.

Section 2. The grantor expressly covenants to fully pay for said building and all bills or claims contracted or incurred in connection with the erection and construction and equipment thereof, free of all liens under the statutes of Florida for work, labor, and materials done or performed or used in making said improvements on said land conveyed hereby; and expressly covenants that all such liens are hereby waived and expressly hereby released, and binding upon it, its architect, contractors, sub-contractors, materialmen, workmen, and laborers.

If the grantor shall for any reason abandon or unreasonably delay the construction of said building or the equipment thereof, and shall not continuously proceed with such construction with all of the diligence that the same is reasonably susceptible of until the said building is completed and ready for occupancy and use, or shall fail to complete the same, or shall be prevented from completing the same by any cause whatsoever, the individual trustee, at his election (but without prejudice to any other right of the trustee or the bondholders arising in consequence of such default), may declare default hereunder, after giving grantor 30 days' previous notice, and may foreclose as in case of other defaults as herein specified, and may in such case have a receiver appointed; and for the purpose of completing said building and the equipment thereof, the receiver may, in such event, under proper orders of the court, go into and have possession of said premises and make any and all necessary contracts for architects, contractors, construction work, and for work, labor or materials, supplies, and equipment in connection therewith in the name of the grantor, and may sign the name of the grantor as its receiver or otherwise, as the court may direct, to any and all papers and documents necessary for such purpose. The receiver may in such event pay, at any time, any outstanding just bills or liability or indebtedness so contracted or incurred by the grantor or by the receiver in the grantor's behalf, and may make up any defict in connection with the construction and erection of said building and the equipment thereof, and may pay any bills or indebtedness contracted by the receiver in connection with any such contracts, or in connection with any liability incurred by the said receiver, as aforesaid, regardless of whether or not any mechanic's lien claims have been filed or established in any of the foregoing instances. The grantor hereby expressly agrees to repay to the individual trustee or said receiver on demand any sums advanced in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and to reimburse them and each of them for and on account of any payment or payments made by reason of or pursuant to the foregoing provisions, and any and all sums advanced by the trustee or by any bondholder hereunder shall be deemed a charge and lien on said premises, as provided in article VI hereof, and the same may be paid to said individual trustee from the proceeds of the sale of said bonds, and, if not so paid, shall be secured hereby as a prior lien and claim hereunder.

Section 3. The grantor expressly covenants that it will forthwith bond off and dissolve or otherwise pay, discharge, and clear off and remove any mechanics' liens which may be filed or noticed as a lien or charge against said premises under the laws of Florida, and in default thereof the trustee may forthwith in its sole discretion clear off and discharge such liens or claims, and shall have a prior lien or liens against the property above described hereunder and the claims against the grantor therefor as is herein otherwise specified.

Section 4. The grantor covenants to maintain, at all times, each of said premises, and the buildings erected and to be erected thereon, including the furniture, furnishings, and contents thereof, in good first-class repair, working order, and condition, and to make all necessary replacements and substitutions, to the satisfaction and approval of the individual trustee, all building, fire, and other similar departments of Palm Beach, village or city, the county of Palm Beach and of the State of Florida and Federal Government, all insurance companies, the Board of Underwriters of the State of Florida, and all other similar organizations having any interest in or jurisdiction over the same; and the said grantor further expressly covenants to make and fully pay for all repairs and in nowise to commit waste upon, in, or about said mortgaged premises, so long as any indebtedness secured hereby remains unpaid.

eral Government, all insurance companies, the Board of Underwriters of the State of Florida, and all other similar organizations having any interest in or jurisdiction over the same; and the said grantor further expressly covenants to make and fully pay for all repairs and in nowise to commit waste upon, in, or about said mortgaged premises, so long as any indebtedness secured hereby remains unpaid.

Section 5. The grantor covenants that it will comply with all laws, ordinances, acts, rules, regulations, and orders of any National, State, county, and city legislative, executive, administrative, or judicial body, commission, or officer exercising any power of regulation or supervision over the grantor, the said buildings, and structures erected and to be erected as herein provided, or any part of said mortgaged premises, whether the same be directed to the conduct of the business of the grantor, the erection of said buildings herein specified, the repairs thereof, manner of use, structural alterations, or otherwise; provided, however, that the grantor may contest any such law, ordinance, act, rule, regulation, or order in any reasonable manner which will not affect the title of the individual trustee to any part of the mortgaged estate, the conduct of the company's business, or the maintenance of that high standard of physical condition which is hereinbefore set forth. The grantor further agrees that until all of the indebtedness and interest secured hereby shall be paid and discharged, it will, at all times, maintain its corporate organization, and that it will not permit or suffer any use or nonuse of its corporate authority and franchises whereby said corporate authority and franchises may become in anywise forfeitable or forfeited, and that it will not (without the consent of either the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or of said individual trustee) convey said premises and the buildings and improvements now and hereafter to be placed thereon as herein provided, until said buildings and the furnitur to title of and under this indenture or the lien hereof, and in any event shall be made and be subject and junior to this trust deed. Section 6. The said grantor hereby covenants and agrees with the individual trustee and each of the holders of the bonds and coupons secured hereby, that the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., whose post office address is 127 North Dearborn Street, in the city of Chicago, Illinois, a broker engaged in the sale of first mortgage securities, has been heretofore and is hereby irrevocably appointed as the exclusive agent and broker of the said grantor, and with its irrevocable consent, authority and power to act for and on behalf of the holders of said bonds and interest coupons to whom the said broker shall or may sell and dispose of the same, and that it has and does hereby also irrevocably appoint and authorize the said broker to do and perform any acts and things herein specified respecting the erection and construction of said building and improvements and the procuring and installation of the furniture and furnishings therein, and to decide the various questions and pass upon the various matters in relation and behalf of the erection and construction of said buildings, and the removal of any and all liens or notices thereof by workmen, architects, contractors, sub-contractors, and/or materialmen, lodged or claimed against the mortgaged property herein described or any part thereof.

ARTICLE V INSURANCE

Section 1. As a further and additional security for the payment of all of the principal indebtedness, interest to accrue thereon as evidenced by the interest coupons, and provisions of the bonds and coupons aforesaid, and any advances made as herein authorized and provided, or as may be authorized by law, the grantor, company, hereby covenants and agrees with said trustee and its respective successors in trust and the holders of the bonds and interest coupons secured hereby, to keep said premises and parts thereof, all the furniture and fixtures, and its rents or income therefrom well, lawfully, and adequately insured by lawfully authorized and responsible insurance companies authorized by and under the laws of the State of Florida, or by or under the laws of any other State or county, to write insurance upon the insurable mortgaged property herein described, or by companies which may be approved by a responsible board of underwriters of the State of Florida, with loss, if any accruing, payable to the said individual trustee and his successors in trust as his or their interest may appear, and further covenants and agrees to pay all of the cost thereof of each and all of the several classes of such insurance to be procured, kept, and maintained until all of said indebtedness and interest is paid, in the following manner, that is to say:

(a) Said grantor covenants and agrees to keep all of the buildings and structures and equipment on the premises conveyed hereby, inclusive of the foundations and one foot below each basement or sub-basement floor, insured against loss or damage by fire and/or lightning for not less than 30 percent of the full insurable value thereof, subject to the provision that the aggregate amount of any such fire insurance shall at any and all times be equal to the aggregate amount of $2.250,000, or to said 80 percent of the full insurable value, whichever may at the time be the highest aggregate amount; and also will keep all of the furniture, furnishings, and fixtures in the hotel building, annex, and servants' quarters insured against loss or damage by fire for one hundred percent of the insurable value thereof, with loss payable to the trustee as aforesaid.

(b) Also further covenants and agrees to procure rent and occupancy insurance or/and cover and insure at least eighty (80%) per centum of the rental value of said hotel buildings and premises and which shall be for an amount of accruing rents or income value of said entire hotel buildings and premises of not less, at any time, than a sum equal to the annual interest on all of the outstanding unpaid and unredeemed principal indebtedness for twelve months and $125,000 in addition thereto, and that such rent or occupancy insurance shall be for a loss period of not less than twelve months.

(c) Also covenants and agrees to procure tornado, hurricane, or wind insurance of such an amount not exceeding $100,000 from time to time as shall be requested, ordered, or directed by the said individual trustee; if the said trustee shall not require or direct such tornado, hurricane, or wind insurance, he shall not suffer any liability whatever for not so requesting, ordering, or directing the carrying or procuring of such insurance.

(d) Grantor also will carry and procure plate glass insurance of such amount and at such times as the individual trustee may require it, and also the grantor will carry and procure what is commonly called boiler or explosion insurance and shall insure against loss or damage by riot or civil commotion, and insurance against failure of any sprinkler system to operate, of such an amount and at such time or times as shall be requested, ordered, and directed by the individual trustee; the said trustee shall incur no liability whatever if he shall not so request the carrying and procuring of any such insurance mentioned in this sub-clause;

any such insurance mentioned in this sub-clause;

(e) All of said policies of insurance agreed to be procured by the grantor above specified in sub-clauses "a", "b", "c", and "d" shall be deposited with, kept, and held by the said individual trustee or his successor in trust for the equal security and benefit of the holders of the bonds and coupons as aforesaid; all fire and rent or occupancy insurance hereunder shall be for periods of five years, inclusive of renewals thereof;

sive of renewals thereof;

(f) The said grantor further covenants and agrees to at all times procure and keep in force and effect with the premiums paid liability insurance covering all loss or damage that may accrue generally to its employees in the operation of the elevators therein, the machinery, equipment, and appliances therein, or otherwise, and/or as may accrue under the Workmen's Compensation Act of the State of Florida, so-called, or any other act or amendments thereto; and also liability insurance against any damages resulting to the public in and about the operation of the said hotel and buildings and any of the elevators or equipment and machinery installed and used therein; said liability insurance shall not be payable to the said individual trustee, but the grantor covenants and agrees to exhibit the policies to the said individual trustee at any and all reasonable times on request that he may determine the performance by the grantor of its covenants in this sub-clause contained;

(g) The company expressly covenants and agrees that all of the insurance of each class required hereunder (excepting the insurance covering public liability, employers' liability, and liability under workmen's compensation acts of Florida, which the grantor itself shall procure) shall be placed, procured, and renewed, for five-year periods, by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., in Chicago, Illinois, or New York City, New York, as the agent of the company; said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., for said purpose, is hereby expressly made and constituted and appointed, irrevocably, the agent of the company, its successors and assigns, to procure and renew all of said insurance above provided to be procured, kept, and maintained by the said grantor, until the payment and discharge of all of the indebtedness secured hereby; said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., as compensation for its services for placing such insurance, shall be entitled to any discount from and/or any commission upon regular board rates obtained by it, and the company covenants and agrees to pay on demand the cost of such insurance, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, shall be so much additional indebtedness secured by this mortgage or deed of trust. All insurance policies and renewals thereof shall be delivered to the individual trustee and kept by him until a discharge of said indebtedness and interest and reconveyance made. The company covenants to pay all premiums on said insurance policies procured or renewed by said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., upon presentation to it of the statements of the amounts thereof at regular board rates as aforesaid by said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., upon presentation to it of the statements of the amounts thereof at regular board rates as aforesaid by said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., upon presentation to it of the statements of the amounts thereof at regular board rates as aforesaid by said American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., upon presentation to it of the statements of the amounts thereof at regular board rates as aforesaid by said American Bond and Mortgage Company.

In case of the company's failure to pay any premiums or cost of said insurance the individual trustee or the holder of any bonds or the holder of any interest coupons, outstanding, unpaid, and secured hereby may do so (but are, and shall not be, obligated so to do) and all moneys so paid by the said trustee or any bondholder or interest coupon holder with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum from the time of each advance shall become so much additional indebtedness secured hereby, and be at once due and payable, which advance payments, when and as they may be made, shall be secured hereby and by a lien hereunder upon said premises prior to the indebtedness evidenced by the bonds and coupons.

Section 2. If any of the mortgaged property shall be destroyed or damaged at any time by fire, or other cause whatsoever, the grantor company covenants forthwith to repair, rebuild, restore, renew, and replace the same and to pay the cost thereof. The individual trustee shall collect and receipt for all moneys adjudged due or payable under said policy or policies of insurance and any moneys due thereunder shall be paid to the said trustee. When the probable cost or expenses of such repairing, rebuilding, restoring, renewing, or replacing has been estimated by the sworn statement of an architect or general contractor, to be selected by the said individual trustee, the company hereby expressly agrees to deposit with the said trustee the difference, if any, between such estimate and the net amount of the insurance available for the same. In the event that the company, in case of damage to said building or the destruction thereof, shall with reasonable dispatch repair, rebuild, restore, renew, and replace the same or construct, equip, and furnish a new building on said mortgaged premises in place thereof, of the size, capacity, and actual value of the building and all improvements to be erected and constructed hereunder, and according to plans and specifications approved by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., and said trustee, and the company having first deposited with the trustee the aforesaid difference, then in such case, but not otherwise, all insurance moneys which shall be received by the trustee under said policies covering said building, equipment, and furnishings and such additional deposit, if any, shall (after the deduction therefrom of the reasonable charges of the trustee in connection with the collection and disbursement of said bonds and coupons or any of them) be paid out from time to time as the work progresses upon architect's certificates for the expense of such repairing, rebuilding, restoring, renewing, or replacing of said building and equipment, but an amount of money shall at all

In the event that any such loss shall exceed ten thousand dollars ($10,000) the company shall submit to the said individual trustee plans and specifications to be subject to the approval of the said trustee, and shall exhibit to him any contract or contracts for such work or for the supplying of any such materials. The trustee may obtain from any disinterested architect or contractor an estimate of the cost of such repairing, rebuilding, restoring, renewing, or replacing, and the cost of obtaining such estimate may be deducted from the amount of such insurance.

In the event of the total destruction of the building, or in the event of a loss requiring substantially the reconstruction of the entire building, or part or parts thereof erected at time of such destruction, loss, or damage, the company shall forthwith and by continuous operation proceed to erect or complete and equip and furnish a new building on said premises of equal or greater cost and value and of equal or greater income value and to be substantially similar to the building so damaged or destroyed and the said new building and equipment shall be erected and constructed substantially, according to the present plans and specifications, or according to such other plans and specifications as the said individual trustee and the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., in their absolute discretion may approve. If it shall appear at any time that said insurance moneys are not sufficient to pay at any time that said insurance moneys are not suincient to pay for the completion and erection, equipment and furnishings, of said building, in accordance with the plans and specifications approved by the trustee and the American Bond and Mortgage Company, inc., the company shall on demand deposit such shortage or deficit with the trustee, or the company may deliver to the trustee a good and sufficient bond with surety company or com-panies as surety or sureties satisfactory to the trustee and in a trustee a good and sufficient bond with surety company or companies as surety or sureties satisfactory to the trustee and in a form and amount satisfactory to the trustee, conditioned that the company shall and will within twelve (12) months after the happening of such last-mentioned damage or destruction of such building erect and complete and equip such new building in accordance with said plans and specifications, free from all claims for mechanics' liens. Upon receipt of such shortage or deficit or upon being furnished with the said bond, the trustee shall disburse said insurance moneys and such additional deposit, if any, as aforesaid, but not otherwise. In computing the twelve months' period aforesaid for the erection and equipment of such new building on said premises, or any subsequent new building, any delay caused by insurrection, riots, strikes, storms, fire, the act of God, or an unavoidable shortage of materials or labor, or unusual or unavoidable delays in transportation of materials, or other causes beyond the control of the company, and which by the exercise of reasonable prudence, diligence, and foresight it could not have avoided, shall be added to the time allowed, and the date of completion extended or postponed for the length of such delays; or said trustee shall have power to extend such time for any reasonable period, but shall not be obligated so to do except as aforesaid. After the completion of said building, as aforesaid, free from liens, as aforesaid, the proceeds from any and all fire-insurance

After the completion of said building, as aforesaid, free from liens, as aforesaid, the proceeds from any and all fire-insurance policies covering or representing the mortgaged property, damaged as aforesaid, and any such additional deposit, if any, shall be disbursed by the trustee upon the order of the company and upon its filing with said trustee written waivers of lien signed and proven satisfactory to said trustee, from contractors, subcontractors, materialmen, laborers, and architects, toward the payment of the cost of the construction of said building and the equipment of said building with suitable apparatus, and equipment of at least equal quality to the same to be originally placed in said building, as well as other costs of construction in manner in said building, as well as other costs of construction in manner aforesaid.

SECTION 3. In the event that the company fails to commence forthwith to repair, renew, restore, rebuild, or replace the building, and mortgaged property as provided in the last section, then the trustee, in his absolute discretion, is hereby authorized (but not required) and without prejudice to any other right or remedy hereunder, in the name of the company, or otherwise, to do such hereunder, in the name of the company, or otherwise, to do such repairing, rebuilding, restoring, renewing, or replacing, and to have all insurance moneys, together with the moneys representing the difference, if any, heretofore provided in said last section, applied toward the cost thereof, and to do all other needful things so as to preserve the security hereof and in such event and for such purpose the interest of the company in all insurance moneys herein referred to shall be, by virtue hereof, assigned and transferred to said trustee.

The trustee, upon default of grantor as provided in the above and first paragraph of this section, may elect to proceed with such work before said difference is deposited with him, and in such event the company agrees to pay to the trustee on demand the difference between the aggregate of all insurance moneys collected by the trustee, less deductions therefrom herein authorized, and the total cost of such repairing, rebuilding, restoring, repearing or replacting. renewing, or replacing.

Any and all balances remaining undisbursed by the trustee after

Any and an balances remaining undisbursed by the trustee after the complete repairing, rebuilding, restoring, renewing, and re-placing of said building as aforesaid, provided the company is not in default in any of the terms, conditions, and provisions of this trust deed, and if in default, any amount in excess of the sum necessary to make good any and all defaults, shall be paid over to

In the event that the company shall fail to rebuild or repair or equip and furnish the said building so damaged or destroyed by fire or other casualty as aforesaid after the happening of such damage or destruction in accordance with the terms and conditions in this trust deed contained, and shall be in default for such failure, then in such event said trustee shall have, and he hereby is given the right to apply any and all proceeds of insurance policies or additional deposit which may at such time be in his hands, or under his control to the repayment (1) of any and all sums of money which may theretofore have been advanced by said trustee or any bondholder, and shall not prior thereto have been repaid to such trustee or bondholder, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum from the time of the advancement until the repayment thereof in full; and shall (2) next apply the same as far as the same shall reach, to time of the advancement until the repayment thereof in full; and shall (2) next apply the same as far as the same shall reach, to the payment of pro rata principal and accrued interest of all bonds secured by this instrument; (3) and the balance, if any, after the payment of all indebtedness and interest and the moneys due the trustee for his fees, expenses, or otherwise hereunder and secured hereby shall be paid to the company. In the event that the said funds shall not be sufficient to pay in full all matured principal and interest and other moneys as hereinabove and hereafter provided to be paid, then and in such event said company shall forthwith pay over the deficiency in connection therewith to the trustee to be applied as last hereinbefore provided.

Section 4. The company further covenants and agrees to procure and pay the cost thereof, rent, or occupancy insurance as above provided in section 1 of this article. Said policies for said rent or occupancy insurance shall be made payable to the said individual trustee as his interest shall appear, and be deposited with him as other insurance hereinbefore provided. In case of a loss occurring under any of said rent-insurance policies, all of the insurance money thereon accrued shall be paid to and deposited with the said trustee. If the company shall not then be in default, it shall have the right to direct the said individual trustee to pay and disburse the said moneys for the payment and discharge of (a) taxes; (b) insurance, premiums, and costs; (c) necessary monthly and semi-annual payments herein otherwise provided to the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or said corporate trustee, to meet accruing or accrued interest upon the outstanding and unpaid principal indebtedness secured hereby and the payment of the principal of any of the bonds secured hereby as they respectively mature on any annual payment date as herein otherwise provided. Any balance after making the foregoing named payments shall be held and reserved to pay building and reconstruction costs if the same have not been paid and made by the grantor; and whenever all of the foregoing named payments have been made from out of said rent insurance so received and held by the individual trustee and the said grantor company is not in been made from out of said rent insurance so received and held by the individual trustee and the said grantor company is not in anywise in default and the said building has been reconstructed, renewed, repaired, and placed in the condition it was in before any such fire, damage, or loss, the said balance of said rent insurance such fire, damage, or loss, the said balance of said rent insurance shall be paid unto the grantor. SECTION 3. At any such sale any bondholders or coupon holders or any committee or trustee appointed by them or a part of them, or the individual trustee or any successor in trust herein named may bid for and purchase said mortgaged premises or any part thereof. The purchaser, as an express right hereby irrevocably given and granted, at any such sale shall be entitled in making given and granted, at any such sale shall be entitled in making settlement or payment for the property purchased, at any sale thereof to use and apply any bonds and any matured and unpaid coupons hereby secured, in payment of the bid, or purchase price, by presenting such bonds and/or coupons in order that there may be credited thereon the sum apportionable and applicable to the payment thereof, out of the net proceeds of such sale; and thereupon such purchaser shall be credited on account of such purchase price payable by him, with the sum apportionable and applicable out of such net proceeds to the payment of the bonds and coupons so presented: Provided, however, That in all cases the purchaser or purchasers shall pay in money a sufficient sum to cover the items referred to in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of section 2 of this article. No purchaser at any such sale shall be bound to see to the application of the purchase money or to inquire as to the authorization, necessity, expediency, or regularity of any such sale. Any such sale shall operate to divest all right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever, either in law or in equity, such sale. Any such sale shall operate to divest all right, tittle, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever, either in law or in equity, of the company, its successors, and assigns, and of any person claiming through or under them, in and to the property so sold, and every part thereof, except as provided by law. Should the individual trustee become the purchaser at such sale, the following rights, privileges, and obligations shall thereupon be credited, result and obtain: (a) All the bondholders shall contribute and pay the trustee their respective and proportionate share (in proportion to the amount of unpaid bonds and matured coupons owned by them respectively) of the total of the items referred to in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of section 2 of this article, for which contribution and payment they shall be respectively liable as for money paid by the trustee at their request and in default of such contribution and payment, and as a cumulative and, not an alternative right, the trustee shall have a lien therefor upon the interest of such defaulting bondholders in said premises or in the proceeds received by the trustee upon any subsequent sale thereof; (b) the trustee may forthwith or at any time thereafter sell and convey said premises as a whole or in such parts and parcels and for such price and upon such terms as to him in his sole discretion may seem proper, but shall in no event sell for less than an aggregate amount which will be sufficient to pay each bondholder his, her, or its amount found due for principal, interest, and any advances made or assessed to him, her, or it hereunder, and any advances made or assessed to him, her, or it hereunder, and any advances having and owning one-half of the entire morticage indebtedness found to be due upon such foreclosure shall be first procured by or be given to said trustee, otherwise authorizing the trustee to sell and convey said premises; and (c) until be first procured by or be given to said trustee, otherwise authorizing the trustee to sell and convey said premises; and (c) until the trustee shall thus sell and dispose of said premises he shall the trustee shall thus sell and dispose of said premises he shall be entitled to enter upon and take possession of the same, complete the construction and equipment of any building, lease or operate, maintain and manage the same by such agents, servants, and attorneys as he may select, and receive and collect the rents, earnings, incomes, and profits thereof, and pay therefrom and from the proceeds of any sale thereof all proper costs, charges, and expenses of such construction and equipment, taxes, insurance premiums, and cost of maintenance, including reasonable compensation for such trustee, his servants, agents, and attorneys, and distribute the remainder of moneys thus received by him ratably among those entitled thereto. by him ratably among those entitled thereto.

Section 4. If any one or more of the events of default, as set forth in this indenture, shall happen, and if by reason thereof the entire principal hereby secured shall be declared to be due, the company, on demand of the individual trustee, covenants and agrees to pay to the trustee at his office in the covenants and agrees to pay to the trustee at his office in the city of Chicago, Illinois, for the benefit of the holders of the bonds and coupons and claims for advances and interest then outstanding, in United States gold coin of not less than the standard of weight and fineness existing on the date hereof, as now fixed by law, or its equivalent as aforesaid, a sum equivalent to the amount due on all the outstanding bonds for principal and interest, with interest upon the overdue principal and installments of interest at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum, plus all advances by said trustee or the bondholders and coupon holders, authorized by this indenture, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum, and in case the company shall fail to pay the same forthwith upon such demand the trustee in his own name and as trustee of an express trust shall be entitled fail to pay the same forthwith upon such demand the trustee in his own name and as trustee of an express trust shall be entitled to recover judgment against the said company for the whole amount so due and unpaid. The trustee shall be entitled to recover judgment as aforesaid either before or after or during the pendency of any proceeding for the enforcement of the lien of this indenture and a foreclosure sale hereunder, and his right to recover any such judgment shall not be affected by any sale hereunder or by the exercise of any other right, power, or remedy for the enforcement of the provisions of this indenture or by the foreclosure of the lien by sale or otherwise; and in case of a sale of the mortgaged property or any part thereof and of the application of the proceeds of sale to the payment of the indebtedness, represented by the bonds, coupons, and claims for interest, the trustee in his own name and as trustee of an express trust shall be entitled to receive and to enforce payment of any and all deficiency or amounts then remaining due and unpaid upon any or all of the bonds then outstanding for the benefit of the holders thereof, including interest thereon, and upon any advances with interest as above set forth, and shall for the benefit of the holders thereof, including interest thereon, and upon any advances with interest as above set forth, and shall be entitled to recover judgment against said company for any portion of such indebtedness remaining unpaid, with interest. No recovery of any judgment by the trustee and no levy of any execution under any such judgment upon property subject to the lien of this indenture or upon any other property shall in any manner or to any extent affect or impair the lien of the trustee upon the mortgaged property or any part thereof or any rights, powers, or remedies of the holders of said bonds and coupons, but such lien, rights, powers, and remedies shall continue unaffected and unimpaired as before. Any moneys thus collected by the trustee under this section shall be applied by him as and in the manner provided for in section 2 of this article.

ARTICLE X

LIABILITIES, DUTIES, POWERS, AND RIGHTS OF THE TRUSTEE

SECTION 1. The recitals contained herein and in the bonds issued hereunder shall be understood as made solely by the company and not as made or vouched for by the individual trustee. The said trustee shall have no responsibility for the validity of The said trustee shall have no responsibility for the validity of the lien of this indenture or the execution or acknowledgement thereof, nor as to the title, value, or extent of the security afforded hereby, and shall be under no obligation to see to the recording, filing, or refiling of this instrument, or any instrument of further assurance, or to the giving of any notice thereof, or to see that any of the property intended now or hereafter to be conveyed in trust hereunder is subjected to the lien hereof or to see to the use or application of the bonds or their proceeds.

Section 2. The said trustees and each of them shall not be section 2. The said trustees and each of them shall not be under any obligation to recognize any person, firm, or corporation as the holder or owner of any of the bonds or coupons secured hereby, or to do or refrain from doing any act pursuant to the request of any person, firm, or corporation, professing to be or claiming to be such holder or owner, until such supposed holder or owner shall produce the said bonds and coupons and deposit the same with the respective trustee in the respective cases and instances herein required and specified. But all powers and rights of action hereunder may be exercised and enforced at all times by the individual trustee, at his election, and in his discretion, without the possession or production of any of said bonds or coupons to him, or proof of ownership thereof at any time whatsoever when default exists as herein provided. The trustees and each of them shall not be answerable for the default or misconduct of any agent or attorney employed by them in and about the execution of this trust if such agent or attorney shall have been selected with reasonable care. The individual trustee shall not be personally liable for any debts contracted by him nor for damages to persons or property incurred by him nor for damages to persons or property of any kind whatsoever, or for salaries or nonfulfillment of contracts during any period wherein he or any receiver appointed at his instance shall manage the trust estate or premises upon entry, but all of the same shall be a charge upon the trust estate.

Section 3. Neither of the trustees shall be in any way liable for the consequence of any breach of the covenants herein contained,

Section 3. Neither of the trustees shall be in any way liable for the consequence of any breach of the covenants herein contained, or for any act done or anything omitted hereunder by the company, and in no event shall either of the trustees be liable to any bondholder, except for gross negligence or willful misconduct or neglect. It shall be no part of the duty of the individual trustee to effect, procure, or collect insurance against fire or other damage on any portion of said premises (but the same shall be payable to him as aforesaid), or to renew any policies of insurance or to inquire or keep informed as to the performance or observance of any covenant or agreement on the part of the company, under this indenture, or to pay any taxes, assessments, or other charges upon the premises, or to do any other thing not affirmatively and expressly agreed to be done by him hereunder. The trustees and each of them may conclusively assume that the company is not in default hereunder, unless notified in writing of such default by the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., or by the holder or holders of at least $50,000 in amount of bonds issued and outstanding, or a like amount of overdue coupons or of both bonds and of overdue coupons. bonds and of overdue coupons.

Section 5. Each and either of the trustees shall be entitled to act upon any notice, request, consent, certificate, bond, letter, telegram, or other instrument or paper believed by them or either of them to be genuine and to have been properly executed, and shall be entitled, but not required hereunder, to receive as conclusive proof of any fact or matter required to be ascertained by them hereunder, a certificate signed by the president receivers of the common variety in the indexture. dent or secretary of the company, unless in this indenture it is otherwise specifically provided, and any such certificate or evidence prescribed by this indenture which either of the trustees may accept shall be full protection and justification for anything suffered or done by either of the trustees in good faith in religence thereupon. reliance thereupon.

Section 6. In case of any suit or proceeding in any way relating to or affecting said mortgaged property, including any suit or proceedings in connection with the Torrens Act, or land registration act or acts, so called, wherein provision is or may be made for registration of land titles wherein said individual trustee, or said bondholders, or any of them, shall be a party or parties, reasonable compensation for services of the said trustee and all court costs and reasonable necessary expenses incurred by the said trustee, including attorney's fees, stenographers' charges, and costs of procuring abstracts of title and continuations thereof, or of a title curing abstracts of title and continuations thereof, or of a title policy or a continuation thereof, and costs of procuring testimony and evidence and statements of witnesses and documentary evidence, if any, incurred by said trustee in or about such suit or proceeding or in the preparation therefor, shall be allowed to and paid to the said trustee by the company on demand, and shall be a charge on the mortgaged premises prior and paramount to the bonds hereby secured, and shall become so much additional indebtedness secured by this indenture, and, wherever possible, shall be provided for in any indement or degree in such proceeding debtedness secured by this indenture, and, wherever possible, shall be provided for in any judgment or decree in such proceeding. And it is further agreed that any and all original certificates of title, owner's and mortgagee's certificates, issued under any such proceeding shall be delivered only to and received and held by said individual trustee until all of said indebtedness is paid; and it is expressly agreed by the grantor, its successors and assigns, that the decree or judgment in any such proceeding shall so provide.

SECTION 7. It is hereby further covenanted and agreed, and this trust is accepted upon the express condition that the said individual trustee shall not incur any liability or responsibility whatever in consequence of permitting or suffering the company or its tenants to remain or be in possession of the mortgaged property, and to use and enjoy the same, nor shall he become liable or responsible for any destruction, loss, injury, or damage which may be done or happen to the mortgaged property either by said may be done or happen to the mortgaged property either by said company or its tenants, agents, servants, lessees, or by any person or persons whatever, or by or from any accident or any cause whatever.

The individual trustee may advise with legal counsel, and any action, under this instrument, taken or suffered in good faith by him, in accordance with the opinion of such counsel, shall be conclusive on the company and on all holders of the bonds and interest coupons secured by this indenture; and the said trustee shall be fully protected in respect thereof.

The trustees shall not be liable for any error of judgment nor for any act done or step taken or omitted nor for any mistakes of fact or law, nor for anything which they or either of them may do or refrain from doing in good faith, nor, generally, shall they or either of them have any accountability hereunder except for their own willful default.

Neither of the trustees shall be required to pay interest on any money received by them or either of them under any provision of this instrument except as herein otherwise is specifically proof this instrument except as herein otherwise is specifically provided.

Section 8. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the trustees or either of them or any successor in trust of either of them individually or in any other capacity than as trustee hereunder, and/or the American Bond and Mortgage Company, Inc., individually, from purchasing, selling, holding, owning, or otherwise dealing in the bonds or interest coupons secured hereby, with money other than that of grantor.

ARTICLE XII

SUCCESSORS IN TRUST

SECTION 1. In the event of the illness, death, resignation, refusal, or other inability or incapacity of the said Harold A. Moore, individual trustee, to act as trustee hereunder, or a vacancy in said office of trustee shall exist when and while the services of said trustee shall be required under any provisions hereof, then, in any such event Kenneth W. Moore, of Chicago, Illinois, shall be and he is hereby appointed first successor in the trust herein created, and is hereby appointed first successor in the trust herein created, and in the event of the illness, death, resignation, refusal, or inability to act of the said Kenneth W. Moore, then Charles B. Moore, of the city of Chicago, Illinois, is hereby appointed to be the second successor in trust, and in case of his death, resignation, refusal, inability, or failure to act, then L. E. Mitten, of Chicago, Illinois, is hereby appointed to be the third successor in trust, with all the powers given and granted herein under the said trust deed.

Each successor in trust when in office hereunder shall have identically the same title to said premises, and the same rights, powers, and duties as hereby are vested in or imposed upon said Harold A. Moore, trustee. The recital by any successor in trust in any instrument executed by him, of the death, resignation, refusal, disqualification, or other inability to act of the original individual trustee or of any successor in the order named shall be sufficient evidence thereof when recorded in the public office of the official where this instrument has been recorded.

Section 2. The individual trustee, or his successor in trust, or any other trustee hereafter appointed, may resign and be discharged of the trust hereby created, by written notice of such resignation sent by registered mail to the company and unto the first and the second and third successors in trust respectively herein named; such resignation shall take effect after the mailing of such notice and filing with the clerk of the circuit court as recorder of deeds of Palm Beach County, Florida, his written resignation and transfer of all his title hereunder to the next successor as aforesaid who is living and capable of acting. Any such trustee may also be removed by an instrument in writing signed by the holders of not less than seventy-five per centum in principal amount of the bonds hereby secured, and then outstanding, and recorded in the public office of the official where this instrument has been recorded, and in the case of such resignation or removal as aforesaid, the title to said mortgaged premises and trust estate as aforesaid, the title to said mortgaged premises and trust estate shall ipso facto devolve and rest in the said first or other living successor in trust and his successors in the order as above recited in section 1 of this article.

SECTION 3. In case at any time the individual trustee or successor in trust hereunder shall refuse to act, resign, or be removed, or otherwise become incapable of acting and there is no trustee or successor hereunder, acting or capable of acting, and a vacancy exists in the office of such trustee, then except as hereinbefore otherwise provided, a successor or successors may be appointed by the holders of a majority in face principal amount of the bonds then outstanding, by an instrument signed by such bondholders and recorded in the office where this instrument shall have been But in case no such appointment shall be made by the bondholders within thirty (30) days after such vacancy exists and the occasion for such appointment has arisen, a new trustee and the occasion for such appointment has arisen, a new trustee in succession to said individual trustee may at any time thereafter be selected and appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction in the premises, upon the application of the company or of the holder of any of said bonds, and upon such notice as such court shall direct or as shall be in accordance with the rules and practice of such court. Such new trustee, if appointed by order of court, shall be some responsible trust company, having a paid-up capital and surplus aggregating at least one million dollars ($1,000,000) if there be such a trust company qualified under the laws of the State of Florida, willing and able to accept the trust upon reasonable or customary terms. Any new trustee in successions upon reasonable or customary terms. Any new trustee in succession to said individual trustee appointed hereunder shall execute and acknowledge acceptance of such appointment hereunder, which said acceptance shall be duly recorded in the office where this instrument shall have been recorded, and thereupon such new trustee shall become vested with identically the same lien and title to all of the said property hereby conveyed and with the same rights and powers, subject to the same duties, as the said trustee rights and powers, subject to the same duties, as the said trustee which it is to succeed.

SECTION 4. The grantor hereby makes, constitutes, and appoints the American Trust and Safe Deposit Company, the second party hereto above named, as corporate trustee for limited purposes only, to identify each and all of said temporary and permanent bonds and to perform certain duties in the making of payment thereof, and the performance of certain other duties as herein specified at its office in Chicago, Illinois, and does not under any circumstances hereby or herein convey it any title lien or mostcircumstances hereby or herein convey it any title, lien, or mort-gage upon the premises as a trustee for the use and benefit of the bondholders, or otherwise hereunder, and the grantor hereby further covenants and agrees that said trustee, by acceptance of this appointment as corporate trustee, as a consideration and condition upon which said corporate trustee, American Trust and Safe Deposit Company, shall accept and agree to perform the duties and trusts herein specified by it to be done, kept, and performed, that the same is for the convenience of the grantor and of the holders of said bonds to be secured hereby, and that none of the holders of said bonds to be secured hereby, and that none of said trusts, duties, or services of the said corporate trustee or any successor of it shall be required at any time to do or perform any act or execute any trust or render any service as such corporate trustee to the parties hereto or the holders of said bonds within said State of Florida or elsewhere outside of the State of Illinois, and that all of said duties and services shall be performed by said corporate trustee and its trusts executed at its office in the city of Chicago, and State of Illinois, where it is authorized by the laws of said State to do, perform, and execute the same, and that said corporate trustee has no title, interest, claim, or demand of, in, and to the said above described mortgaged premises, buildings, improvements, goods, and chattels and none premises, buildings, improvements, goods, and chattels and none is vested in it or intended to be vested in it as such corporate trustee, or in its said successors, and that all mortgage title to such property is vested in said individual trustee exclusively and

I, A. B. Tunnicliff, a notary public at large residing in Palm Beach County in the State aforesaid, an officer authorized to take acknowledgments to deeds, hereby certify that Paris E. Singer, individually, Paris E. Singer, a trustee, H. E. Bemis, Edward C. Sweeny and Martin Sweeny, personally known to me to be the individuals and stockholders described in and who executed the foregoing instrument of consent and approval, this day each personally appeared before me and acknowledged before me that they and each of them freely and voluntarily executed said instrument for the purposes therein expressed.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and official seal this 10th day of June A. D. 1925.

A. B. TUNNICLIFF, Notary Public.

My commission expires October 17, 1927.

[Endorsement:] State of Florida, County of Palm Beach, ss: This instrument was filed for record at 10:05 a.m., this 11th day of June 1925 and duly recorded on the 24th day of June 1925 in Book 121 of Mortgages, on page 1. Record verified. Fred E. Fenno, clerk, circuit court. By Merle P. Johnston, D. C.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now desire to read from this, not the whole document, but certain parts of it which appear on pages 71 and 72.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel refers to the trust

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May I inquire of counsel again, is there any necessity of having the entire trust deed incorporated in the record? As counsel know, if any parts of it are not at all pertinent, they need not be placed before the court.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Inasmuch as this is the basis of the entire matter, I think it would be very difficult if it were not put in the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I read from page 71:

(2) By a holder or holders of bonds of the aggregate amount of not less than $50,000, or the holder of bonds and past-due interest coupons of an aggregate face amount of not less than $50,000, or the holder or holders of past-due interest coupons for an aggregate face amount of at least $50,000, may request the said individual trustee or his successor in trust, in writing, specifying the default or defaults, to declare their bonds or any part thereof, or the said entire principal indebtedness with interest secured hereby, to be then due and payable for such default or defaults, and shall deliver or produce and tander to the trustee the said house and deliver or produce and tender to the trustee the said bonds and/or said bonds and matured coupons, or coupons, for the amount of not less than $50,000, as aforesaid, and pay to the said trustee, or tender him in payment, a reasonable sum of money to cover all advances and costs for a foreclosure or the bringing of an action or suit to enforce payment, and a reasonable indemnity to said trustee to cover his future costs and attorneys' fees and expenses trustee to cover his future costs and attorneys' fees and expenses in the premises to his satisfaction; and thereupon and thereafter within sixty (60) days the said trustee or his successor in trust shall declare the said bonds due and payable, as requested, whether matured or not, and for such default or defaults, or in lieu thereof, the said trustee may refuse so to do; and if such refusal or neglect shall continue for a space of thirty days after his refusal in writing, or for sixty (60) days of neglect so to act as requested as aforesaid, then and thereafter the said bondholder or bondholders and courson holders or expense holding at as requested as aforesaid, then and thereafter the said bondholder or bondholders and coupon holder or coupon holders, holding at least the amount in face amount of bonds, or face amount of bonds and coupons past due, or face amount of past-due coupons, as aforesaid, may declare all of the then outstanding bonds due and payable at once; and they shall then and thereafter be due and payable, with all of the rights in the holders of said bonds and coupons to enforce the payment thereof by foreclosure or otherwise, in their own names, as if the entire debt had matured regularly according to the tenor thereof.

Nothing in this article contained shall be construed as a waiver

Nothing in this article contained shall be construed as a waiver of or a limitation of, or prohibition against the right of any holder of bonds past due, either by lapse of time or by declaration for default by the trustee as aforesaid, or of coupons past due, or of both bonds and coupons past due, without any request to foreclose of the trustee whatever, to sue or commence foreclosure proceedings of this trust deed to enforce the payment of such past due obligations which have matured regularly accordclosure proceedings of this trust deed to enforce the payment of such past due obligations which have matured regularly according to the tenor thereof, and the lapse of thirty (30) days' time thereafter as aforesaid, or of bonds declared due, by the trustee or holder thereof upon conditions as above provided, for default as aforesaid, and have not been paid, subject to the continuing lien of this trust deed (and junior and subordinate thereto) as security for the payment of all of the remaining outstanding bonds and coupons and any indebtedness that may be secured by this instrument not represented by the holders of such past due this instrument not represented by the holders of such past due bonds or coupons, or both, in manner and form as provided by the laws of the State of Florida or as hereinafter provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will counsel suffer an interruption? I understand there is no contention that there was not a default in the payment of the coupons.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). There is no contention, as I understand, but that these bonds covered by this mortgage were past due since the summer of 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of that fact, the Chair would inquire the pertinency of reading all these things into the record.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). To show they had a right to foreclosure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I did not know that that was denied.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It was denied. The question was asked in a form here, without the trust deed being before the Court, and an answer was made, that left it very much confused, so I think the Court should have those provisions referring especially to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will now read the paragraph marked "(b)", beginning on page 78, down to a point upon page 79, ending at the fifth line of the last numbered page:

(b) Upon the filing of any bill in a court of equity or chancery, in foreclosure hereof under the conditions of default and continuance thereof for the time as herein provided, notwithstanding any other power herein granted, the party of the first part, its successors and assigns, hereby expressly covenants and agrees—as an express right hereby given and granted to said individual trustee, bond and coupon holders—that the court shall appoint a receiver, notice to the grantor, or its assigns, for such application or such appointment being hereby expressly waived, and that such receiver shall at once go into possession and have possession of the said mortgaged property in its entirety and to lease the same and to remove any tenant or tenants therein and to receive and collect any and all rents, issues, earnings, returns, and profits arising from said premises, and shall have power to operate said property as a going business, or otherwise as the exigencies of the case may require, and that said receiver shall have full power and authority to make repairs, and to pay taxes and insurance, to all of which the said grantor and its assigns expressly consent. The appointment of said receiver upon such application and in the event of default as aforesaid is hereby exexpressly consent. The appointment of said receiver upon such application and in the event of default as aforesaid is hereby expressly authorized as a means of assuring to the said trustee and the said holders of said bonds and said coupons of their security of the rents, issues, earnings, and profits derivable and arising from said premises, as hereinbefore covenanted and agreed are assigned and transferred and set over as a special and additional security hereunder; and such appointment of such receiver in any of the events of default as aforesaid shall be made by the court without regard to the present value of said property, and without regard to its then value, and regardless of whether or not the said grantor or its assigns, shall or may be at this time, or at the time of the appointment of said receiver, or the application therefor, solvent or insolvent. therefor, solvent or insolvent.

That is all I care to read out of the trust deed at this time.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Please look at the paper which I now hand you entitled "Answer-counterclaim of Harold A. Moore as trustee", and say what that paper is .- A. (After examination.) This is the answer and counterclaim of Harold A. Moore as trustee.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offer this in evidence, and ask that it be given the appropriate number as respondent's exhibit.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 4.") The PRESIDING OFFICER. Have the managers on the part of the House any objection?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No; but we do not care to have it printed unless the Court wishes it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Court will make no order-at least for the present.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think that need not be printed in full.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. What is the paper I now hand you, with the first number on the top "678-M"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Cannot counsel for the respondent and the managers on the part of the House agree on these papers which will be offered, without taking up so much time in having them identified?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If the managers on the part of the House will agree I shall offer them all together.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I shall be glad to stipulate that everything which appears in the official court files, as designated on the back, may be offered in evidence without further identification, either in piecemeal or in bulk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that statement it may be so done. Counsel for the respondent will refer to the exhibits which they desire to offer.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, I should like to make this further suggestion, if it meets with the approval of the President and the members of the Court, that we will be glad to agree that the entire files may be considered to have been entered, and that counsel for either side may refer to them at any time.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am glad to agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do counsel for the respondent accept that tender?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We accept that tender, and we now offer the entire file of the Whitehall case, in addition to those separate exhibits which were put in alone; that is, the bill and the other exhibits which were offered sepa-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order. It is understood that this voluminous file is not to be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not ordered that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We do not ask that it be printed, but we do ask, if it is proper that it be done, that the memorandum which we read be set out in full in the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is proper that the memorandum should go into the record.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer in evidence the document from this file, numbered 99 on the back in blue pencil. I must read this document. It is the petition of the plaintiff for the allowance of the $15,000 fee, and the order made by the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does counsel deem it necessary to read that?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do; for the reason that the question was propounded to the witness and he was asked to answer, and therefore I think we ought to have read the application itself and the order made by the court, it being a sharp question raised by counsel on the other side with this witness as to whether or not this was a conserving fee

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed as rapidly as you can. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will go just as fast as I can, so far as my strength will permit. [Reading:]

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida in and for Miami Division. No. 678-M Eq. Bert E. Holland, Catherine Sugden, a widow, and Whitefield W. Johnson, as trustees, plaintiffs, v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co., a Florida corporation, et al., defendants; A. H. Hill, Eugenia J. Schopps, and A. W. Kirkland, interveners. Petition of plaintiffs and interveners for order allowing compensation for their attorney.

TO THE HONORABLE JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, MIAMI DIVISION:

Now come plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, by their attorney, A. L. Rankin, and show unto the court that your petitioners, by and through their attorney, A. L. Rankin, in behalf of themselves and all other bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., have caused property of the value of more than $1,750,000 to be brought into court and placed in the hands of a receiver for the purpose of protecting and conserving the said property and the rents, income, and profits therefrom for the benefit of all first-mortgage bondholders, and in addition to the property being conserved and brought into court, there has been created by virtue of the said receivership, for the benefit of all bondholders, the sum of approximately two hundred thirty-seven thousand dollars ($237,000), which sum is now in the hands of the receiver; that your petitioners had an agreement with their said attorney that they would pay him for his legal services rendered in said cause a reasonable attorney's fee, the reasonableness of which fee was to be determined and fixed by the court; that petitioners' said attorney filed the bill of complaint for said petitioners the first part of October 1929, and a receiver was appointed by this honorable court on the 28th day of October 1929; and that he has rendered legal services for your petitioners in this matter Now come plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, this honorable court on the 28th day of October 1929; and that he has rendered legal services for your petitioners in this matter continuously since the filing of said bill, in having a receiver appointed, in advising with receiver for the benefit of all bondholders as to the care, protection, conservation, management, and operation of the property in the hands of said receiver, and has represented your petitioners in various and sundry matters, petitions, and legal controversies incident to said suit and said receivership for more than 8 months, for which services he has received no compensation whatever, nor no compensation for the expenses necessarily incident to this work.

The premises considered, your petitioners would pray Your

The premises considered, your petitioners would pray Your Honor to ascertain what is a reasonable attorney's fee for the services rendered by their said attorney, A. L. Rankin, in the said receivership proceedings, and in conserving the said assets of the said Whitehall Building & Operating Co., bringing said assets into court and causing to be created the funds now in the hands of Walter S. Richardson, as receiver of said property, in the sum of approximately two hundred twenty-three thousand dollars ($223,-000.00), and to enter an order in this cause authorizing and directing the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver of the property of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., to pay to the said A. L. Rankin whatever sum Your Honor should find to be a reasonable compensation for the services rendered by the said A. L. Rankin as such attorney up to the present time.

This the 9th day of May 1930.

(Signed) A. L. RANKIN, Attorney for Petitioners.

The petition is properly sworn to.

I will now read the document marked "103" on the back thereof in blue pencil, being a part of the entire record introduced heretofore [reading]:

Order authorizing Walter S. Richardson, as receiver, to pay fees to A. L. Rankin, as attorney for plaintiffs and interveners

Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, for an order fixing a reasonable compensation for their attorney, A. L. Rankin, for services rendered plaintiffs, interveners, and all first-mortgage bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., in conserving, bringing into court, and creating assets for benefit of all said first-mortgage bondholders, and the same being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises and all parties in interest being before the court and consenting thereto; it is therefore Ordered adjudged and decreed that upon the said petition the Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that upon the said petition the sum of $2,500 is hereby allowed as a reasonable advancement for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for conserving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hands of the receiver, the final total allowance to be hereafter determined, and the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said A. L. Rankin, as such attorney, out of funds in his hands as such receiver, the said sum of $2,500, which is herein fixed and allowed.

HALSTED L. RITTER, United States District Judge.

I now read into the RECORD document marked "124" on the back thereof, out of the record of the Whitehall case here-tofore introduced [reading]:

Order authorizing Walter S. Richardson, as receiver, to pay fees to A. L. Rankin, as attorney for plaintiffs and interveners

Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, for an order fixing a reasonable compensation for their attorney, A. L. Rankin, for services rendered plaintiffs, interveners, and all first-mortgage bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., in conserving, bringing into court, and creating assets for benefit of all said first-mortgage bondholders, and the same being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises: It is therefore Ordered, adjudged, and decreed, That the said petition be, and the same is hereby granted, and that the sum of $15,000 is hereby fixed as a reasonable compensation for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for conserving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hands of the receiver, and the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver, be and is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said A. L. Rankin, as such attorney, out of the funds in his hands as such receiver, the said sum of $15,000, which is herein fixed and allowed.

Done and ordered at Tampa, Fla., this the 5th day of July, A. D. 1930.

ALEXANDER AKERMAN, United States District Judge.

I will not read into the RECORD, but there are here the affidavits of two attorneys certifying to the reasonableness of the fee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They go into the RECORD under the previous stipulation, do they?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. I now offer in evidence, without reading it in full "Memorandum brief on petition for order allowing and directing payment of attorney's fees for A. L. Rankin, attorney for plaintiffs and intervenors in the above-styled cause."

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you whether or not this is a memorandum of law which you used at the time you made the argument for the allowance of this fee [exhibiting paper to witness]?—A. Yes; it is.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). This memorandum has no particular marking. I should like to have this memorandum marked as one of respondent's exhibits, whatever number is next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorandum will be marked by the clerk.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 6.") By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. This document is now marked "Respondent's Exhibit 6", and I will ask you now whether or not in that memorandum of law you gave the court the legal authorities for the charge of a special fee, or a fee for conserving the assets and bringing them into the jurisdiction of the court?—A. Yes.
- Q. I will ask you to look at this paper which I now hand you marked "148" on the back there in blue pencil and ask you if that is the final decree?—A. (After examining paper.) That is the final decree.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I offer that document in evidence and ask that it be given the regular exhibit number next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document will be received and marked.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 7")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer in evidence a document, the first number thereon being "Case No. 678–M", with the number "142" in blue pencil. I will ask the witness—no; I will offer it without asking him, if there is no objection, the affidavit of reasonable compensation for attorneys for plaintiff and intervener for foreclosing trust deed of Harry A. Johnston, the similar affidavit of H. C. Fisher, the affidavit of Bert Winters, and the affidavit of E. B. Donnell and ask that they be given the regular number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the exhibits will be filed.

(The documents were marked, respectively, "Exhibits for Respondent 8, 9, 10, and 11.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I would now like to read one other document in evidence here. It is numbered in blue pencil 149, being the praecipe for dismissal of counterclaim of Harold A. Moore as trustee.

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT No. 12

In the District Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of Florida, Miami Division. In Equity, No. 678. Bert E. Holland et al., as Trustee, plaintiffs, v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co., a Florida Corporation, et al., defendants and interveners

Praecipe for dismissal of counterclaim

Comes now, Harold A. Moore, as trustee, one of the defendants in the above-entitled cause, by Shutts & Bowen, his solicitors of record, and shows unto the court that a compromise of the matters in dispute having been agreed upon, and an agreement as to the division of the fees allowed for the foreclosure of the mortgage having been reached between counsel for the plaintiffs and interveners and for this defendant, and a final decree entered herein on December 24, 1930, representing the nature of said compromise.

Wherefore said Harold A. Moore, as trustee and one of the defendants herein, files this his praecipe to the clerk of the above-styled court, to dismiss the counterclaim incorporated in his answer heretofore filed in said cause.

Shutts & Bowen,
Solicitors for Harold A. Moore as Trustee.

Shutts & Bowen, attorneys at law, Miami, Fla.

I should like to offer that in evidence as an exhibit and have it given the proper number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document will be received as an exhibit and properly numbered.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 12.")

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Mr. Rankin, prior to the time that this case came up in open court, did you ever speak to Halsted L. Ritter about this case or have any conversation with him?—A. I never did.
- Q. Did you ever hear anyone else speak to him about the case? Did anyone in your presence ever speak to him about the case?—A. I never heard of anyone speaking to him, and I never saw anyone speak to him in my presence.

Q. So far as your knowledge is concerned, is it a fact that Judge Ritter knew nothing about this case until it came up openly in court?—A. So far as my knowledge goes, he knew nothing of it whatsoever.

- Q. You have heard a certain letter read here and there has been evidence adduced here, to which, of course, we have not reached an answer, alleging certain transactions that took place between Mr. Sweeny and Mr. Richardson in which your name is mentioned and certain letters with your signature attached thereto. I will ask you whether or not you ever called the attention of Judge Ritter or if his attention, so far as you know, was ever called to any of these documents?—A. I never called any of the documents to his attention, and I know of no one else who did, so far as I know.
- Q. So far as your knowledge is concerned, he never had any notice or heard anything about the transactions leading up to the filing of the suit?—A. So far as I know, he had no notice and no knowledge.
- Q. Did you have any conversation of any nature or character with Judge Ritter prior to the filing of your application for the first allowance for an attorney's fee?—A. No; I had no conversation with him in reference to that.
- Q. At the time that application was filed, I will ask you to state whether or not Mr. McPherson, representing the opposing parties, was in court.—A. He was in court.
- Q. At the time it was presented? Is that correct?—A. Yes; to the best of my recollection, he was there.
- Q. Now, going back for the moment to the appearance in court with reference to the appointment of the receiver, was there any suggestion made by any person at that time that there had been anything improper in the securing of the bonds necessary to bring the suit or in the relations between Mr. Richardson and Mr. Bemis and Mr. Sweeny, or anything, so far as you were concerned, called to the attention of Judge Ritter?—A. There was not.
- Q. I will go back to the formation of your partnership. You never knew Judge Ritter until you met him taking a law examination, did you?—A. That was the first time I had ever met him.
- Q. How long had you practiced law in Alabama?—A. From 1899 until 1925.
 - Q. What is your present age?-A. I am 58.
- Q. You entered into a partnership with Judge Ritter?— A. Yes; we entered into a partnership.
 - Q. And you had some books?—A. Yes. Q. And he had some books?—A. Yes.
- Q. And those were put in? Is that correct?—A. They were.
- Q. That partnership was entered into approximately on what date? Was it November 1926?—A. I believe that was the exact date.
- Q. And you proceeded to practice. About what did you make the first year?—A. Well, I really do not know.
- Q. You started with practically no clients, did you not?— A. No clients.
- Q. The judge was some few years older than you were?— A. Yes.
- Q. And you first had an office on the fourth floor of the Comeau Building?—A. On the tenth floor.
- Q. Is that where you had your first office?—A. On the tenth floor of the Comeau Building.
- Q. Did you move at any time?—A. Yes; we moved down to the eighth floor.
- Q. How large was the office on the tenth floor?—A. It had a reception room and two offices.
- Q. At what point in your partnership did you move to the eighth floor?—A. Probably about 8 or 9 months or a year after we had opened our partnership business we moved.
- Q. Did you have to take larger offices on account of the increase in your business?—A. We did.
- Q. How many rooms did you have in the next office which you took?—A. We had five.
- Q. Were they well furnished?—A. They were fairly well furnished.
- Q. Approximately how many books did you have?—A. We had——
- Q. You do not need to detail them, because later I am going to give you the inventory that you had made.—A. When we moved down on the eighth floor we had approximately 700 or 800 volumes.

- Q. Did you have any partnership agreement at any time with Judge Ritter, any written partnership agreement?—A. I did not.
- Q. What was your agreement, your verbal agreement, about the partnership?—A. Our verbal agreement was that we would pool all of our books and all of our desks and furniture and fixtures and that we would share in the partnership business everything on a 50-50 basis.
- Q. That partnership continued until Judge Ritter was appointed Federal judge for the southern district of Florida?—A. It did.
 - Q. Is that correct?—A. It is.
- Q. Could you say about how many cases there were in the office that had been fully attended to and nothing further to be done in them except to collect the fees? Can you tell the number?—A. No; I do not recall the exact number.
- Q. Please state how your agreement came about with the judge, if you had an agreement for the sale of the business.—A. We had an agreement, a verbal agreement. When Judge Ritter was appointed and confirmed we had a discussion about the dissolution of the partnership. We agreed on certain cases that he was to participate in the fees. Those cases were cases which had been finished, or practically so, and he was to participate in those fees when collected.
- Q. Were there other cases in the office in which work had been done, but that were still pending and unfinished?—A. Yes; there were cases in the office, quite a few of them.
- Q. You state "quite a few." About how many would you say?—A. I would say something like 40 to 50 cases.
- Q. Just state what your agreement was with the judge as to the amount you would pay him for his business.—A. I told the judge that I expected to pay him for his half interest in the business.
- Q. What did he say about the amount?—A. He asked me what did I think was a fair price. I told him that whatever I agreed to pay him I would have to pay him as and when I could; I would have to make it out of the business.
- Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I present a question at this point?
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the witness finish his answer before the question is read. Proceed, Mr. Witness.
- A. (Continuing.) And that I thought or that it was my idea that $5,000 would be a fair price for his interest.
 - By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
 - Q. What did he say?—A. He said that was all right.
- Q. That applied only to the unfinished business that was in the office or to the fruits of whatever you might collect from the business of your clients which you had?
- Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I would like to ask him if he will allow the witness to give the contents of the contract and conversation rather than to testify himself.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will do so to oblige the gentleman, but this is cross-examination.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the question be read. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask another question. By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. Just state your recollection of the terms of that contract, what he was to get, what you were to retain, and all that you were to get for the $5,000 which you agreed to pay him.—A. He was to step out and turn over the entire business, physical assets, clientele so far as he could control, and the business we had on hand—turn the entire business over to me with the exception of some cases in which he reserved the fees.
- Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I call attention to the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams]?
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was simply waiting until these pertinent questions had been asked. The Senator from Colorado has propounded certain questions to the witness, which will be read.
- The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Adams, as follows:
- Did Judge Ritter know that the money you gave him came from your fees in the Whitehall case?
 - A. I am sure he knew it.

The Chief Clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Adams, as follows:

Were you financially able to pay your debt to Judge Ritter independently of your fee in the Whitehall case?

A. I was not at that time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have several questions I wish to submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas desires to submit several questions. The clerk will read the questions submitted.

The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

Did you make up a list of cases completed, and in which fees were due, and amounts thereof?

A. I had had a list compiled by-repeat the question.

The Chief Clerk again read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Did you make up a list of cases completed, and in which fees were due, and amounts thereof?

A. At the time of our dissolution?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

A. No: I did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let the second question be read.

The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

Did you make up a list of uncompleted cases and an estimate of Judge Ritter's interest?

A. I did not make up the list at the time of the uncompleted cases.

The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Did you buy the library equipment; and if so, how much did

A. I bought the library along as I could. I brought that down from Alabama. Judge Ritter had some books. I do not recall just what they are, but he had quite a few volumes, and we pooled our books. We bought some office equipment.

The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

How did you arrive at $5,000, if you made no estimate or list of cases?

A. Well, I arrived at $5,000 just as a lump sum, for the reason that our income the previous year had been between $4,500 and $5,000 apiece, and I concluded that what he would make out of the business for 1 year had he stayed in the partnership would be a fair value, and I just made that as a lump-sum offer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask one more question, and then I shall desist for a while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be read. The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Was there any argument about amount?

A. There was none.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to propound a

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question propounded by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

How much did you pay Judge Ritter after he became judge out of uncollected fees which you were to divide?

A. I have not the-just one moment.

The Chief Clerk again read the question.

A. My record shows that I paid him $2,899.90.

The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

Did you pay him by check or in cash?

A. I paid him by check in each instance. Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I desire to propound a

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa propounds a question, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. MURPHY, as follows:

Was your income-tax return for 1930 on a cash or accrual basis?

A. Well, I do not recall.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit another question, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question propounded by the Senator from Tennessee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

You have read your payments from a list. Will you submit the

(The document referred to by the witness was handed to Mr. McKellar.)

The WITNESS. You will find that on the last page.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion to lie on the table for the consideration of the Senate, and that is to abrogate the rule requiring questions by Members of the Senate to be written. When a Senator asks one question, the answer suggests another. Then it is necessary to stop and write out the second question. It seems to me if there is any intelligent response to the questions, we ought to be able to ask them orally. Counsel ask questions orally. I see no reason why a Senator should not ask a question orally, as well as counsel.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I am not in order in discussing this matter, I wish to be called to order, and I doubt if I am.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the present rule, nothing is debatable in the Court.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true; the Chair is right. Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for a modification of the rule so as to permit Senators to ask questions orally.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent of the Court that Senators be permitted to ask oral questions from their places in the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. NORRIS, and other Senators objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard in several places. Counsel will proceed.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Proceed and tell if there was any further conversation with Judge Ritter upon the occasion when you made the agreement which you have just detailed .- A. Was there any

Q. Was there any further conversation; and, if so, state it all .- A. Well, as I recall, that dissolution agreement was had several days before Judge Ritter left West Palm Beach to assume his duties on the bench at Miami; and it is my recollection that I talked to him again with reference to that and asked him if that offer was entirely satisfactory, and he said it was. He said, as I recall, that he would have a salary that would be sufficient for him to live on comfortably, and I could pay for his interest in the business as and when I could out of my business.

Q. Was there anybody else who came into your office when Judge Ritter went out?-A. Yes; Mr. J. W. Salisbury came in.

Q. He was a lawyer, was he, of West Palm Beach?-A. Yes: a young practicing lawyer in West Palm Beach.

Q. By whom was he introduced to you?-A. He was introduced to me by Judge Ritter.

Q. Did you make an arrangement with him in the presence of Judge Ritter about going into your office?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas propounds a question which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Prior to your payment to Judge Ritter, had he ever requested or suggested payment?

A. He never had.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. You were asked the question as to whether or not Judge Ritter knew that the first payment you made him came from the Whitehall fee. Was or was not anything said about it when you made the payment?—A. There was nothing said about it when I paid him.
- Q. Then your answer to the question was just the inference; was it?—A. Just an inference.
- Q. That having gotten it on the same day, he would naturally know?—A. Yes; that is right.
- Q. Why did you not pay Judge Ritter anything upon your indebtedness until December 24?—A. Why did I not pay him?
- Q. Yes; why did you not pay him something before that time?—A. Well, I had so many other pressing obligations that I had no money with which I could pay him.
- Q. Was anything said by Judge Ritter to you, or by you to Judge Ritter, other than what you have already testified to, in that visit?—A. I do not recall anything else.
- Q. What did you say when you went in?—A. When I paid him the $2,500?
- Q. Yes, sir.—A. I stated to him that I was paying him $2,500 on the debt that I owed him, and he said, "I had better give you a receipt for it", and I said, "No; I am in a hurry," and that "I will take a receipt in full when I finish paying."
- Q. Was anything else said about that payment being for anything except for the purpose you have stated, or was there any other obligation or agreement upon your part prior to that time to pay anything to Judge Ritter except the amount you owed him upon the contract of sale of the business?—A. There was no other obligation, there was nothing else I said to him with reference to it, there was nothing else that I owed Judge Ritter or had agreed to pay him except upon the obligation that I owed him for his interest in the business.
- Q. When did you make the next payment to Judge Ritter; what date?—A. It was in April 1931.
- Q. Did you pay that money to him on the same day that you collected the balance of the fee which was allowed in the Whitehall case?—A. No; it was several days afterward.
- Q. Upon which payment was it that you got $1,000 from one bank and another amount from a different bank?—A. That was the last, that was the $2,000 payment, in April.
 - Q. That was the April payment?-A. Yes.
- Q. You were asked a question as to why you drew a thousand dollars out of one bank and another amount out of another bank. Have you made any investigation, since you were on the stand, since you were asked that question, or do you know now why you did that?—A. I examined my bank balance at that time in the First National Bank of Miami, as is shown by the statement which I have. That balance shows, when I drew that check, as I recall—I have it here, or outside—that I had $1,354 in the First National in Miami at the time I drew the check.
 - Q. When you drew the check you had $1,300?-A. Yes.
- Q. You are giving this testimony from recollection at this time as well as you can, are you?—A. Yes.
- Q. And at the time that question was asked you, you did not have time to look at the balance which you had in the bank, did you?—A. No; I had no time.
- Q. When you got off the stand you did look for it?—A. Yes.
- Q. And you have that here with you?-A. I have it here.
- Q. Did I ask you whether or not you paid the second $2,000 on the same day that you received it? Did you pay it on the same day you received it?—A. No.
- Q. You received the second time how much in cash on the fee allowed you in the Whitehall case?—A. Forty-five thousand dollars.
- Q. When did you deposit that?—A. I deposited it the same day that I received the check from the receiver.
- Q. How long after that was it that you made the second payment to Judge Ritter?—A. It was several days. It was - not 2 weeks, as I recall, but it was several days after I received it.

- Q. You continued to live at West Palm Beach, did you?—A. Live at West Palm Beach? Yes.
- Q. Just state the circumstances of your payment to him of the second $2,000.—A. As I recall, I was going to Miami on some other business or some matter, and I determined to pay Judge Ritter. That was the first time I had been there since I had received the check from the receiver. I roughly figured that I did not have in the First National Bank in Miami $2,000. I recall that. So I drew a check on the Central Farmers Trust Co. for $1,000. I went on to Miami and drew a check on the First National Bank in Miami for $1,000, and then went in and paid the $2,000 to Judge Ritter.
- Q. When did you make the next payment?—A. The next payment was made—$200.
 - Q. When was that?—A. That was in September.
 - Q. In what year?—A. September 1931.
- Q. When was the next payment?—A. It was in January or February 1932.
- Q. Did you pay any of these amounts to Judge Ritter on any other agreement, for any other reason, or for any other purpose except to cancel the indebtedness which you owed him?—A. I did not.
- Q. Have you the receipt you got when you made the last payment?—A. No; I have not.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have the managers that receipt?
 - Mr. Manager HOBBS. We have.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you give it to me?
 - Mr. Manager HOBBS. We will be delighted.
- Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I submit two questions to be asked of the witness.
- The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the questions. The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Barkley, as follows:
- Where did you deposit the $45,000 when you received it from the receiver?
- A. I deposited it in the First National Bank of Miami. Wait. I have my bank statements and all here. May I look at them?
 - Mr. BARKLEY. As far as I am concerned.
- A. I do not recall now whether I deposited the entire check, the $45,000, in the First National in Miami and then transferred some part of it to the Central Farmers or whether it was vice versa. I do not recall.
- The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the second question of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].
- The Chief Clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Barkley, as follows:
- How much did you have in the West Palm Beach Bank when you drew the thousand-dollar check?
- A. I do not recall, but I had considerably more than a thousand dollars.
 - By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. I will ask you to look at a paper which I now hand you, and I ask you whether or not it is a copy of a document or a document which you gave to the managers on the part of the House during the time of the investigation in 1933 showing the receipt of money coming from the Whitehall case and the distribution of it.—A. (After examining paper). Yes; this is the list of the auditor.
- Q. Does that give you the information to answer the question of the member of the Court who asked you the date of the receipt of the second payments?—A. This report shows that that is the $45,000 check which was deposited in the First National Bank of Miami.
 - Q. The date?—A. On April 6, 1931.
- Q. Does that show the date of the payment of the amount of money which you paid at or about that time to Judge Ritter?—A. It does not show the date it was paid.
- Q. Can you tell what date it was? Is there any data upon that list from which you can tell what date it was?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have the managers that date? Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes, sir; April 14, 1930.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. What was the date you received it?—A. April 6.

Q. 1931?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is right, sir.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. And you paid the $2,000 to Judge Ritter on April 14, 1931?—A. This is the list that an auditor made up of how the entire-

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, we object to the voluntary statement of the witness.

A. Well, he asked me-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Confine the answer to the question propounded by counsel.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I hand you a paper, Mr. Rankin, and ask you to say what it is. It is dated January 28, 1932.—A. This is the receipt from Halsted L. Ritter to A. L. Rankin for $300.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I ask that that be received in evidence, and given a proper serial number as an exhibit of respondent.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 13.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It is marked "Exhibit 13." I shall read it into the record:

JANUARY 28, 1932.

Received of A. L. Rankin Three Hundred 00/100 Dollars in full for balance on sale of business. $300.00. (Signed) HALSTED L. RITTER.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question on that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas propounds an inquiry which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

Why did you take a receipt when there was no written contract or note evidencing the debt?

A. Well, I took that receipt—Judge Ritter wanted to give me a receipt for the full $2,500 when I paid that, and I told him that when I finished paying him in full I would take the receipt in full.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I submit a couple of questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana propounds certain questions, which will be read by the clerk.

The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

Did you keep any books showing receipts and disbursements in your law business after Judge Ritter went on the bench?

A. I did not.

The Chief Clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. MINTON, as follows:

Did you show, by any entry on your books at the time, the payments you made to Judge Ritter in satisfaction of your agreement to pay him $5,000 as the purchase price of the interest of Judge Ritter in the firm?

A. No; I made no memorandum of it. I do not keep books today.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you to look at this paper which I hand you, beginning with the heading "List of clients of the firm of Ritter & Rankin at the time of dissolution", and ask you whether that was prepared under your direction.—A. Yes; it was.

Q. By whom was it prepared?-A. It was prepared by Mr. C. C. Calloway, an auditor, and Mr. J. W. Salisbury.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas propounds a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

How do you compile your income tax if you keep no books?

A. Well, I have a check with all of my banks-my deposits and all of the checks, and I make my income-tax report from that. I deposit all the money in the bank that I receive, and then I pay it out by check, and that is about as good a way as I know—by taking the deposits and then your checks against it and making up the income tax.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk two questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York submits two queries, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Wagner, as follows:

Did you keep a partnership bank account during the life of the partnership?

A. We did not.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Wagner, as follows:

How much money was in the bank to the credit of the partnership of Ritter & Rankin at the time of the partnership disso-

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of the answer to the first question, I withdraw the second question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second question is withdrawn.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. This statement you say was gotten up under your direction by Mr. Callaway, assisted by Mr. Salisbury. How long did Mr. Salisbury remain in your office after he first went in it?-A. He remained in my office from about the 1st of March 1929 until the fall of 1934.

Q. Did he or did he not assist you in the management of the cases that were left there?-A. Yes; he did.

Q. You had an agreement with him to pay him a percentage, did you, of the proceeds of the cases in which he took part or attended to?-A. Yes.

Q. How much was it?-A. Fifteen percent.

Q. Did you also have him make, under your direction, an inventory of the library at the time of the dissolution of the partnership of Ritter & Rankin?-A. I did.

Q. And did you or did you not have him make up, also under your direction, a statement showing the court number of the cases, the date filed or appeared, the style of the case, the representation of the firm, the nature of the action, the amount involved, and the fees collected?-A. I did.

Q. Is this [handing document to the witness] the report that was made, the statement that was made?-A. (After examining document.) This is the report.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offer this document in evi-

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We object, Mr. President, until there is some evidence that the witness knows of the correctness of it. We do not deny that he had it made up.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Is the report correct? Is the statement correct-A. It is correct.

Q. Did you check over these cases, the names of them, the amounts received and the other data in here with the accountant and with Mr. Salisbury, who was in your office?-A. I checked it up with the accountant and also with Mr. Salisbury.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer it in evidence.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I dislike to be objecting, but will you also ask him if it is true?

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Is it a true and correct statement?—A. Yes; it is a true and correct statement, insofar as my files and records show.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Mr. President, in view of the testimony that the witness kept no records and no books, we would like to object to the introduction of this document in evidence.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did he go over your checks and whatever data you had in your office to make this report?—A. He did.

Q. Did you go over it with him?—A. I checked it over with them after it was prepared.

Q. Did you find it to be correct?-A. I found it to be correct, so far as I could tell.

Q. Well, did you check it back with whatever data you had?—A. No; I did not check it back.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have a question I should like to ask.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] has sent a question to the desk, which will first be asked the witness. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Where are the records from which this report was made?

A. They are in my office at West Palm Beach.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway].

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mrs. Caraway, as follows:

If you kept no books for your income tax and compiled your income from your checkbooks, why did you pay Judge Ritter in cash?

A. I have already stated why I paid him in cash. I will answer the question, though, again; that is on account of our former relationship, being partners in the law business, and this money that I was paying him was coming out of funds which had been allowed in his court, it might subject him and me to criticism if people did not understand the transaction and that I owed him a just and honest debt. I wanted to avoid that criticism so far as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further questions?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes, Mr. President. I will first state to the manager that I will withhold this paper or withdraw it until the accountant and Mr. Salisbury go on the stand and explain it.

I submitted to the managers the account, the exhibit, which was filed with the House committee, showing the expenditure of all the money, or the alleged expenditure of all the money that the witness made after its receipt. May we introduce that in evidence?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Not until we have an opportunity to confer.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You want us to withhold it for some future time?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Until we have an opportunity to confer. I have not had an opportunity to confer with my associates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further questions?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Just a moment. [A pause.] The managers may take the witness.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like the witness to answer the question which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee submits a query, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

Did you put your collections as well as your fees in your bank account?

A. Yes; I put everything—deposited everything that I collected—in the bank.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Have you your check books here with you?—A. How is that?

Q. Are your check books here?—A. No.

Q. Are your returned checks here?—A. Yes; all my returned checks during those years are here.

Q. And the bank statements?—A. And the bank statements.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The managers may take the witness.

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court and you, Mr. President, with the consent of the Court, we would like to ask just a few questions now, and then excuse the witness, subject to being recalled for another question at a little later time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness will await the pleasure of the Court and, of course, of the managers and counsel.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge, you say you did not have more than about $1,300 in the First National Bank of Miami?—A. My statement shows that at that time I had, as I recall, $1,354.

Q. And you are exactly right; but you had more than $2,000, to wit, $5,900 in the bank up at West Palm Beach, out of which you drew your first thousand, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. So it was not necessary to go to two places to get it, was it?—A. No; it was not absolutely necessary.

Q. Judge Ritter and you were intimate friends during the time you were in partnership, were you not?—A. We were intimate friends, yes.

Q. And he knew your financial condition, did he not?—A. He knew my financial condition.

Q. And he knew you did not have a thing on God's earth and were heavily involved financially when you came down there, did he not?—A. He did.

Q. He knew that your firm did not make anything, scarcely, the first year and less than $5,000 apiece the second, and that you were still heavily involved, didn't he?—A. Yes; he knew that.

Q. And he knew everything about your financial condition, did not he?—A. Yes, he did; yes, he knew.

Q. He knew that the only way you could pay that debt was out of the fee he had just allowed you, did he not?—A. He knew that that was the only way I could pay it at that particular time.

Q. You say, when Senator Vandenberg asked you whether you paid your income tax on the cash or accrual basis, you understood him to spell that "a-c-c-r-u-a-1"?—A. I did not understand his question.

Q. You put down what you took in when you got it, and not an expectancy, did not you?—A. No; I put down as I got it.

Q. In other words, you make out your return on a cash basis?—A. Yes.

Q. You say the reason you fixed $5,000 for the amount that you offered to pay Judge Ritter for his share in the business was because that is what you expected he would have made had he stayed in the firm for another year, and you were giving him what you thought was a fair price by reason of the fact that that was all you thought he would have gotten if he had stayed in the firm for another year?—A. That is the way I looked at it.

Q. That is the truth?—A. That is what I paid him.

Q. You say Judge Ritter was to step out and turn over to you such clientele as he had as far as he controlled them. Was not that your statement?—A. I probably stated that.

Q. Do you mean that?—A. I mean this, that Judge Ritter stated at the time that he would write to his clients and ask them to continue their business with me.

Q. Do you know whether he did that after he dissolved partnership?—A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know?-A. No: I do not know.

Q. You do not know that he did write or that he did not?—
A. I do not know. He said he would do it.

Q. You know some of them continued and some of them came back after a hiatus, do you not?—A. Some of them continued and some of them came back?

Q. Yes, sir .- A. Practically all of them continued.

Q. Do you mean to say those who had been clients of Judge Ritter and who had no business in the office at the time of the dissolution, came back after a while and brought you additional business or new business?—A. The regular clients continued their business with me.

Q. All right; we will pass that. There is another question I want to ask you. Yesterday you swore, did you not, on page 5043 of the Record, when I asked you why you wrote section 24 into the final decree of the Whitehall case, in which you acquitted Harold A. Moore and all his associates of fraud and had Judge Ritter to write the final decree to that effect—I asked why you did it, and as I understood it you told me you had heard that they had gone into bankruptcy and that no money could be collected out of them anyhow, and that that was the reason that you did that, but the additional reason was that a settlement had been agreed upon. Is that what you said?-A. That most of those defendants against whom in the bill we sought to have an accounting were insolvent.

Q. That was your reason, was it not?—A. Yes; as I recall that was my reason.

Q. And that was your sole reason?—A. Together with the fact that we were settling a very difficult case and that we were subjecting the property to the payment of the bondholders of the first mortgage bonds, which we had set out to do. We had accomplished that purpose, and for that reason, not being able, as I had been informed, as I considered, reliably, that we could never collect anything or any judgment against the other defendants.

Q. I understood that. You swore that yesterday and you swear it now?-A. Yes.

Q. But when you swore down yonder in the affidavit that you were filing in the Kirkland suit, attacking the Whitehall decree, you swore the reason was that you could not get any evidence to substantiate your charge; didn't you?-A. I do not recall.

Q. Here is your affidavit. Look at this paragraph [handing the witness a paper].—A. I state that I swore to this.

Q. Would you be good enough to read the fifth paragraph of that?-A. [Reading:]

5th. This affiant says that he consented to the entry of said final decree which absolved Harold A. Moore and other defendants from fraud for the reason that he could not get any conclusive admissible evidence to convict them of fraud; affiant further says that the allegations of fraud made and set forth in the alleged bill of complaint and sworn to by affiant were made and set forth by affiant in said bill of complaint upon information which he relied on and believed to be true; that he swore to the alleged bill of complaint containing the charges of fraud in good fatth, believing that he could rely on the information which had come to him in that regard; but when he came to prove the allegations of fraud alleged, he could not get any competent and admissible evidence to prove the same; and further, said Harold A. Moore set forth in said answer fully and completely how the money which had come to him had been disposed of and how the property had been handled, which answer clearly refuted the allegations of fraud contained in the alleged bill, and affiant was not able to obtain any competent admissible evidence to disprove the allegations in said answer, and further than that, the final decree which affiant consented to gave the complainants, the clients of affiant, practically all that was prayed for, and inasmuch as affiant was getting with the final decree practically everything that had been asked for in the alleged bill of complaint, it appeared to him useless and unnecessary to insist on proving any unsubstantiated allegation in the alleged bill of complaint. alleged bill of complaint containing the charges of fraud in good unsubstantiated allegation in the alleged bill of complaint

Q. So you swore in that affidavit that your reason was you could not find any evidence?-A. Yes.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. You may stand aside.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky propounds a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. BARKLEY, as follows:

Inasmuch as checks of the kind which would have been given to Judge Ritter if he had been paid by check are confidential in the hands of banks through which they pass, and are returned to the drawer in due course, from what source did you fear the criticism which you say you feared?

A. Well, all of the banks do not keep in strict confidence the affairs of their clients.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the managers on the part of the House are through with the

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes, sir.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We have none. The VICE PRESIDENT. If not, the witness will stand aside.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Call Judge Akerman.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF ALEXANDER AKERMAN

Alexander Akerman, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Judge Akerman, will you please state your full name?-A. Alexander Akerman.

Q. You are a Federal judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What district of Florida?—A. The southern district of Florida.

Q. Judge Akerman, I wish you would examine that letter and say whether or not you received it [handing letter to witness].—A. I did.

Q. In what connection did you receive that letter?—A. I think that Mr. Rankin brought me this letter personally.

Q. What were the circumstances under which Mr. Rankin brought the letter to you?—A. I had received by mail either this letter or the carbon copy a very short time before that, probably that day or the preceding day. I have the carbon copy yet, and the original was handed to me by Mr. Rankin, which speaks for itself.

Q. Under what circumstances did he hand you that letter, and what was his mission, if he had a mission, with you or your court?-A. He presented it to me with an application for the allowance of fees in the case referred to, Holland against Whitehall Building, or some corporate name.

Q. Will you please state to the Court the whole circumstances and facts in connection with that presentation? I believe, if you will do it, I should like to have the letter read at this point. I will read the letter to save you the trouble:

> UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE'S CHAMBERS, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, Miami, Fla., July 2, 1930.

Hon. ALEXANDER AKERMAN,

United States District Judge, Tampa, Fla.

My Dear Judge: In the case of Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co. (No. 678-M Eq.), pending in my division, my former law partner, Judge A. L. Rankin, of West Palm Beach, has filed a petition for an order allowing compensation for his services on behalf of the plaintiff.

on behalf of the plaintiff.

I do not feel that I should pass, under the circumstances, upon the total allowance to be made Judge Rankin in this matter. I did issue an order which Judge Rankin will exhibit to you, approving an advance of $2,500 on his claim, which was approved by all attorneys

You will appreciate my position in the matter, and I request you to pass upon the total allowance which should be made Judge Rankin in the premises as an accommodation to me. This will relieve me from any embarrassment hereafter if the question should arise as to my favoring Judge Rankin in this matter by an exorbitant allowance.

Appreciating very much your kindness in this matter, I am,

Yours sincerely,

HALSTED L. RITTER.

Will you state just what Mr. Rankin did and the whole circumstances?-A. Having received either that or the carbon copy previously, I knew the object of Mr. Rankin's visit. He presented a petition to me, and I asked if everyone had had notice. He replied that all the parties had been notified. I cannot use his exact language. Then he said that he wanted to present me a brief showing that he was entitled to an allowance. I said, "It is a class suit, is it?"

Q. Will you be good enough to explain what a class suit is? Possibly some Members of the Senate are not familiar with it.-A. A class suit, as I use the expression, is where a suit is filed, as an illustration, for a small number of bondholders in behalf of all the other bondholders, for one party in behalf of all others similarly situated.

I asked if it was a class suit, and he said it was. Then I replied that he need not present me any authorities to show that he was entitled to a fee and made some inquiry about the amount involved and asked him what his affidavits showed would be a reasonable fee; and he said, "$15,000." Well, I realized that that could not in any way be considered as an exorbitant fee where perhaps a million dollars was involved, and I said, "All right; I will sign the order"; and that is about all that occurred. I did look to see, in regard to the order, that I was not duplicating; I was not adding it to the $2,500. The order provided that the $2,500 was to be taken out of the $15,000.

Q. Did you understand, Judge Akerman, whether that allowance was a partial allowance, an allowance for conservation, or an allowance for the entire fee for Judge Rankin in connection with this lawsuit?-A. I understood that it was the entire fee as counsel representing the plaintiff or complainant.

Q. You did not examine the order or the petition, either, I assume? Did you examine them?-A. Not critically. The language of the order I did not examine critically. The only thing I did examine it for was to see that the amount was put in-I do not recall whether it was in my handwriting or not—and to be sure that there was no duplication. Judge Ritter had stated that he had already allowed $2,500, and in fixing the fee I wanted that $2,500 deducted. Just what the language was or is, I could not say.

Q. What did you do with the letter which Judge Ritter had written?—A. I gave it back to Mr. Rankin and asked him to file it with the order, to accompany the order, with the clerk. My reason for that was that we have an understanding, we judges, that we will not interfere—we have divided the territory, and we will not interfere with another judge's territory without his request; and I wanted it to appear of record why I passed the order, entered an order in a case which was pending in Judge Ritter's division, and instructed him to file it with the clerk along with the order.

Q. How many judges are there in the southern district of Florida?—A. Three.

Q. Yourself, Judge Ritter—A. And Judge Strum.

Q. Judge Akerman, were you in Florida on October 28, 1929?—A. I cannot fix definitely any date in my mind. In July 1929 I spent some 3 weeks in the mountains of North Carolina, and returned to Florida some time in August 1929; and I have no recollection of leaving the district at any time until perhaps the following spring. Of course, I cannot say definitely where I was on that particular date.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. How many judges are there in the southern district, Judge?—A. Three.

Q. Did the three judges, prior to that time, get together and divide their territory, as to who should sit in one place and who should sit in another?—A. Yes; we divided it geographically. There are no statutory divisions, but we judges made up some divisions and divided it geographically.

Q. Were they adhered to from that time forward?—A. For all practical purposes. We relieved each other in case of congestion, or if there was any embarrassment by reason of friendship or previous employment, where one judge would not want to preside, he would call on another.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I submit an interrogatory to be propounded to the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question. The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Austin, as follows:

Were you aware of the following language in the application: "A reasonable compensation for the services rendered by the said A. L. Rankin as such attorney up to the present time"?

Also, that said application was presented to you on July 5, 1930?

Mr. AUSTIN. Two separate questions are intended.

A. In answer to the first question, I did not scan the language of the order. In fact, if I did scan the language of every order that was presented to me, I would not have time to do anything else but that, and I rely on the attorneys for the proper language, very largely. Of course, there are exceptions to that rule. As to the second question, I cannot remember the date when the order was presented, but it was sometime after the date of this letter, which is dated July 6.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr.

Steiwer, as follows:

On what representations did you conclude that the amount allowed by you was the entire and not a partial fee?

A. The language in Judge Ritter's letter, when he requested me to make a total allowance.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will the managers let me see Judge Ritter's letter?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to present a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question. The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Schwellenbach, as follows:

Please explain the situation as to the attitude of other parties to the suit as to the allowance. You said that due notice to other parties had been given. Did anyone appear and object? Did any other party specifically approve the $15,000 request?

A. I did not state that notice had been given. I said that I was informed by Mr. Rankin that notice had been given to all parties. No other party appeared, no other party or counsel, other than Mr. Rankin.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send a question to the desk to be propounded to the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr.

King, as follows:

Did you understand, when you signed the order for attorney fees, that there was further legal work to be performed in connection with the suit?

A. I did understand that the suit was to be concluded. I gathered the impression that the suit was about ready to be concluded, and that Judge Ritter wanted me to fix the amount of the fees to be paid at the conclusion of the suit. That was the impression that I had.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I submit a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr.

White, as follows:

Did you intend to allow on July 5, 1930, fees for services to be thereafter rendered?

A. I did intend to allow a fee which would cover the entire service rendered and to be rendered by the attorney for the complainant. Whether I was correct or not in my understanding, I do not know.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question to be propounded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the question.
The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr.
O'Mahoney, as follows:

Did you understand that there was to be a division of the fee with anyone?

A. I had no such understanding; never heard of a division of the fee until long afterward.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you have any knowledge, Judge, as to the details of the suit in which you were making this allowance?—A. No; I did not.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that allowances are made—is it the practice to make allowances for conserving the assets and bringing them into these lawsuits?—A. Yes and no. If the bringing of the assets is in connection with a mortgage fore-closure, I have never separated the allowance in any way whatever.

Q. You have not separated it?—A. No. I do not want to be misunderstood. That is a very important service by an attorney and ought to be remunerated—bringing in the assets; but I never separated them.

Q. Did you read this order of yours?—A. Not carefully.

Q. Did you not read it before you signed it?—A. Not critically: no.

Q. When was your attention first called to this order, or to any question about it?—A. I never heard of any trouble about it until the investigation at Miami.

Q. Which started several years afterward?—A. I think the investigation was in 1933——

Q. 1933 and 1934.—A. And the order was signed in 1930.

Q. Did you look at it then?—A. No; I did not look at it then, because Mr. Mulherin, for the committee, had it. I looked at a copy of it Sunday.

Q. Last Sunday?—A. Last Sunday. That was the first time I recall having seen it.

Q. Is that the first time you read it, last Sunday?—A. That is the first time I read it since that time. I glanced over it at the time, but I did not read it critically at all.

Q. Did you not notice, when you glanced over it, that you were saying the fee "is hereby fixed as a reasonable compensation for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for conserving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hand of the receiver"?—A. No; I did not notice that. I did not read it critically, and

I have necessarily to rely on my bar for the language that is in an order.

Q. Did you read the petition applying for it?—A. I glanced through it; yes.

Q. So that you never read the petition closely enough to know what was in it, nor did you read the order which you signed closely enough to know what was in it?—A. I did not scan it critically; no.

Q. Have you ever heard of a $15,000 fee in Florida for foreclosing property with $1,500,000?—A. I would think that fee was small, and that is the reason why I did not critically go into it. His proof showed $15,000, and I thought if that was all they were asking there was no reason for going into it critically.

Q. You just signed it under a misapprehension, then?—A. I may have.

Q. If it turned out that there was a vast amount of work to do, you would expect the fee to be quite large, would you not, in a matter of that kind?—A. Well, that is always a question. Whether a fee is large or small is a matter of opinion. I do endeavor to see that all my attorneys are reasonably compensated and I do endeavor to see that they are not excessively compensated; but I am liable to error.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the hour of 5:30 having arrived, under the order the proceedings of the Court would be concluded for the day; but I am advised by Mr. Manager Sumners, on the part of the House, that the witness is under the necessity of leaving the city tonight.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President I have only one or two more questions.

Mr. ROBINSON. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Court may proceed to the conclusion of this witness's testimony.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge, if there was an order allowing a fee for conserving the estate, marshaling the assets, and getting them into court, and it was in connection with a building and contents that had a first-mortgage encumbrance for $2,500,000, and which was worth even in those times $1,500,000, and the work done in that connection covered a period of probably a year, and at the end of that year all of the parties came into your court with an agreement as to fees, it would not be out of the ordinary, would it, if the order had the affidavits of four reputable lawyers attached to it, to allow a fee of $75,000 in a final decree?—A. I will answer that in this way: In the first place, the amount of the bonds at that particular time was no criterion at all. Some were not worth 10 cents on the dollar. If the property was worth a million and a half dollars, in my opinion the $15,000 fee would be too small, and in my opinion a $90,000 fee would be too large.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I submit a question which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky submits a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. BARKLEY, as follows:

Whether the allowance you made was partial or final, do you know why you were asked to make this allowance and were not asked to make the additional allowance that was finally made?

A. I do not. I know nothing except what is contained in the letter and what I learned long afterward.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. If there was a consent decree, and if all the parties signed it, if the owners of the bonds and every person in interest signed it, would that make a difference?—A. It would depend entirely on who the counsel were who consented to the decree. If 90 percent of the lawyers on my side of the State would come in and agree to a fee, I would accept their statement.

Q. Shutts & Bowen are a firm of very high standing, are they not?—A. Exceedingly high.

Q. Yes. Loftin, Stokes & Calkins stand very high, do they not?—A. Right at the top.

Q. And the affidavits of Bert Winters and E. B. Donnell are attached to the consent decree. You know them, do you not?—A. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the objection that this is not cross-examination but is an argument with the witness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that, with the character of Court trying this case, the jurors ought to be able to differentiate between the real testimony and argument of counsel.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the reason why the Senator from Texas made the objection; he thought he did differentiate, and therefore that we were consuming a great deal of time here as to something which was not relevant.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I wish to make the suggestion and the objection that under the circumstances these questions are not proper questions to ask the witness. He is being interrogated with regard to the standing of counsel who have to appear at his bar. I do not mean to cast any reflection on the judge, as I think he will be able to take care of himself; but I submit that it is not proper at this time, and under these circumstances, to ask the judge to pass upon the standing of lawyers and to say whether or not they are reputable lawyers in an impeachment trial before this Court.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to suggest, if Your Honor please, that I am asking this question by reason of an interrogatory which was passed to the desk, and an answer which was made that the witness would consider the lawyers in the case. I think I have the right, in defense of the respondent, to ask the witness about the lawyers who actually signed the consent decree, and the lawyers whose affidavits accompanied the decree. I think it is proper. If the Court thinks otherwise, of course, I shall abide by the Court's ruling; but I think I have the right to ask the question.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. The point the managers make has already been stated. We make the further point that the inquiry of counsel, the exploration of counsel in that direction, has gone far enough. It ought not to go any further. This jurist ought not to be compelled to appear before any court to testify as to the character of counsel who appear at his bar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be going a little out of the record, perhaps, to ask the judge to testify as to the qualifications of all the lawyers in Florida, or any large number of them.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am limiting the inquiry, if Your Honor please, to the lawyers who signed the affidavits and the lawyers who signed the consent decree, following the statement of the judge that whether or not he would sign the decree would depend upon who the lawyers were who signed it. I am not going to pursue the matter any further, but I think I have the right to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions of the witness? If not, the witness will stand aside.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question propounded by the Senator from Kentucky will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Barkley, as follows:

In passing upon the propriety of a fee, would the fact that it was being divided among those consenting to it have any bearing on your judgment?

A. It would.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions? If not, the witness may stand aside.

Mr. ROBINSON (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I ask that the Court suspend its proceedings for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate, sitting as a Court, will discontinue the impeachment proceedings until the hour fixed tomorrow.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed briefly to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. Robinson, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the legislative proceedings of the calendar days April 4, April 6, and April 7, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

During the impeachment proceedings, on motion of Mr. Robinson, the proceedings were suspended so that, as in legislative session, the Senate might receive a message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announcing that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 536. An act for the relief of Ada Mary Tornau;

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6297. An act for the relief of Leon Frederick Ruggles:

H. R. 6982. An act to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898;

H. R. 11849. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925; and

H. J. Res. 526. Joint resolution to authorize the Librarian of Congress to accept the property devised and bequeathed to the United States of America by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION FOR TRANSPORTATION EMPLOYEES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on unemployment compensation for transportation employees, prepared by the section of labor relations, Federal Coordinator of Transportation, containing the text of a proposed unemployment compensation law recommended to be enacted by the Coordinator, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress for the acquisition by the Federal Government of the Delaware & Raritan Canal

Whereas the State of New Jersey has recently acquired the Delaware & Raritan Canal from the United New Jersey Railway & Canal Co. after abandonment by the lessor, the Pennsylvania Railroad, in accordance with the charter of the United New Jersey Railway & Canal Co.; and

Whereas the Federal Government now owns and operates the reater portion of the inland waterways from Maine to Florida: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

1. That the Governor and Legislature of the State of New Jersey 1. That the Governor and Legislature of the State of New Jersey do memorialize the Federal Congress to enact legislation providing that the Federal Government shall acquire from the State of New Jersey at a cost of $1 the property of the Delaware & Raritan Canal, together with such land, buildings, and equipment as are turned over by the United New Jersey Railway & Canal Co. under the provisions of chapters 139 and 238 of the laws of 1934, subject to the right of the State of New Jersey to reserve to itself or the provisions of chapters 139 and 238 of the laws of 1934, subject to the right of the State of New Jersey to reserve to itself or otherwise dispose of that portion of the aforesaid canal proper extending from the juncture of the canal and feeder to the southerly terminus of the canal at or near Bordentown, N. J.

2. That until by appropriate enactment the Federal Government shall have determined upon the continued use of the canal as a means of transportation or the utilization of its water rights as appurtenant to any other proposed canal, then such acquisition of the canal by the Federal Government shall not entail any obligation to the Federal Government to repair, improve, or otherwise maintain bridges or other structures now existing or which may hereafter be erected over said canal.

hereafter be erected over said canal.

3. That the acquisition of said canal and feeder shall not entail any obligation upon the part of the Federal Government to operate said canal as a means of transportation, but that said acquisition shall be subject to the condition that should the Federal Government at any time abandon as a waterway the maintennce of the feeder and of that portion of the canal dedicated to it, then in that event title thereto shall revert to the State of New Jersey, and that the conveyance by the State of New Jersey shall contain appropriate provisions in detail to that effect; be it further Resolved, That this joint resolution, signed by the Governor and under the great seel of State be transmitted to the President of under the great seal of State, be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as the Presiding Officers of their respective branches of the Federal Congress.

4. This joint resolution shall take effect immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York and vicinity, favoring the enactment of legislation to create a court of appeals for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. COOLIDGE presented a resolution of the Taunton (Mass.) Poultry Protective Association, favoring the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 235) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to expend funds of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for participation by the United States in the 1936 Sixth World's Poultry Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of Winchendon (Mass.) Townsend Club, No. 1, favoring the adoption of the so-called Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by District Lodge, No. 64, International Association of Machinists, of Fall River, Mass., favoring the manufacture of all munitions of war in Government-owned plants operated under civilservice laws and rules, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Chicopee (Mass.) Polish Business Men's Association, favoring the enactment of the so-called Robinson-Patman anti-price-discrimination bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented copy of a report from the committee on commercial and industrial affairs to the executive committee and board of directors of the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, opposing the enactment of the so-called Robinson-Patman anti-price-discrimination bill, or other legislation looking to abolishing price differentials, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3369) providing for the posthumous appointment of Ernest E. Dailey as a warrant radio electrician, United States Navy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1751) thereon.

Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3715. A bill for the relief of Roscoe McKinley Meadows (Rept. No. 1752); and

S. 4119. A bill for the relief of Bernard F. Hickey (Rept. No. 1753).

Mr. WALSH (for Mr. Typings), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4233) for the relief of William H. Brockman, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1754) thereon.

Mr. DONAHEY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1755) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4405) to amend section 11 of the Federal Register Act, approved July 26, 1935 (Public, No. 220, 74th Cong.), reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1756) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 4400) for the relief of Barbara Jaeckel, reported it without amendment.

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE AT BUENOS AIRES

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 248, having to do with the Inter-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires.

The Committee on Appropriations has under consideration the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill, and, under the rules of the Senate, cannot consider an amendment providing an appropriation for the purpose desired unless a resolution is passed to that effect, or by unanimous consent.

The joint resolution, which was unanimously ordered reported at the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee, merely authorizes the appropriation of $75,000 for the purpose of carrying out the convention which the President has called between the United States and the South American countries

I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) to provide for participation by the United States in an Inter-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic in 1936, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 to be used for participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; equipment, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards, entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1936, to remain available until June 30, 1937.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS REPORTED BY FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which were referred amendments intended to be proposed to House bill 12098, the State, Justice, etc., Departments appropriation bill, reported them without amendment, and they were ordered to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

On page 29, line 25, after "Secretary of State," insert "$90,000, together with."

On page 30, line 2, after "1936," strike out "is continued" and insert in lieu thereof "to remain."

Mr. PITTMAN also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred an amendment providing for the expenses of participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, etc., intended to be proposed to House bill 12098, the State, Justice, etc., Departments appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and it was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, as amended, so as to confer the administration and enforcement of title II (packers) on the Federal Trade Commission instead of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The bill has been drafted after consultation with the Federal Trade Commission and with the Department of Agriculture.

I ask that the bill itself be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission concerning the bill be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4455) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2, title I, of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new subsection (7), as follows:

"(7) The term 'Commission' means the Federal Trade Commission'

"(7) The term 'Commission' means the Federal Trade Commission."

SEC. 2. That section 203, title II, of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 203. (a) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that any packer or any live-poultry dealer or handler has violated or is violating any provision of this title, it shall cause a complaint in writing to be served upon the packer, or live-poultry dealer or handler, stating its charges in that respect, and requiring the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler to attend and testify at a hearing at a time and place designated therein, at least 30 days after the service of such complaint; and at such time and place there shall be afforded the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler a reasonable opportunity to be informed as to the evidence introduced against him (including the right of cross-examination), and to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses, under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe. Any person for good cause shown may on application be allowed by the Commission to intervene in such proceeding and appear in person or by counsel. At any time prior to the close of the hearing the Commission may amend the complaint; but in case of any amendment adding new charges the hearing shall, on the request of the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler, be adjourned for a period not exceeding 15 days.

"(b) If, after such hearing, the Commission finds that the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler has violated or is violating any provisions of this title covered by the charges, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler has violated or is violating any dealer or handler an order requiring him or it to cease and desist from continuing such violation. The testimony taken at the hearing shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission.

and desist from continuing such violation. The testimony taken at the hearing shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission.

"(c) Until a transcript of the record in such hearing has been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as provided in section 204, the Commission at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as it deems proper, but only after reasonable opportunity to the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler to be heard, may amend or set aside the report or order, in whole or in part: Provided, however, That the jurisdiction of the Commission shall not include live-poultry dealers or handlers at cities and places designated now or hereafter by the Secretary of Agriculture, pursuant to title V of this act.

"(d) Complaints, orders, and other processes of the Commission under this section may be served in the same manner as provided in section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its power and duties, and for other purposes', approved September 26, 1914."

SEC. 3. That section 204, title II, of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. (a) An order made under section 203 shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which he has his principal place of business, by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the Commission's order be set aside or modified in the man-by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the Commission's order be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such packer or livecoultry dealer or handler will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs

"(b) The clerk of the court shall immediately cause a copy of the petition to be delivered to the Commission, and the Commission shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the complaint, the evidence, and the report and order. If before such transcript is filed the Commission amends or sets aside its report or order, in whole or in part, the petitioner may amend the petition within such time as the court may determine, on notice to the Commission. on notice to the Commission.

on notice to the Commission.

"(c) At any time after such transcript is filed the court, on application of the Commission, may issue a temporary injunction restraining, to the extent it deems proper, the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler and their officers, directors, agents, and employees from violating any of the provisions of the order pending the final determination of the appeal.

"(d) The evidence so taken or admitted, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the irruit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way.

"(e) The court may affirm, modify, or set aside the order of the Commission.

"(f) If the court determines that the just and proper disposition of the case requires the taking of additional evidence, the court shall order the hearing to be reopened for the taking of such evishall order the hearing to be reopened for the taking of such evidence in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its order, with the return of such additional evidence.

"(g) If the circuit court of appeals affirms or modifies the order of the Commission, its decree shall operate as an injunction to restrain the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler and their officers, directors, agents, and employees from violating the provisions of such order or such order as modified.

"(h) The circuit court of appeals shall have exclusive jurisdic-sions of such order or such order as modified.

"(h) The circuit court of appeals shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review, and to affirm, set aside, or modify, such orders of the Commission, and the decree of such court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, if such writ is duly applied for within 60 days after entry of the decree. The issue of such writ shall not operate as a stay of the decree of the circuit court of appeals, insofar as such decree operates as an injunction, unless so ordered by the Supreme Court.

Court.

"(1) For the purposes of this title, the term 'circuit court of appeals', in case the principal place of business of the packer or live-poultry dealer or handler is in the District of Columbia, means the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 4. That section 205, title II, of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 205. Any packer or live-poultry dealer or handler, or any officer, director, agent, or employee of a packer or live-poultry dealer or handler, who fails to obey any order of the Commission issued under the provisions of section 203 or such order as modified—

"(1) After the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition in the circuit court of appeals to set aside or modify such order, if no such petition has been filed within such time; or "(2) After the expiration of the time allowed for applying for a writ of certiorari, if such order, or such order as modified, has been writ of certificart, it such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the circuit court of appeals and no such writ has been applied for within such time; or

"(3) After such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the courts as provided in section 204, shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, or imprisoned for not less than 6 months nor more than 5 years, or both. Each day during which such failure continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

SEC. 5. That section 402, title IV, of said act be, and the same is separate offense."

SEC. 5. That section 402, title IV, of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 402. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, the provisions (including penalties) of sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes', approved September 26, 1914, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary and of the Commission in enforcing the provisions of this act and to any person subject to the provisions of this act, whether or not a corporation. The Secretary, in person or by such agents as he may designate, may prosecute any inquiry necessary to his duties under this act in any part of the United States. The Commission may, by one or more of its members, or by such examiners as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties in any part of the United States."

SEC. 6. That section 404, title IV, of said act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 404. The Secretary may report any violation of title III, title IV, and title V of this act to the Attorney General of the United States, who shall cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay."

SEC. 7. That subsection (b) of section 406, title IV, of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) On and after the enactment of this act, and so long as it remains in effect, the Secretary shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, except in cases in which, before the enactment of this act, complaint has been served under section 203 of title II of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921. The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to enforce compliance by packers with sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, in a manner provided by section 11 of the said act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.'"

The letter presented by Mr. Walsh is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Washington, April 7, 1936.

Hon. David I. Walsh, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Commissioner Garland S. Ferguson referred to me your letter of the 4th instant.

I am enclosing draft of a bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 so as to confer the administration and enforcement of title II (Packers) on the Federal Trade Commission instead of the Secretary of Agriculture. In the draft of amended bill new language added has for convenience been underscored. Since my last talk with you regarding this matter, I conferred with the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, about transferring from him to the Commission the administration and enforcement of title II. Secretary Wallace informed me that he had no objection to the transfer of such jurisdiction and expressed the opinion that he thought it might be in the public interest to do so. Dr. Mohler, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and his assistant, Dr. Miller, stated that they not only had no objection to the transfer of this jurisdiction to the Commission, but said they thought it would be in the public interest to do so, particularly in view of the Commission's work along this line with respect to industrial companies.

The State of Virginia has filed with the Commission complaints strailer to cheare the commission of the property of the commission of the property of the commission of the property of the commission complaints with the Commission complaints of the property of the commission of the property of the property of the property of the commission complaints with the Commission complaints of the property of the commission of the property of

The State of Virginia has filed with the Commission complaints similar in character to complaints brought to your attention by some of your constituents. The State of Virginia complains about concerns not located in Virginia advertising and selling meat and meat food products under the names Virginia, Old Virginia, etc. It also complains about concerns selling hams and ham products under the name Smithfield when such concerns are not located at under the name Smithfield when such concerns are not located at Smithfield, Va. The Commission in such cases has no jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over "packers" was taken away from it by the Packers and Stockyards Act.

Hon. Harry F. Byrn is interested in this matter owing to the complaints filed with the Commission by the State of Virginia, and I am enclosing herein a copy of my letter to him.

I may also state that the enclosed draft of bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act has been approved informally by the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture.

Very truly yours,

Charles H. March. Chairman.

CHARLES H. MARCH, Chairman.

FIRST GRANITE NATIONAL BANK, AUGUSTA, MAINE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3777) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, which was, on page 2, line 9, after "amount",

Provided further, That if the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, is required to make payment to a bona-fide holder upon presentation of said check no. 21874, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,547.83 to said bank, pursuant to the terms of the indemnity agreement authorized by this act.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD SETTLERS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9997) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1936.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, this bill is identical with a bill that passed the Senate on February 24 last, with the exception that the Senate bill contains a second section. I now ask that the House bill be considered and that it be amended by inserting section 2 of Senate bill 3870. I ask for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9997) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1936, which was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar year 1936 should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself or family or to provide for the education of his children, may, upon filing with the register of the district his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons, showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar year 1936, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

Mr. MURRAY. I offer the amendment to which I referred a moment or so ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Any homestead settler or entryman, including any entryman on ceded Indian lands, who is unable to make the payments due on the purchase price of his land on account of economic conditions, shall be excused from making any such payment during the calendar year 1936 upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he has any objection to acting this evening upon the resolution calling upon the Department of Agriculture for certain information?

Mr. ROBINSON. The resolution could not be disposed of this afternoon, for the reason that a number of Senators wish to discuss the resolution, and have so informed me. I apprehend that the discussion would require a somewhat prolonged session of the Senate. I will say to the Senator that personally I have no objection to taking up the resolution whenever there is opportunity to dispose of it.

REHABILITATION LOANS TO STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of order of business 1828, being House bill 11968, having to do with rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill, which the clerk will report by title.

The legislative clerk read by title the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, which had been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the amendments will be considered as having been agreed to, and the bill-

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the amendments ought to be acted on before the bill is passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the bill be taken up and that the committee amendments be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has been given to consider the bill, and the Chair assumed that the amendments would be agreed to. The first amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "years", to strike out "1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, and 1937" and insert "1935 or 1936", and on the same page, line 19, after the word "be", to strike out the word "economically", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to non-profit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized."

other catastrophes, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered, through such existing agency or agencies as it may designate, to make loans to corporations, partnerships, or individuals for the purpose of financing the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of structures or buildings, including such equipment, appliances, fixtures, machinery, and appurtenances as shall be deemed necessary or appropriate by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for the purpose of financing the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood-control, communication, or transportation systems damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, hurricane, flood, or other catastrophe in the years 1935 or 1936, and for the purpose of financing the acquisition of structures, buildings, or property, real and personal, in replacement of structures, buildings, groins, jettles, bulkheads, or property, real and personal, destroyed or rendered unfit for use by reason of the catastrophe, when such repair, construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, or acquisition is deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be useful or necessary, said loans to be so secured as reasonably to assure repayment thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] spoke to me about the bill this afternoon, and I understood that the full committee had reported it unanimously. I am appraised now of the fact that some of the members of the committee were not able to attend the meeting, and the request is that they have an opportunity to examine the bill before final action upon it shall be taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. All who were present voted to report the bill. It is a House bill with very few Senate committee amendments. We had the bill before our committee for some time. The subcommittee reported a similar bill, but action on that bill was held up by the full committee until the House bill came to the Senate. Then we took up the House bill, thinking that was the quicker way to handle the matter, and we made very few changes in the House bill. One change relates to the aggregate amount of loans which may be made under the bill. In the House bill the limit is fixed at $25,000,000, while an amendment proposed by the committee fixes the limit at $50,000,000. The committee have made another amendment with reference to the National Housing Act. I do not think any member of the committee present has any objection to the bill. Of course, there are always some members absent from committee meetings; but, I repeat, I do not think there is any objection to the passage of the bill. No Senator has objected to it to me

Mr. McNARY. I know the matter is entitled to very thorough consideration. Some members of the committee desire an opportunity to look at the bill and to examine its contents and provisions. There has been no such opportunity because, I understand, the bill was only reported today and has not reached the calendar before this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill was reported yesterday. Mr. McNARY. I think, under the circumstances, that I shall ask that the bill go over at this time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Do I understand, Mr. President, that the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary situation as to this bill is that the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Senate gave that consent. Then the clerk was stating the amendments and the Chair assumed there would be no objection to having the bill go through the various parliamentary stages to passage. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], however, objected and asked that the amendments be stated. So the bill is in process of consideration by the Senate at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, we were operating very swiftly, but it is customary, as the Chair knows, that a bill be stated before consent is granted for its consideration; and if consent was granted, it was a little out of order. I think, under the circumstances, the Chair should consider the Members who desire to look into the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the meantime thousands of people are suffering and are in distress. Four or five hundred have been killed, and fourteen or fifteen hundred have been afflicted by severe injuries, so that a good many more will die. Thousands are homeless and are in need of some relief and this is one way of affording it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope it may be possible to consider this bill this afternoon. The bill was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I took up with the Senator from Arkansas on the floor yesterday the question of the early consideration of the measure. Notice was given at that time that the bill would be called up for consideration today.

This is a very important bill to some sections of the country. In one city of my State some 800 residences have been destroyed and thousands of people are homeless. The entire business section has been wiped out.

The bill does not propose to do anything extraordinary but merely to permit these people to avail themselves of loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on suitable security. It is important that the bill should be considered at the earliest possible moment. It was understood yesterday that the bill would be taken up today, and I can conceive of no reason why any Senator interested in the bill should not have had an opportunity to read it. I hope the Senate will proceed to the immediate consideration of

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is not sufficient answer to question one's sympathy with those in distress. The matter of a few hours will not work injury to anyone. It is a high courtesy to extend to anyone to take up a bill under unanimous consent and pass it without it first going to the calendar. I am always willing to cooperate with any Senator, but I must consider those who desire to examine the bill before final action.

With that perfectly frank statement, I suggest that the bill go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a suggestion is made to me by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], who, I think from his statement, recognizes the necessity for early consideration of the bill. The suggestion is that the Senate meet at 11:30 o'clock in the morning, in legislative session, and proceed to the consideration of the bill. Would that be satisfactory to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. That would give opportunity for consideration and study of the bill. I should make no objection to that request. It seems to be reasonable.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session today, it take a recess until 11:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, at which time the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Florida, being the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order that Members of the Senate may be informed of changes in the present law proposed by the bill which the Senator from Florida has just brought to the attention of the Senate, I ask that there be inserted in the Record at this point certain excerpts from the hearings before the committee.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY ON SENATE BILL 4328

STATEMENT OF HON. DAVID I. WALSH, A UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS

Senator Walsh. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are two bills in which I am interested. One is S. 4328 and the other is S. 4396. I should first like to discuss S. 4328, which is a bill relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repairs of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

As I understand the existing law, loans can be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for damages caused by floods, based upon the ability of the applicant for the loan to furnish adequate security.

But I understand such an applicant must obtain his loan through a nonprofit corporation. Furthermore, I understand that there is a serious question if such a loan could be made for damages caused to equipment, appliances, fixtures, machinery, and

This bill seeks to place applicants for such loans under those provisions of law which require only sufficient security and which permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take into consideration the fact that employment will be continued or employment conditions improved if such a loan is made.

Senator Barkley. Has there been any legal interpretation as to the difference between adequate and sufficient security? Senator Walsh. The House committee which had this bill under consideration has already reported it with two amendments. One of the amendments deals with the very subject you are referring to, and which seems to me to liberalize my language. The House provision amends line 18, page 2, by striking out the words "made upon sufficient security" and substitutes in their stead the words "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof."

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation have construed "adequate security" as requiring very much stronger security, a stronger evidence of the soundness of the loan, than they have under the provision of law which permits sufficient security, which is a provision passed by Congress for the purpose of encouraging employment and for making it easier for an industry to get a loan.

Senator Fletcher. One of the main changes in the present law is that under the existing law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to nonprofit corporations. Senator Walsh. That is true.

Senator FLETCHER. They have to organize a corporation and go through that process before application for a loan can be made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This enables individuals and corporations to apply directly without the necessity of that intervening corporation?

Senator Walsh. Exactly. The second is that the loans can be made for replacement of equipment, appliances, fixtures, machinery, and appurtenances, which they cannot get under the present law; and the third is that the victims of the flood can get the benefit of the provision of the law now which industries enjoy and which does not require adequate security but requires sufficient security or, as the House bill says, "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof."

Those are the three changes made in the law. The bill by request has been drafted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and its objective is to make it more liberal or to provide for liberal loans for the victims of the recent floods, to obtain loans upon their losses of furniture, appurtenances, machinery, and appliances.

STATEMENT OF JAMES B. ALLEY, GENERAL COUNSEL, RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Senator Walsh. I think the committee would like to know, Mr.

Senator Walsh. I think the committee would like to know, Mr. Alley, just what change is made in the present law or would be made by the enactment of this bill.

Mr. Alley. The present law is Public, 160, of the Seventy-third Congress, which is a new act which was passed by the Seventy-third Congress which carried out the policies that had been previously established in 1933 during the California earthquake when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to make loans to repair damages caused by the earthquake there. In California we loaned approximately eight million or nine million dollars to repair houses, schools, water, and sewer systems. About half of the money was loaned to municipalities and school districts and the other half to private home owners and owners of apartment houses and stores. apartment houses and stores.

Senator Fletcher. Have the loans been repaid?

Mr. Alley, No. I have not got a break-down of the loans in California, but we have authorized a total, under all the existing acts, of $12,800,000, and there has been repayment of approximately $1,000,000.

Senator Barkley. This bill broadens the language somewhat under which you made these loans, as I understand it?

Mr. Alley. Yes. All of the acts heretofore passed authorized us to make those loans only through nonprofit corporations.

Senator Couzens. Was not that changed when it came to loaning to industries? I thought when we authorized the Federal Reserve banks to make industrial loans direct, if they could not be obtained direct from other sources, we also liberalized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act so that they could loan direct to industries.

Mr. ALLEY. That is right. We can loan to an industry if the

Mr. Alley. That is right. We can loan to an industry if the purpose is to increase or maintain the employment of labor, but we cannot loan to an individual to repair his home. This act will enable the Corporation to deal directly with the individual. Senator Barkley. Of course, the theory of these industrial loans that were provided for to be made by the Federal Reserve banks and by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was that such loans were not to be made to nonprofit organizations but to corporations organized for profit. They are a different type from those loans that are provided for to nonprofit organizations, like municipalities, school districts, and so forth.

Senator Couzens. But prior to that, Senator, we had a provision in the act whereby communities had to form organizations before they could get these industrial loans.

Mr. Alley. That was not in the act; that was a regulation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Senator Barkley. You are not asking any additional funds?
Mr. Alley. No, sir; just authorizing us to use as much as $25,000,000 of the funds we now have. The present act limits the amount to $5,000,000, of which we have already used $1,950,000. So it leaves only $3,050,000. The effect would be to increase by $20,000,000 the amount of funds we now have available.

Senator Fletcher. This bill provides for broadening the purposes

Senator Fletcher. This bill provides for broadening the purposes of these loans also?

Mr. Alley. Yes, sir. The present act limits us to the repair, replacement, and rehabilitation of real property. This bill would include personal property and equipment as well as real property. Senator Couzens. Is there any reason why there should not be a requirement that the applicant should have exhausted his efforts to obtain money from private sources? Mr. Jones and others have testified before this committee from time to time that the nave testined before this committee from time to time that the cry was to quit this Government loaning, and with respect to some of the laws we passed I know that there was a requirement that the applicant should make adequate effort to secure the money from private sources before coming to the Government.

Senator RADCLIFFE. Is not that the practice of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? I have talked with them about a good many matters in the last 2 years. Do they not usually go into that very exercitually?

carefully?

Senator Couzens. They have got some loans down there, and they are still putting money into rat holes to try to save what they have already got in, which is not sound banking from a private banker's point of view.

Senator RADCLIFFE. I understood it was their policy to see whether all efforts to secure private loans had been exhausted first.
Senator Couzens. That may be so, but there is no objection to putting it into the law.

Mr. ALLEY. That is a requirement of law in connection with industrial loans and in railroad loans, but it is not required in these flood-relief loans, or which are largely relief loans. They have all been made heretofore on adequate security with a paramount lien on the property.

Senator Fletcher. Is there any other feature that you would like to discuss? Mr. ALLEY. No. like to discuss?

Mr. Alley. No. I will say to the committee frankly that the amount of relief which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be able to lend in these flood areas under this bill will not be tremendous, because of the security requirements in the act. There are going to be comparatively few flood sufferers who are able to supply any security. The damages will run up into hundreds of millions; but, judging from our past experience, we will not make more than 10 or 15 million dollars of these loans. On the other hand, I would not recommend lightening the security requirements if these loans are to be made by the R. F. C., for Congress has heretofore required security on all loans made by the R. F. C.

TESTIMONY ON SENATE BILL 4396

Senator Walsh. The other bill is a bill introduced by Senator Bulkley and myself, and I will ask Mr. Walsh, of the Federal Housing Administration, to say a word.

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR WALSH, ASSISTANT FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINIS-TRATOR, FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. Walsh. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have a memorandum here which describes the bill concisely, and I shall be glad to elucidate at any point where you would like to have more information.

The purpose of this bill is to stimulate lending institutions to make the loans necessary to repair the damage which has been caused by the recent floods by providing insurance through the Federal Housing Administration of loans so made, if, in the wisdom of you gentlemen, it seems advisable to liberalize our existing act in order to take care of this catastrophe. The provisions of this bill are as follows:

1. The general procedure under title I of the National Housing Act, as now set up by the Federal Housing Administration, is to be used to insure loans for these purposes. No new organization is to be created.

2. The insurance to be granted is 20 percent of the total aggregate amount of loans made by an insured institution for this purpose. This insurance is the same in amount as that in effect under title I of the National Housing Act up to April 1, 1936. It increases for this purpose the insurance granted under title I of the National Housing Act, as amended effective April 1, 1936, from 10 to 20 percent, which is the amount of insurance under the original act.

Are there any questions, Mr. Chairman?

Senator Fletcher. I think we understand it.

Mr. Walsh. 3. A provision is included in the bill permitting a lending institution to apply any unusual insurance reserve obtained by it under its contract of insurance in effect up to April 1, 1936, to any losses which may be sustained as a result of loans made for the purposes of this bill. In other words, although any unusual insurance reserve created prior to April 1, 1936, may not be used to pay losses sustained under the general provisions of title I, as amended, effective April 1, 1936, it may be used to pay losses sustained as a result of loans made under the specific provisions of this bill.

tained as a result of loans made under the specific provisions of this bill.

Senator Fletcher. Has not the date of April 1, 1936, been extended now by legislation?

Mr. Walsh. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but the insurance reserve that was built up by lending institutions since the advent of the Federal Housing Administration, until last night, is canceled, and a brand-new reserve is starting today. Let us say that a lending institution has made a million dollars in loans since we began our activities and has had no losses. That lending institution would have an insurance reserve of $200,000, which is limited to loans made prior to April 1, 1936. This flood bill proposes that for loans made to flood victims the lending institution may tap that old reserve and thus have every incentive to be liberal in granting these loans to flood victims.

4. This bill provides for new construction, replacement, or repair of property destroyed or damaged by floods occurring subsequent to March 1, 1936. Replacement by new construction of industrial or institutional property may also be done with the proceeds of loans not in excess of $50,000. Under title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, effective April 1, 1936, insured loans for new construction are not eligible, but under this flood bill they are again made eligible.

Senator Barkley. We made it possible for transfers to occur from one lending agency to another. Would that be affected in any way? Would it make it possible for outside concerns to make transfers and thereby increase the liability of the Government?

Mr. Walsh. Oh, no. The liability of the Government is not increased. We cancel the reserve of the selling institution and transfer it to the buying institution. The transfer of insurance reserves can only be effective in connection with the sale of notes.

Senator BARKLEY. There would be no danger there, then?

Mr. Walsh. No, sir.
Senator Walsh. Commencing today under title I, there are additional limitations and restrictions placed upon loans?

Mr. Walsh. Yes, sir.
Senator Walsh. This bill lifts those restrictions that become operative today, insofar as flood victims are concerned and allows the liberality prior to that time to continue?

Mr. Walsh. Yes, sir.
Senator Walsh. Only for flood victims?

Mr. Walsh. Yes, sir.
Senator Walsh. Only for flood victims?

Mr. Walsh. Yes, sir; specifically. Senator Walsh. And one of the best features of it is that the insurance is 20 percent instead of 10? Mr. Walsh. Yes.

Senator Walsh. There is therefore more of an inducement for Senator Walsh. There is therefore more of an inducement for private interests to make loans?

Mr. Walsh. Yea they do not have to sharpen their pencils so much in considering a border-line credit risk.

This bill is also designed to permit new construction of property destroyed or damaged by flood, whether or not the new construction is to take place upon the property upon which the original structures stood. In other words, it is desired to permit a property owner whose structure has been destroyed by flood to rebuild on new property where the danger of damage from flood is not so imminent.

Senator Barkley. On property acquired by him subsequent to the flood?

Mr. Walsh. Or if he happened to own it before.

Senator Barkley. It may be that the sites of many of these houses may have been washed away by the flood.

Mr. Walsh. A laundry, for instance, might be located on a river

Senator Barkley. He can buy new property and relocate his place?

Mr. Walsh. Yes; up on a plateau where he is safe. We are not going to permit anybody to move from Massachusetts to Alabama, or anything like that, you understand.

5. The replacement or repair of equipment and machinery which had been installed in property destroyed or damaged by the floods is also permissible.

6. Operations under this bill may continue until January 1, 1937, but may be terminated by the President at any time upon his determination that the emergency situation no longer exists.

7. The amendment to title I of the National Housing Act, effective April 1, 1936, reduces the maximum liability which the Administrator may assume from $200,000,000 to $100,000,000. The possible additional liability necessary to provide the insurance contemplated under this bill was not considered at the time the reduction was made in the amendment to title I of the National reduction was made in the amendment to title I of the National

Senator Walsh. In other words, this flood has brought a new crop of loans that you must deal with?

Mr. Walsh. Yes. We felt that the $40,000,000 of the original $100,000,000 that remained on a 10-percent insurance basis was more than adequate to cover operations up until April 1 of next year, let us say, but we did not take into account the flood, which gives a new picture probably.

For this reason a provision is included in this bill authorizing the President to increase the amount of liability which the Administrator is permitted to incur if it should develop that the $100,000,000 is insufficient.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION, OHIO

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what committee considered the joint resolution?

Mr. BULKLEY. The joint resolution was unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce. It has been referred to the Department of State, the Secretary of State being the chairman of the exposition commission. It was returned with a favorable report, suggesting certain amendments to the joint resolution, all of which were adopted by the committee. The joint resolution has also been approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. McNARY. What amount of money does it carry?

Mr. BULKLEY. It authorizes an appropriation of $275,000. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator tell me what the exposition is to commemorate?

Mr. BULKLEY. It provides for participation by the Government of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held this year at Cleveland from June 27 to October 4. Mr. HALE. What does the exposition commemorate?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is a celebration of the progress of the Great Lakes States. There is no particular historical event that is being commemorated.

Mr. HALE. It is not a centennial celebration?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; it is not a centennial. There is a centennial being celebrated at Cleveland, but the Great Lakes Exposition has a far wider scope than the city of Cleveland.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio whether these proceedings contemplate providing for or establishing the St. Lawrence waterway?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; it has nothing in the world to do with the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution as requested by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator spoke to me a few moments ago about it, but I did not know that it carried an appropriation. I thought it merely permitted the holding of an exposition.

Mr. BULKLEY. I cannot hear the Senator from Oregon. Mr. McNARY. When the Senator spoke to me about it I did not know the joint resolution carried an appropriation.

Mr. BULKLEY. It authorizes an appropriation of $275,-000, which has been cleared by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. McNARY. The inquiry has been made, What use is to be made of the funds, if appropriated?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is to provide for Government participation in the exposition under the control of the commission created by the joint resolution, consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture. They are authorized to provide for governmental participation in the exposition and to spend such part of the funds as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, what is the theory or object of the participation of Canada in this matter, in which it is proposed to spend that much money for a celebration?

Mr. BULKLEY. Canada, of course, borders on the Great Lakes and is very much interested in the exposition. Though nothing definite can be expected before we extend the formal invitation provided for by this resolution, we already have favorable expressions from officials of the Canadian Government and of the Province of Ontario as to their participation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the inquiries and the present situation and the uncertainty of the purpose of the use of the money, I ask that the joint resolution go over. The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

TAX EXEMPTION OF OLYMPIC GAMES RECEIPTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and others. The Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], who is ill, asked me to present this subject to the Senate:

On February 20 of this year the Senate passed Senate bill 3410, to exempt from taxation receipts from the operation of the Olympic Games, and so forth. The bill went to the House, and was returned to the Senate on the ground that it was a bill to raise revenue and under the Constitution should originate in the House. The House, however, passed an identical bill, which is on the Vice President's desk, being House bill 11327.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11327) to exempt from taxation receipts from the operation of Olympic Games if donated to the State of California, the city of Los Angeles, and the county of Los Angeles, which was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of my former attitude, I ask that the bill may go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

RELIEF AND RED TAPE-ADDRESS BY SENATOR HOLT

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by me last evening on the subject of Relief and Red Tape.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the Record, as follows:

On June 17, 1935, President Roosevelt said to the works-progress administrators, "We have to be extremely careful not to make any kind of discrimination. We cannot discriminate in any of the work we are conducting either because of race, of religion, or politics. Politics, so far as we are concerned, is out. If anybody asks you to discriminate because of politics, you can tell them that the President of the United States gave direct orders that there is not to be any such discrimination.

"That applies both ways. It means that we cannot hurt our enemies nor help our friends. We have to and will treat them all alike. In carrying out this work, consider it purely and solely from a human point of view. Do everything you can to prevent the use of political considerations one way or the other."

Has that been done? I have received letters from every part of the United States citing instances where President Roosevelt's orders were not carried out. Political discrimination and favoritism are in evidence.

ism are in evidence.

I doubted that politics was playing such a part in the relief set-up until I called to Harry Hopkin's attention definite and undisputable evidence of a politically controlled administration of the fund in West Virginia. He gave it such a clean bill of health, put on the whitewash so thick, that I immediately doubted the condition of the Works Progress Administration throughout the United States. If West Virginia is pure and has no politics in the administration of the Works Progress Administration, I feel very sorry for the other States that have not been given Handsome Harry's approval.

In your own locality check who has the jobs. Is it the man

In your own locality, check who has the jobs. Is it the man or woman who needs the work, or is it the man or woman who is politically favored?

Harry Hopkins knows there is politics in relief. For him to say to the contrary is admission that he is unfit for the job he has. He knows that many State administrators were appointed who did not possess the qualifications for the job assigned but were named because the high ranking politicians wanted them. Those administrators were given wide powers of appointment.

President Roosevelt further said in a statement that the job of the officials was:

"To put all the people on the relief rolls to work within the

"To put all the people on the relief rolls to work within the coming year."

Has that been done? If you could see the hundreds and hundreds of letters that pour into my office from relief workers who are begging for an opportunity to work, many of whom were not registered between May and November 1935, you can see that this has not been done. The designation of those working for W. P. A. projects calls for their having been on relief rolls between May and November 1935. We should not be interested whether they were on relief in 1935. We should ascertain, Do they need relief today? Many men and women who did not want to go on relief in 1935 and worked with all their might to keep off the Government rolls, have lost their job with industry through no fault of their own and today, because of their patriotism and self-respect in 1935, they are to be punished and their families are to be deprived. Many men and women scraped every possible penny together to earn their own livelihood. Because they did not go to the Government and ask for help in 1935, they cannot get employment in the W. P. A. in 1936.

May I relate an incident that has been called to my attention?

to the Government and ask for help in 1935, they cannot get employment in the W. P. A. in 1936.

May I relate an incident that has been called to my attention? George Sonnewald, married and the father of eight children, was one of those who in 1917 marched off as an American soldier. Today Sonnewald is asking whether or not it was worth it. His wife is confined in the hospital. He, together with his eight children, are facing starvation at their home, all because of the fact that several weeks ago he made the mistake of obtaining private employment and going off of the relief rolls.

Later, when he applied for direct relief, he was confronted with a bulletin, stating, in effect, that once a man leaves the direct relief rolls for W. P. A. work he becomes henceforth the problem of that alphabetical mix-up, and, if he leaves the W. P. A. for private employment, he becomes a forgotten man, whether that employment lasts or not. In Sonnewald's case it did last for 8 weeks. It has been 2 months since he was employed anywhere. He did not obtain any direct relief, and his plight is merely a repetition of numerous others.

The President further said:

"We want in as far as possible to have every relief administrator make every effort to get the unemployed into private industry, even if it means slowing down or stopping some of the dustry, even if it means slowing down or stopping some of the jobs we have undertaken."

Jobs we have undertaken."

Has that been done? I can cite my own State for example. Instead of the W. P. A. Administrator in my State carrying out that part of the President's orders, he took men from private industry, not 1, not 10, but many times 10, and put them on the W. P. A. pay roll, increasing their salaries much in advance of their salaries in private industry. In almost every instance these men were not taken from private industry because of any particular qualification they might have had to assist in the program, but in order to pay a personal or political debt that the Administrator may have contracted in the past, or with the anticipation that their influence could be used to further the ambition of the Administrator and his friends in the future. I placed into the RECORD some of the names and increases of money, and I have many more to put into the RECORD. Salaries were doubled and more than doubled in some instances. While the salaries of the administrative brass hats were being increased, men were being laid off because of lack of funds. The relief workers were the first to lose their jobs, never the ones at the top of the heap, the plumed aristocrats of the political kingdom. political kingdom.

Dirtical kingdom.

Through trick schemes originating in the minds of some of Harry Hopkins "yes" men, we find that he determines what shall be considered administrative expense. I have tried in vain to procure from the W. P. A. the break-down of the cost within my own State. Their excuse is that they do not have enough help to do so, yet the very next moment they say we must create "boondoggling" projects in order to give the white-collared workers an opportunity to have something to do.

when many undernourished children find but little energy in their systems to walk, we find projects set up to teach them tap dancing. What these children need is enough food so that their little legs will allow them to run and play.

Building dog pounds with shower baths, and yet many families living in abandoned shacks.

Teaching mothers over the radio about cooking, and yet many a mother has no food to cook. Projects for laundering uniforms, and yet people without clothing.

They can hunt through the books for the history of the ancient They can hunt through the books for the history of the ancient safetypin, but they cannot tell you how many foremen and time-keepers are on the job. The reason why this information is not given is that Harry Hopkins wants to cover it up. Harry Hopkins, in his braggadocio way, says the records are open. Yes; they are open—open to his own staff. He has a division to put out all kinds of charts, pictures, and tables. He has time for all those kind of things, but he does not have the time to tell you how many superintendents, foremen, and timekeepers he has employed on any project. There has been built around this man a may that he can do no wrong that he could make no mistakes. Over 200 project. There has been built around this man a myth that he can do no wrong; that he could make no mistakes. Over 200 persons have been given positions to tell the newspapers and the magazines that all is well. Harry is sitting on the throne. No one knows how many are employed to manufacture Harry's musty gags and wisecracks. Every move is being made to stop an investigation of the W. P. A. We want an investigation that will uncover the W. P. A. in its true light.

gags and wisecracks. Every move is being made to stop an investigation of the W. P. A. in its true light.

A person complains to Harry Hopkins about the W. P. A. in his locality. Harry Hopkins takes the matter up with the State administrator. The State administrator takes it up with the county supervisor; of course, it is a closed deal. The county boss is not going to testify against himself. The famous investigation conducted in West Virginia—and, indeed, it was famous because it was an investigation only in name—was made by investigators who spent practically all their time with the officials who were charged with the wrongdoings. Many of those to whom they were referred to get information were not consulted, and the few that were consulted were informed that in such a task there naturally would be mistakes and no one could be held responsible for them. When one of the witnesses was telling too much about the political set-up it was necessary to take a recess to allow him to discuss secretly the matter with the W. P. A. investigators.

We need a thorough investigation of the entire set-up. Employees are intimidated and threatened with the loss of their jobs and are punished if they give any information to anyone outside of the W. P. A. organization. The W. P. A. officials are spending the people's money, and certainly a citizen and taxpayer has a right to know where it is going; but Harry Hopkins and his staff of Washington nincompoops believe that it is impudence for anyone to ask where the money has gone.

During the Hopkins whitewashing investigation in West Virginia, I have been informed that the overstaffed supervisory force were told to get out of sight either by going to the movies or by staying at home. If Hopkins is not guilty and his staff are not guilty of the charges preferred against them, the quickest way to prove it is to have the records brought into the open. A man who is not guilty does not mind being searched. We have spent much on the eradication of worms, termites, and insects in plant li

Speaking of projects, President Roosevelt said: "We want them to be as useful as we can make them."

Has this been done?

Taxpayers should know the wasteful extravagance of Harry Hoprapayers should know the wasterul extravagance of Harry Hop-kins' management. Much money is not going to those who need relief. It is going for high salaries, the rental of unused ma-chinery, and for many other items that do not help the laborer for whom the act was intended. An engineer reports to me the following:

On one project the cost of 1 cubic yard of rock amounted to $482 and the sewer line cost approximately $120 per linear foot. Wire was bought for $38.75 per foot.

Wire was bought for $38.75 per foot.

They turned down projects that would strengthen the foundation of school buildings or paint the school that was weatherbeaten and soon afterward approved a project to beautify the school grounds around the building.

One school superintendent writes me the following:

"At one particular school two cooks were employed for $70 per month cooking for 30 pupils and being allowed $4.50 for food per month, which gives you the staggering allowance of 3 cents per day for each pupil, and they say this is a program for undernourished children

Projects are started and not completed. Their only chance of completion can be that the political subdivision would finish the job or funds would have to be allotted from the Federal Treasury.

The argument used by the defenders of Hopkins regime is, "Well, what are we going to do about it? Let these men starve to death because of the mistakes of a dumb politician or because some of the money is not being spent properly?"

It is our duty to see that the people are fed and the people are clothed when this expenditure of money has been appropriated. It is our duty to see that these dumb politicians that Hopkins refers to are not left in control and that the money misspent would provide an example for protection against future repetition of such spending. Hopkins' whole attitude since he has been Relief Administrator is critical and very resentful against anyone making a comistrator is critical and very resentful against anyone making a com-plaint. He does not welcome criticism that would assist, because in plaint. He does not welcome criticism that would assist, because in his superegoistic mind he feels that he can make no mistake. Every dollar that is given for the advancement of politicians or their friends means a dollar less for the hungry men and women of America. What we want is not less relief but a more equitable distribution of the relief fund. Every time one of these $150 or $200 per month political ward heelers is put on the pay roll it means that five or six families are forced to go hungry and be cut off relief. It means that many children are forced to go to the table to find less food than is necessary for their sustenance. It means that many a child will go to school without shoes and without the necessary clothing. clothing.

Let us break down this red tape and this secrecy of the W. P. A. and see what is going on behind scenes. Reeking with politics, waste, and extravagance, it is high time that the people of the United States are finding out how their hard-earned tax money is being spent by a group of men, most of whom no corporation would allow to handle any of their finances and certainly would not allow to determine their policies.

In summing up the charges I have made and have evidence to prove I note:

prove, I note:

(1) That the W. P. A. is loaded with politics.

(2) That the W. P. A. is wasteful and extravagant.
(3) That many worth-while projects were turned down, to be replaced by boondoggling.

(4) That the W. P. A. has not "put all the people on the relief rolls to work."

(5) That the W. P. A. is loaded with red tape, rules and regulations that kept the administration from functioning in behalf of the workers

Our battle must go on. There will be no retreat.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR STEIWER BEFORE MAINE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] at the Republican State convention at Bangor, Maine, on April 2, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

For three-quarters of a century the Republican Party has occupied an important place in the history of the Republic. It is a party of progress and expansion. Under its administration there has been growth in national wealth and extraordinary national achievement; the improved opportunity of the citizens of the Republic is one of the great facts of modern history. Its policies have increased wages and multiplied comforts, resulting in improved standards of living for all classes of our people.

Throughout its history the honored opponent of this party has been the Democratic Party. In these two political groups are the great majority of all the people of the Nation. These two groups reflect the most exalted political purpose. They have maintained the local governments. They have provided courts and schools. In war and in peace they have been and are the Nation's hope and its security.

The paramount political issue at this time may be stated in one and its security.

The paramount political issue at this time may be stated in one question: "Is the retention of the so-called New Deal, as distinguished from governmental administration by either the Republican or the Democratic Party, a good thing for America?" The President has defined certain other issues. In his address at the Jackson Day dinner in Washington the President said:

"The real issue is the right of the average man and woman to lead a finer, a better, and happier life."

No one else believes that the right to live right should be regarded as a political issue. In the same address he restated the issue in terms of political reality. He said:

"* * * the basic issue will be the retention of popular government * * *."

If by popular government he means the right of the people to ernment * * *."

If by popular government he means the right of the people to govern themselves in a representative democracy, I agree with him, but it is difficult to ascribe this meaning to a President who has minimized the power of the people's Representatives in Congress by lodging in the executive agencies the full control of government and by building up the greatest national bureaucracy the world has ever known. Centralization of power in the Executive and invasion by the Federal Government of the spheres of the several States result in administration by Presidential appointees, destroying the people's administration of their own affairs.

There is no valid excuse for existence of any government unless it is good government, operating in the public interest. The opposite of good government is government by politicians seeking personal gain with scant regard for the public interest. Illustrations of politician-infected government for personal gain are found in the looting of various American cities. A conspicuous example is the rule of Tammany Hall of New York. The purpose of Tammany is to make politics pay. Its system contemplates that those who render support will receive a reward. It sometimes takes the form of free ice in summer or free coal in winter. The reward is denied to its opponents. In politics of this kind corruption is inevitable.

The incumbent national administration was inaugurated with Tammany's benediction. The President made Mr. Farley Postmaster There is no valid excuse for existence of any government unless

The incumbent national administration was inaugurated with Tammany's benediction. The President made Mr. Farley Postmaster General. He was the manager of the New Deal campaign in 1932. He is the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and of the New York Democratic State Committee. Under his tireless leadership the methods of Tammany were introduced in the National Capital, and then commenced the great campaign to extend these methods to other parts of the United States. Tammany creed has permeated the organization set up for the relief of the destitute. The sinister implications of its system are made evident by the New Deal political arguments; its advocates urge that the President has bestowed benefits and that therefore the recipients are bound in

The sinister implications of its system are made evident by the New Deal political arguments; its advocates urge that the President has bestowed benefits and that therefore the recipients are bound in honor or in self-interest to reciprocate by political support.

In cases where political support is wanting the administration has threatened Congressmen and whole communities with reprisals and the Withholding of benefits. Has your community a project paid for by taxpayers' money or the use of the credit of the United States? If so, you are told that you are under obligation to the New Deal President. Has a local New Deal politician been placed in charge of relief administration? If so, he becomes a claqueur for the New Deal, and even the destitute receiving Government aid with taxpayers' money are reminded of their political obligation. This Tammany method is nationalized only in part. We hear of scandals in West Virginia and in Pennsylvania. There are hints of corruption and wrongdoing even in your State of Maine. But this is only the beginning. The final depths to which political depravity may go will not be realized in the first term of the New Deal administration. The gravest abuses will occur only if the New Deal tenure is extended for another Presidential term.

It ought to be a warning to America that Tammany looted New York City to the point of bankruptcy. Tammany influences, exerted through the power of Governor Roosevelt, without the excuse of depression, increased the debt of the State of New York by a figure in excess of $248,000,000. In 34 months the Roosevelt-Farley administration has increased the several pay rolls of the Federal Government by over 250,000 patronage jobs and increased the annual Federal pay-roll cost nearly $500,000,000. Of the new appointees 1 out of every 107 was secured by the merit basis prescribed by civil service. I recall that in 1934 relief funds were withheld from the State of Maine after the fall election and when the time had come when it had nothing further to deliver withheid from the state of Maine after the fall election and when the time had come when it had nothing further to deliver in return for such aid. This was part of the Tammany system, which trades favors at the taxpayers' expense in consideration for political support which benefits only the politicians. To check the further spread of political barter and sale under the Tammany formula is a challenge to the good citizenship of this country. If the basic issue is the retention of popular government, as claimed by the President, and if nonpular government many good government. President, and if popular government means good government conducted by a free people in behalf of public interest, the President is on the wrong side of the issue.

What are the Nation's economic problems? Among the many,

two are outstanding:

Restoration of a profitable permanent agriculture. The reemployment of 12,000,000 idle American workers.

1. Restoration of a profitable permanent agriculture.

2. The reemployment of 12,000,000 idle American workers.
The two problems are intimately related.
Farm property, land and buildings, are said to represent an investment of $32,000,000,000. One-fourth of all the people of the entire country are on the farms. This one-fourth of our population in 1934 received about 10 percent of the national income. In 1935 it received 10.6 percent of the national income. A more important fact is that as a whole agriculture income does not pay the cost of production. The problem is complicated by soil depletion and by inability in many cases to secure credit necessary for efficient operation. Unmanageable surpluses make the problem still more difficult. An adequate, permanent, constitutional farm program ought to be the first objective of both great political parties, and, in my opinion, will be the first objective of the Republican Party in 1936. In its effort to meet the agricultural problem, the New Deal has failed. After 3 years of complete control of the Government, the national administration is still groping in the dark. It has yet to devise a permanent policy. Its highest achievement is the soil-erosion idea, imperfectly copied from the Republican platform of 1932. The practical worth of this idea is unproved. Its value to the farmers merely speculative.

I am sure this convention will agree that a national policy cannot be regarded as either just or wise if it permits the American farmer to degenerate into a mere peasant. This will be his condition unless agriculture is made self-sustaining. The following program, as an irreducible minimum, is justified:

1. A Nation-wide land-conservation plan which is both permanent and practicable.

2. A guarantee that the American producer shall enjoy the nent and practicable.

2. A guarantee that the American producer shall enjoy the American market to the extent of his ability to supply that market.

Government aid in disposing of farm surpluses.
 Lower interest rates on farm mortgages.

Let it be our effort to insure that the Republican Party will meet these problems sincerely. They can be solved and ought to be solved without violation of the Constitution; without any program scarcity and destruction; and without any processing tax to add to the cost of bread and meat.

What of unemployment? When the President was inaugurated the United States Census of Unemployment reported over 13,000,000 unemployed. In January 1935, according to the compilation of the American Federation of Labor, the number of unemployed still stood at 13,000,000. In 1936, according to this same authority, the number was in excess of 12,600,000. This startling situation the number was in excess of 12,600,000. This startling situation is made worse by increasing distress among those who make up this great group. On January 24, 1935, in addressing Congress, the President said there were "approximately 5,000,000 unemployed now on relief rolls." It was then his belief that one and a half million of these were unemployables. On this theory he induced Congress to vote nearly $5,000,000,000 for the relief of the three and a half million who were able to accept employment. In a recent message to Congress the President said:

"• • there are at best approximately 5,300,000 families and recent message to Congress the President said:

"• • there are at best approximately 5,300,000 families and unattached persons who are in need of some form of public assistance—3,800,000 families and unattached persons on the works program and 1,500,000 on local and State relief rolls."

These two statements present an ugly truth. They disclose that, in spite of extravagant spending, we have lost ground and at this time the relief load is heavier than it was before the $5,000,000,000 was granted to the President to be used in his discretion for the relief of the distressed. These figures show that in reemployment and relief we at best stand still. The Republican Party will not turn its back on the destitute in those areas where local resources are exhausted, but it will assure the taxpayers that the New Deal system of providing relief on a basis of $180 per family in Delaware system of providing relief on a basis of $180 per family in Delaware and of $1,300 per family in Nevada will not be followed. Above all, the Republican Party must assure the destitute that the money voted for their relief will actually be employed in their behalf and will not be wasted in the cost of a top-heavy bureaucratic administration.

The issue becomes increasingly clear. Let us present our case to the country, including those who are destitute, upon the bedrock proposition that money voted for relief will be used for relief and that it will not enrich any political straphanger of any

The national debt is between thirty-one and thirty-two billion. The debt of the States and other political subdivisions brings the total to approximately fifty billion. Since 1900 the increase in all forms of public debts is 1,500 percent while the population has increased by only 67 percent. Needless, spendthrift addition to this crushing debt is but little short of criminal.

The end is not yet. Federal expenditures are growing; deficits increase. Here is the Bureau of the Budget's record of Federal costs by fiscal years:

1934	7, 105, 000, 000
1935	7, 376, 000, 000
1936 (estimated approximately)	8, 162, 000, 000
1937 (estimated approximately)	9,000,000,000

By June 30, 1937, we see a prospect of a Federal debt in excess of $39,000,000,000, not counting certain material contingent liabilities which must be added but which are not included in the

There is only one way to assure the reemployment of American labor and that is by means of reestablishment of American induslabor and that is by means of reestablishment of American industry. Government competition in business, Government persecution of businessmen, and the hazards of uncertain and instable governmental policies will have to be brought to an end. America must be induced to buy American goods. The American manufacturer and the American farmer are in the same boat. They must row ashore together. American industry is entitled to the American market. Regard for a moment the record of imports and exports in February of this year. The imports exceeded the exports by more than $10,000,000.

If this tendency is permitted to continue, the unemployed will become more and not less numerous. There will be no restoration of confidence until the political obstructions to business recovery have been removed. This means that powers granted to the President which enable him to trifle with monetary standards, to control in a large degree the banking credit of the country, and without Senate artifaction to charge testing notice by the country. without Senate ratification to change tariff policy by trade agree-ments must be restored to the Congress where they belong under the Constitution of the United States. It means also that experimentation by third-rate professors and New Deal theorists must be brought to an end and that the enterprise of our people will be permitted to assert itself in behalf of American supremacy. In this way only will there be a resumption of business and jobs for those who desire honest work instead of make-believe jobs at the taxpayers' expense. at the taxpayers' expense.

In my judgment, the rank and file of both the Republican and Democratic Parties desire most earnestly that America shall con-Democratic Parties desire most earnestly that America shall continue under a free government and a free economic system, but the New Deal spokesmen resist this desire. They would induce the people to continue un-American governmental control for another Presidential term. In behalf of such continuance they urge a number of claims, among others the following:

1. That to repudiate the New Deal is to go back to the depths of the depression and experience again the conditions of March

2. That the depression was caused by Republican mismanagement in permitting excessive speculation which brought on the stock-market panic.

3. That New Deal policies have produced a definite improve-

4. That the New Deal Tariff Trading Act of 1934 will produce a further improvement. 5. That the Republican Party and the Democartic critics of the New Deal offer no alternative plan.

New Deal offer no alternative plan.

Let us take these propositions in order:

The first claim is that New Deal repudiation leads back to the conditions of March 4, 1933. This I deny. In the years 1930, 1931, and 1932 America suffered from the depression, which was worldwide. Had our suffering been caused by the Republican Party in power the conditions here would have been worse than the conditions abroad. The contrary is true. It is generally conceded that world trade was down more than 50 percent, while at the same time our own domestic trade was down approximately 48 percent. If it be true that governmental policy contributed to the depression in the United States, the important question is: Who is to blame? be true that governmental policy contributed to the depression in the United States, the important question is: Who is to blame? In 1930 the Nation elected a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. The present Vice President, John Nance Garner, of Texas, became the Speaker of the House; the United States Senate was controlled by a coalition made up of Democrats and certain Republicans like Senator Norms, who now openly supports the New Deal. This coalition in the Senate and the Democratic majority in the House rendered the Republican administration utterly impotent. The ability of these embryonic New Dealers to block legislation resulted in most serious consequences to the country. legislation resulted in most serious consequences to the country. It would be unjust to blame the Democrats for the depression, which was world-wide in scope, but it is just to assert that those who controlled Congress after its reorganization which followed the 1930 election are in no position to blame the Republican administration for failure to meet the crisis. The New Deal really started in December 1931, not on March 4, 1933.

The second contention is that the depression was caused by Republican mismanagement with respect to speculation. It is my own judgment that excessive speculation on the stock market was a contributing cause to our national disaster, but in this the President cannot escape responsibility. The flagrant abuses were in New dent cannot escape responsibility. The flagrant abuses were in New York, and the power of that State and of the Governor of that State was a more definite and effective control than any that could be exercised by the Federal Government. History records that the Republican administration did make an effort to curb the speculation. It stored the September 1975. tion. It started the Senate investigation of stock-exchange practices and sought remedies against speculative trading. Its efforts were not completed, but the fact still remains that the Republican administration tried to do something and that Governor Roosevelt, of New York, did nothing at all.

Third, as to business improvement: We are all happy to realize there has been a reasonable degree of improvement in retail business and definite improvement in certain selected industries—the one first to mind being the automobile industry. Is the New Deal responsible for this improvement? A significant answer to this question is that, with very limited exceptions, no industrialist and no businessman in America credits the improvement to New Deal policy; and some of the most definite increases in production and in employment are in lines which have been wholly unaffected by any New Deal effort. To make perfectly clear the nature and scope of the claim of improvement, permit me to quote from a recent radio address of Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader in the Senate. He said:

"Records which cannot be questioned disclose the existence of higher business levels during the early part of 1936 when compared to the same period for 1935. The February department-store report of the Federal Reserve showed sales during February of this year were 13 percent above those in February 1935. Steam rallway freight revenues for the year 1935 exceeded those for 1934 by more than $155,000,000. Passenger revenues increased approximately $12,000,000."

To this claim I answer that the most rapid improvement came To this claim I answer that the most rapid improvement came after the Supreme Court invalidated the National Recovery Act and removed the governmental clutch from the throat of American business. A further answer is that in England, Japan, and in other nations, where there is no new deal, the improvement has been more marked than in the United States. The rest of the world, without any semblance of Tugwellism and "third economy", has progressed more rapidly toward recovery than we have. For our failure to keep pace we may blame the New Deal, because we know that America is the most virile nation of the world, and that it nossesses the greatest natural resources and the finest spirit of thow that America is the most virile nation of the world, and that it possesses the greatest natural resources and the finest spirit of enterprise. It should have led the world in recovery. And the final answer is that the progress which we have attained has been attained at the expense of the Public Treasury. Government has attained at the expense of the Public Treasury. Government has stimulated business by spending. The stimulus will continue as long as the spending continues, and when the Federal resources are wasted and gone America will be confronted with the unpleasant realization that the fundamental issue of unemployment has not been met and that the power of the Federal Government to provide for the destitute has been frittered away until the great American Nation is treatly rendered destitute. American Nation is itself rendered destitute.

American Nation is itself rendered destitute.

Fourth, as to the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 1934. Any claim that America is benefited by that act is spurious on its face. Its whole theory is based on confusion. The act recites that its purpose is to expand foreign markets for the products of the United States. To the extent that it has become operative it has resulted only in making an outright gift of the American markets to foreign competitors.

If the treaties were merely bilateral in character, the gift of the American markets would not be so complete. It is everywhere known that previous to 1934 our Government had entered into commercial treaties containing unconditional most-favored-nation commercial treaties containing unconditional most-favored-nation clauses. Under the operation of these treaties the concessions which are now being made in the reciprocal trade agreements must be extended to other nations having a most-favored-nation treaty with us. The net result is that concessions made by the United States are "generalized" so that when made in one trade treaty in behalf of one nation they are enjoyed by the producers of every other nation. The whole procedure is nothing less than a scheme to reduce the tariff protection heretofore enjoyed by the American people, all without special act of Congress, without ratification by the Senate and without warning to our own out ratification by the Senate and without warning to our own citizens. The blow is not softened by the secret processes employed by the State Department in bartering away the tariff protection to which our industries owe their existence.

The execution of these treaties has been delegated by the President to the State Department and has been in actual charge of Dr. Henry F. Grady. In Foreign Affairs, issue of January 1936, in speaking of the trade treaties, Dr. Grady said:

"Our objective is the general amelioration of the world situation." This is a broader and different objective than the "expansion of foreign markets" for American products, referred to in the act. At Riverside, Calif., December 20, 1935, Dr. Grady

"We are to a greater degree than ever before meshing our domestic economy into world economy."

Thus the trade treaty program becomes a sort of a commercial league of nations and the objectives announced by Congress in the have been disregarded in behalf of a nebulous world benefit.
This altruistic but nebulous theory is as mistaken as any other league of nations. It implies too many chances for foreign entanglements which operate to the disadvantage of our people. Common sense and the determined resolution of American patriots kept us out of the League of Nations, and should keep us out of these commercial agreements. The League of Nations, with its military sanctions, stands revealed as more likely to cause than to cure war. The commercial agreements are more likely to prolong than to end depression.

Prior to the Canadian treaty the potato growers of Maine, and many others, submitted to the President written protests against reduction of duty on potatoes in the proposed trade agreement with Canada. The State Department issued a press release April 16, 1935, in which it denied that the administration had decided no, 1955, in which it denied that the administration had decided to reduce the duty on potatoes. As you know, the reduction was nevertheless made. In this press release the State Department said, with reference to the trade-agreement program:

"Its purpose is to enlarge world trade so that surplus products may find a profitable market and not be thrown back on their producers."

Later in the same release, and in order to make confusion complete, the State Department said:

"The purpose of the trade-agreement program is to help American agriculture and industry."

The New Deal theorists thought they could justify lower American The New Deal theorists thought they could justify lower American tariffs in order to increase foreign sales in our markets so foreigners could buy from us. Experience shows that foreign producers accept the advantages of American markets by selling to us and then buy in cheaper markets elsewhere. The combined figures for January and February of this year show that our exports to Canada exceeded our imports by the negligible figure of $319,000, and this does not count the imports of gold and sliver. If these items are included, our imports exceeded our exports for the 2 months named by a figure in excess of $100,000,000. The It these items are included, our imports exceeded our exports for the 2 months named by a figure in excess of $100,000,000. The obvious ultimate result of the existing program is to destroy American trade everywhere and to debase American markets by floods of Asiatic and European goods. As a foreign policy the trade-bargaining scheme is without defense and without hope. Referring particularly to the Canadian treaty, there was no ne-cessity to make concessions in order to stimulate trade with that nation. Although it is true that there formerly existed a trade balance in our favor in amount between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000, in the years 1933 and subsequent years this trade balance 000,000, in the years 1933 and subsequent years this trade balance became negligible. Including importations of gold and silver in 1933, the trade balance in our favor was approximately $5,000,000, while in 1934 the trade balance in favor of Canada was $16,000,000, and in 1935 the balance in favor of Canada was $70,000,000. This situation cannot be cured by tariff concessions which increase Canadian imports of forest and agricultural products. The theorists in the State Department will some day awaken to the fact that in the Canadian treaty the Canadians made concessions on certain manufactured articles which they desired to import, whereas we made concessions in agricultural and forest products in which we already had a surplus. No spirit of levity and no happy buoyancy of mind can laugh away these devastating facts.

And now for the claim that the opponents of the New Deal offer no plan. This claim implies that the New Deal does have a plan. It would be more correct to say that it did have a plan, the important economic props of which were the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., and that when these two acts were overturned by the Supreme Court but little remained of the original plan, and the President, in his desperation, finally suggested that we might boondogle ourselves out of the depression. He had previously likened himself to the quarterback directing the strategy of a football game. In the simile which he employed, a sustained plan is an impossibility, and the President, like the quarterback, withholds judgment in the selection of his next play until he learns the result of the previous play. If we concede that the New Deal is formulated in accordance with a plan, we know it is not the plan upon which the President was elected. The wildest speculators in the Nation would not gamble upon the next move which is to be undertaken.

accordance with a plan, we know it is not the plan upon which the President was elected. The wildest speculators in the Nation would not gamble upon the next move which is to be undertaken. In all seriousness, how can the New Deal claim that its critics have no plan be asserted in advance of the Cleveland convention and before the Republican platform is made? Individual Republican leaders do, however, offer a plan. It is a plan of stability which will come automatically when the country is relieved of the domination of New Deal theorists and when America again embarks upon a definite and practical monetary policy. Stability will come when we acquire a balanced budget, without the continued threat of higher taxes and when we reach the end of insane and destructive "brain trust" innovations. It will come when there is a courageous and fair system of Federal taxation and when the "go ahead" signal is given to American industries.

The Republican plan is a plan of integrity. Its adoption will reintroduce a complete sincerity in the administration of the Federal Government. It means there will be no politics in administering relief and relief work. It means there will be no ruthless cancelation of air-mail contracts, no repudiation of governmental obligations, no abrogation of the gold clause, no defiance of constitutional limitation. A stability and integrity in government will provide restoration of confidence, not as a benefit for the few but for the good of the many. It will result in reemployment of idle labor in industry as a substitute for made jobs at the tax-payers' expense. It will bring expansion in industry and in business, and a great program of replacement and improvement by the railways, the utilities, and the industries of the Nation. It will revive the industries producing durable goods. In short, it will give full play to the natural forces. This plan is not an experiment; it is the traditional American way; it is the proved plan under which our country has led the world and which has made our Nati it has attained fullest success; in the future we have a right to believe that under it the Nation will go forward to new triumphs and that American citizens will again become prosperous, con-tented, and free.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11:30 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Thursday, April 9, 1936, at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord God omnipotent reigneth; let the earth rejoice, let the multitude of isles be glad; judgment is the habitation of His throne. Almighty One, before whose face the generations rise and pass, prepare us in Thine own way for the duties before us. There is something in life so sacred that Thou wilt never fail us. Give us understanding of the things out of which are the issues of life. Assure us, Heavenly Father, that amid the maddening maze of things Thy goodness and mercy are sure and steadfast. Help us to heed the passion of Thy heart, which is a summons to bring our lives in unison with Thy holy will. In humility of soul we are grateful for Him who is now reaching the end of His sinless life and traveling toward the cross of His crucifixion for the redemption of the wide world. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 11849. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925; and

H. J. Res. 526. Joint resolution to authorize the Librarian of Congress to accept the property devised and bequeathed to the United States of America by the last will and testament of Joseph Pennell, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 754. An act to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes", as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States; and

S. 1152. An act relating to the carriage of goods by sea. The message also announced that Mr. Neely and Mr. Norris had been appointed conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, vice Mr. Ashurst and Mr. Borah, excused from service, and that Mr. Hatch and Mr. Austin had been appointed as additional conferees.

THE PRICE-DISCRIMINATION BILL

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, under direction of the Judiciary Committee, to file minority views on the bill (H. R. 8442) known as the price-discrimination bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I may address the House for 35 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 35-minute speeches are uncalled for in this House at any time; that is too long. I have no objection to anyone talking, but on yesterday there was a request for 25 minutes, and the next one was trying to outdo him and asked for 55 minutes, and if this keeps on, we will have requests for an hour and a half.

Mr. STARNES. I will amend my request and ask for 30 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the majority leader, before we grant this request, what the program will be between now and the time the gentleman intends to adjourn tomorrow night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As the gentleman from New York knows, we still have as the unfinished business today the pending tobacco bill, which will probably take until 2:30 or 3 o'clock this afternoon. After that it is the expectation to call up a bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, known as the rural electrification bill. It is quite probable that this bill will consume most of tomorrow. It had been my hope we might make arrangements, in view of the program, to adjourn over Good Friday and Saturday. This is what we have in mind at this time.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is entirely proper under the circumstances to adjourn over Friday and Saturday next and I wish we could get a definite statement from the majority leader that he will not call up tomorrow the Black committee bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not in position to make any hard and fast agreement about that now, because I do not know how long this other legislation will take.

Mr. SNELL. Perhaps it will facilitate the passage of the other legislation if the gentleman will at least intimate that he does not think the other legislation will be brought up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have already intimated as much as I am willing to now in stating that these two bills will take up today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] to address the House for 30 minutes?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, so far as the majority leader is concerned I would like to ask him a question. We have passed most of the appropriation bills. They have been very large and they are coming back from the Senate very much increased in amount and I would like to ask the majority leader if he is going to permit these great increases to be added to the appropriation bills that have already been passed by the House?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In answer to that, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the gentleman does me entirely too much honor. I am only one humble Member of the House of Representatives. I cannot control the judgment of the 434 other Members of the House. I sometimes wish I could control the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but it seems hopeless. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that while he is a humble Member of the House, he ought to be the Member who is going to stand up here against these increases, because he has the authority given him by the House of Representatives to demand that they do not pass bills that cannot be met by the taxpayers of this country, and the gentleman knows that if he had the backbone to stand up here he could hold them down. I think the gentleman ought to say "I am not a humble Member and I have some backbone and I am going to assert myself."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now that the gentleman has classed me as an invertebrate, I am very pleased that the osseous matter stops at my neck and does not run up into my head. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to address the House for 30 minutes?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]——Mr. BANKHEAD. I may say that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] has the floor.

Mr. MAY. I am not going to object to the request of the gentleman from Alabama, but for the purpose of getting an expression from the floor leader I would like to ask a question. In view of the fact that many Members of the House are going to be absent tomorrow and the next day, would it not be fair to allow the rural electrification bill particularly, and perhaps the lobby bill, to go over until Monday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I cannot agree to that, I will say to the gentleman. I am sorry I cannot agree with the gentleman, but we expect to pass the rural electrification bill this

Mr. MAY. If we were without a quorum-

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have other matters of an urgent nature coming up, and I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that, as far as we are able to do it, we want to finish up the program here in the House on the essential matters as soon as possible, and we cannot do it unless we work.

Mr. MAY. We are far ahead of the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But we are not far ahead of our own program.

Mr. MAY. We are far ahead of the Senate, and I think we ought to let up this week a little bit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sorry I cannot agree with the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the pending request to address the House for 30 minutes?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I object to that request.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask that I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, he may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dobbins] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, there has recently come to my desk, in the course of the widespread propaganda campaign being conducted by the American Liberty League, a copy of a leaflet or circular headed "Our New Spoils System." It is a reprint of an article by Lawrence Sullivan, which appeared in the February 1936 issue of the Atlantic Monthly as condensed and printed in the Reader's Digest of March 1936.

Lawrence Sullivan, the author, describes himself as having been "for 10 years magazine and press-association correspondent in Washington." Because of the gross and evidently willful inaccuracies in this article, it seemed impossible that it could have been written by anyone having a responsible connection with news-gathering agencies. I therefore took occasion to inquire among some of my newspaper acquaintances as to Mr. Sullivan's background. Through that inquiry I found that he is peculiarly qualified to write an article upon the subject of hiring and firing. Few men can boast of having been hired and fired more often. After serving briefly and in turn a rather large number of newspaper employers, he is no longer a member of the press galleries of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. Sullivan refers to a list of appointive places in the Federal establishment, which was compiled and issued as a Senate document in January of 1933. He states that in that document there were listed some 33,600 jobs which were soon to be "house cleaned"; and that these jobs were to be made available to State and precinct chairmen on March 4, 1933. He continued with the statement that almost overnight the Government departments were demoralized, even to the highest scientific and professional grades in the Bureau of Standards, the Weather Bureau, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils. Then follows this assertion:

Everyone whose place was listed knew beyond peradventure precisely what his fate would be. Within 30 days the Plum Book had reduced Washington to a veritable patronage stampede; and by mid-February the routine departmental services had come to a standstill.

These statements of Mr. Sullivan which I have quoted, in the instances where they are not absolutely false, embrace as basely contrived a set of half truths as were ever published in any responsible magazine or republished by any mercenary propagandist such as the Liberty League. No uninformed reader of his article could reach any other conclusion but that after the advent of the present administration a complete and ruthless change was made here at Washington in the places occupied by scientific experts in the various bureaus named by Sullivan. When he says that State and precinct chairmen knew these jobs would be available as political spoils—that statement, written 3 years afterward, is equivalent to saying that the jobs were, in fact, treated as spoils. When he says that everyone whose place was listed knew what his fate would be, he unquestionably intended his readers to believe that wholesale changes were made in the places listed in that document-and he certainly knows both inferences are utterly false.

It happens that the individual Member of Congress who is now addressing his colleagues on this subject has had considerable experience with and in the classified service of the United States Government. That experience, and the interested observation of the working of the Federal civilservice laws that followed it, have covered a period of more than 35 years. In consequence, I was convinced that Mr. Sullivan's statements were grossly deceptive. Because of that conviction, I went to the trouble of checking the documents referred to by Mr. Sullivan with the records of the four bureaus named by him, covering all of their positions in the District of Columbia, and I want to detail for your information the astonishing refutation of Sullivan's assertions developed by my investigation.

The so-called "plum book"—being Senate Documents 173 and 176, of the Seventy-second Congress—set out a complete list of all Federal positions not under civil-service rules and regulations, as of January 1933. In the Weather Bureau there are just two places listed. The first of these is Chief of the Bureau, with a salary of $8,000. When the list was prepared it was occupied by Dr. Charles F. Marvin, who was automatically retired on account of age in 1934 after 50 years of faithful and distinguished public service. To his place President Roosevelt promoted Willis R. Gregg, who was principal meteorologist of the Bureau, in charge of its aerological division, and had been in the service of the Weather Bureau continuously for 32 years—entering it under a Republican administration and continuing through the intervening administrations of both parties.

Only one other non-civil-service position in the Weather Bureau at Washington was embraced in this list of alleged partisan plums. That was the place of associate meteorologist and was a specially designated position which had been held for some years by Prof. Sterling P. Ferguson. He left it voluntarily in 1933 to return to his former post with the Blue Hill Observatory at Harvard University. The position terminated with his resignation and no one has been or will be appointed in his place.

In the Food and Drug Administration at Washington just one place was listed. That was the position of principal chemist, a $6,000 position, which was then held and is still held by Dr. W. S. Frisbie.

In the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, the book about which Mr. Sullivan pretended to be so excited, listed three places to which he says "spoils" appointments were to be made without reference to civil-service laws. These were the positions of Assistant Chief, at $7,000; senior chemist, at $4,800; and associate chemist, at $3,300. Two of the men who were in these positions then still hold them. The other, Dr. Charles A. Brown, who was Assistant Chief—was transferred in July 1935 at his own request to another position in the Bureau, and his place was filled by the promotion of William W. Skinner, who was Assistant Chief during the Hoover administration and had long been rendering skilled service in that Bureau.

In the Bureau of Standards this "plum book" lists the position of Director of the Bureau, which, according to Sullivan, was slated to be the patronage of some politician. It was formerly held by George K. Burgess. Upon his death the place was filled by the promotion of Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, the ranking assistant director, who had held that position for many years, and he is still the head of the Bureau.

Seven other positions in the Bureau of Standards were mentioned in the list referred to by Sullivan, and not one of the men in those places has been replaced by another during the present administration.

I believe that the publishers of the Reader's Digest, in reprinting a condensation of Sullivan's article from the Atlantic Monthly, had no knowledge of its utter unreliability. I am not so well persuaded of the innocence of the publishers or editor of the Atlantic Monthly. It has shown a sinister readiness to print articles of this kind.

An unusually perverted and unrepentant attitude was displayed by Editor Ellery Sedgwick, of the Atlantic Monthly, when Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, Director of the Bureau of Standards, brought to his attention gross inaccuracies in Sullivan's article.

Dr. Briggs, on January 30 of this year, wrote to the editor stating that, so far as his Bureau was concerned, Mr. Sullivan's article, which he had just read, contained a misstatement that should be corrected. He told the editor that to the best of his knowledge no member of the staff of his Bureau had any fear at the beginning of this administration, nor any occasion to fear, that he would be discharged in order that his place might be filled with a political appointment, and that not a single instance of that kind occurred. He pointed out, further, that when a much-needed increase in funds available to his Bureau was made at the last session of Congress, following reductions in his staff in the economy program, employees dropped for economy reasons were reemployed, and that all other appointments were made through the civil service—the selection in every instance being based on ability and being wholly free from patronage; that appointments were even made from the civil-service lists for all positions, whether governed by the civil-service rules or not, and that the Secretary of Commerce heartily concurred in his action in this respect.

What did Editor Sedgwick do in response to this explicit refutation of Sullivan's absurd charge that the Bureau of Standards was demoralized at the beginning of this administration and that the positions in the highest scientific and professional grades were made available to State and precinct chairmen? Did he make the apology or retraction that would be expected of a fair-minded journalist with manly principles? He did not. He replied to Dr. Briggs with the admission that he had conferred with Mr. Sullivan and had learned that "spoils" appointments did not fill vacancies in the Bureau of Standards but offered the absurdly evasive defense that any economies realized by reductions in the Standards force were "immediately diverted to 'spoils' appointments in other agencies." That, however, is not what Sullivan or the Atlantic Monthly told its readers. If it had made this ridiculous general claim, first advanced in Sedgwick's letter, that would at once have been recognized as a partisan argument. The article set forth definite and specific charges, which have been found to be untrue in every investigated instance. Sedgwick's new position is that, though not guilty of the offenses specified in their indictment, we should be convicted of the commission of other unnamed offenses.

All through these remarks I have met these unconscionable prevaricators upon their own ground; and I shall do it now upon this last sweeping assertion of Ellery Sedgwick's, namely, that appointments in other agencies were "spoils" appointments.

I have good reasons to know that nothing could be farther from the truth. I live in and represent a district with a population of 300,000, principally agricultural, and in which compliance with the program of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was practically universal. In consequence there were employed in the eight counties of my district in the administration and enforcement of that act a force of several hundred people. Not within my own knowledge, nor so far as I have been able to determine by inquiry among the eight county chairmen of my district, did a single one of these persons receive his employment on a political basis. I have never known the names of one-tenth of their number, and not one is in any degree obligated to me for his position. Although that district gave to President Roosevelt and to me a majority of approximately 20,000 in 1932, I am firmly of the belief that more than half of those employees, probably threefourths of them, were not of my party. I say this in no spirit of criticism of the manner in which the employees were selected. They were selected through the farm organizations on a merit basis, and, in my opinion, have justified the confidence in their ability that their employment implied. You can put in your eye every cent they contributed or were asked to contribute to our campaign funds.

Sullivan clearly implies in his article and in the mathematical calculations that he employs therein that the occupants of every one of the places listed in his so-called "plum book" were removed.

Notwithstanding its fantastic fallacy, the Liberty League's endless prevarication goes 'round and 'round.

After referring to the four scientific bureaus I have mentioned, the Sullivan article, reprinted and distributed by the Liberty League, makes this false statement:

In the case of the District of Columbia government the patronage raid was even more successful * * * the Washington city hall was house cleaned.

Now, the book referred to by Sullivan shows that Mr. Hoover permitted upward of 10,000 places in the government of the District of Columbia to remain outside of the civil service; and, of course, when the Democrats assumed control of the government they were at liberty to put new appointees in every one of these places. What happened? I have some acquaintance among the District employees, and all that I know have held their positions for many years. So I called the office of the secretary of the Board of District Commissioners, read Sullivan's statement to him, and told him my impression was that it could not be possible that even as many as one-tenth of the District jobs had been relinquished by their former holders. His reply was: "Mr. Dobbins, it is much less than that. You can absolutely say that at least 95 percent of the 10,000 District employees whose places were listed in that book have been retained and still hold their places under the present administration, and that not one employee has been displaced for political reasons. The small number of vacancies that have occurred since March 4, 1933, have resulted from the natural causes of death and superannuation and from a very few voluntary resignations."

For some 10 or 15 years there has been published annually a book known as the Official Register of the United States, containing a list of persons occupying administrative and supervisory positions in each executive and judicial department of the Government. In the four bureaus specifically named by Sullivan, there are listed some four or five hundred scientific positions, with the names of the persons holding those positions, and the annual salaries, which range from $1,800 to $9,000. If you will take the last volume of this Official Register that was published during the Hoover administration, and compare it with the last volume published during the present administration, you will find that in approximately 9 cases out of 10 the same persons are holding these scientific positions that were occupying them at the close of the Hoover administration; and if, as I have done, you will inquire of the holdover chief clerks in the various bureaus, you will learn that in each of the infrequent instances where changes occurred, the former occupant of the position has either died, voluntarily resigned, or been retired for age; and that his place, if filled at all, has been filled by deserved promotion, under the merit system, of a subordinate who was employed during a former administration, and has worked up through the ranks to the position he now holds.

At the beginning of the present administration, in keeping with a custom which is time-worn if not time-honored, the former Postmaster General, and each of his assistants, all of whom were politically appointed, resigned their offices. Mr. Farley was appointed Postmaster General, and brought to the office unexcelled qualities of energy and ability for the supervision of this vast business organization.

Of the four Assistant Postmasters General who now help with this stupendous task, three were advanced from other responsible positions in the Department or in the Postal Service—one of the three from the Inspection Service—and each of the deputies who aid those four assistants in managing the four great bureaus of the Department is a trained man selected from its splendid force of inspectors. This inspection force, as I have told you on a previous occasion, is the pride of our governmental service. They are as outstanding in our country as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police are in Canada.

Recently, when a new postmaster at Washington was selected, one of these men was chosen for that high honor. Again, only within the past few days, after a vacancy occurred through the death of the head of the Department's Rural Delivery Service, a rural carrier from the State of Illinois, who had been honored by his fellow carriers as their choice for the head of their organization, was selected to fill that place.

It is the evident purpose of Mr. Sullivan throughout the article in question—and unquestionably the purpose of the Liberty League in giving widespread circulation to Sullivan's false statements—to smear Postmaster General Farley and to make it appear that he was responsible for offenses which, as I have shown you, were never even committed. I want to say to you with all of the earnestness at my command that anyone who is really interested in promoting efficiency in government and recognition of merit in connection with it will do well to study and to emulate the record of our present Postmaster General and of the Post Office Department under his administration.

All of these men thus promoted from the ranks of the postal inspection service have had long and continuous careers in the Postal Service and received their promotions on the basis of merit, efficiency, and faithful service.

You may scan the record of every Postmaster General as far back as records go, and you will not find the equal of the present one in the matter of promotions based on merit, nor will you find any previous administration of that great Department approaching the record of the present one for efficiency. [Applause.]

No one will need to expend much effort to learn how baseless are all these studied assaults upon our great Postmaster General, or to discover what lies back of their reckless promulgation. He will find that our splendid leader in the White House is the real target of the attacks, and that the incentive in every instance is either rank partisanship or blind prejudice. Only that can account for the existence of such a weird and grossly misnamed organization as the American Liberty League. It matters little to men of the type composing that organization that, without exception, they are materially in a far better position than they were when they were whining for help in 1933. They manifest the same type of vicious ingratitude exhibited by the legendary serpent whose frozen body was thawed in the warmth of its benefactor's bosom.

We have helped them get rid of great economic burdens; but no helpful legislation nor any humanitarian administration can either improve their mentality or remove their prejudices.

I remember when a spokesman of the great common people said of Grover Cleveland, "We love him for the enemies he has made." [Applause.] In contrast, these spoiled plutocrats, viewing with despair the sincere affection of the common people for their humanitarian President, have become rabidly reckless in their frustrated purposes. Embittered and dismayed by the vanishing of undeserved special privilege, the autocrats and their satellites unceasingly chant their song of hate. They hate Roosevelt. They hate him for the friends he has made. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RABAUT). Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The motion was agreed to.

P. W. A. OPERATIONS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I have just introduced House Joint Resolution 564, which provides for an appropriation of $700,000,000 to continue P. W. A. projects throughout the country. This administration now has a large number of approved applications but have not the required funds to allocate for same. It is estimated that about $700,000,000 can be economically and wisely used by this organization during the next 12 to 15 months. This amount, it is believed, will take care of the projects which have been approved by the State Public Works Administration engineer, the State P. W. A. administrator, and the Washington P. W. A. officials.

These projects have been selected by the local communities, have passed examination as to their economical and financial soundness and engineering feasibility and the general desirability of such projects. They are for schoolhouses, courthouses, street improvements, sewer improvements, and various other local enterprises which are needed and favored by the local communities throughout the country.

The expectation of course is that the usual requirements heretofore existing will apply in this $700,000,000 appropriation. The Federal Government will contribute 45 percent toward the general cost and the local community the other 55 percent. This 55 percent will be a loan by the Federal Government, but, of course, such loan will be based upon adequate security as has been the practice heretofore. The fact is that the P. W. A. has lost no money in the handling of securities put up by the various local communities on projects heretofore allowed.

One of the most beneficial agencies of the Government during the past 3 years has been the P. W. A. It has relieved unemployment throughout the country and has left the American people permanent improvements of general benefit to practically every community in the country. More than half of the funds heretofore expended by the P. W. A. have been spent for the purchase of material. However, about 70 percent of the cost of these materials has gone directly into the hands of labor. Both skilled and unskilled labor have received their portion of these funds and the country has in turn realized the relief thus given to the unemployed.

Mills, factories-in fact, all manufacturing concerns-have shared in the benefits of the general P. W. A. program. This activity is disseminated in every community throughout the country, and thus has relieved the unemployment burden in all sections of the country. There is no doubt as to the wisdom of appropriations for this purpose, and I am very hopeful that my colleagues will join in an effort to bring about an appropriation before our adjournment which will at least take care of the projects throughout the country which have been approved and are now in the hands of the P. W. A. awaiting the allocation of funds. My own State has a large number of such projects, and I know that every State in the Union has a great number of approved projects which are awaiting further appropriations. In fact, in many instances the local requirement has already been met in every respect, in many instances by direct vote of the people in bonding themselves to raise the local 55-percent contribution.

Time will not permit further discussion of the subject, but I urge your favorable consideration of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

TOBACCO COMPACTS BETWEEN THE STATES

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12037) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced, providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12037, with Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kerr].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, when the United States Supreme Court declared some portions of the A. A. A. Act unconstitutional, the outstanding reason for this adverse decision was that the Federal Government had undertaken through that act to control the production of certain commodities, and in the opinion rendered in the case the Court said that it was not within the province of the Federal Government to regulate crop production, but that that could be done through police regulations within the States themselves. The proponents of this compact bill have given good reason why all tobacco areas are interested in securing the consent of the Federal Government to carry out a compact among the tobacco States through which they can control or regulate the production of different types of tobacco. This House can well understand why the tobacco area is interested in this measure. The price figures for the last 3 years which the farmers have received for their tobacco will convince anyone that a measure of this kind is imperative for the welfare of those 400,000 farmers of the Nation who are engaged in the cultivation of tobacco. The crop of 1932—and I refer to the flue-cured area—brought the farmers $42,000,000. That is conceded by all who know something about this industry to be a starvation price for this great commodity. Under the rules and regulations of the A. A. A. Act, whereby a parity price was fixed between the producer and the industry, the growers were able to get for the tobacco the next year, 1933, for practically the same amount of tobacco, $112,000,000, an increase of 300 percent in the value of the product. Then this Congress, through a regulatory and enabling act, known as the Kerr-Smith Act, which had for its purpose protection of the contracting grower under the A. A. A. Act, succeeded in cutting down the crop of tobacco for the year 1934 to 557,000,000 pounds, about 200,000,000 pounds less than the crop of 1933, and this 1934 crop brought the farmers of the flue-cured area $160,000,000. We produced in 1935 more than 100,000,000 pounds of tobacco above the industry's need, and produced a crop in excess of 800,000,000 pounds of tobacco, for which we received the price of $162,000,000.

Not only has the tobacco industry been a great revenue producer for this country but our tobacco manufactured in foreign countries has produced an immense revenue for those nations who engage in this industry. The British Empire levies a tax of $2.39 on every pound of tobacco imported from the United States into the British Empire, and before a hogshead of American tobacco is allowed to be carried to a cigarette factory in England the Government of that country collects $1,900 out of the manufacturer. This hogshead of tobacco brought the producer in the United States not over $200. All foreign nations, except those who are engaged in the manufacture of tobacco themselves, collect a large import duty from American tobacco.

I would not be wrong if I say that the farmers of the flue-cured tobacco area, under the regulation and laws provided by the Government through the A. A. A. and Kerr-Smith Acts, which we intend to extend under this compact bill, through State regulations, have received in the last 3 years more than $300,000,000 profit in the tobacco area referred to as the flue-cured area. Not only has it been illustrated to you here by the proponents of this bill what the tobacco industry is worth to this Government, but it may be interesting for me to tell you that in the last 5 years the export value of tobacco, which has consisted of more than 300,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually, has cast the weight in favor of the business of this Nation. But for the fact that this Nation has sent out of this country more than 300,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually in the last 5 years, the imports into the country would have exceeded in value our exports; the balance in trade has been kept in our favor.

Now for a few moments let me address myself to the legal side of this question, because I know that is the perplexing question which comes into the minds of my colleagues. It is not necessary for me to state that a compact of States can be consented to or authorized by a Federal resolution.

This is essential. It cannot be done otherwise. This resolution can be passed even before the States enter into the compact, or after the States enter into the compact. There has been some controversy about that, but I cite the case of Virginia against Tennessee, which was decided in One Hundred and Forty-eighth United States Reports, page 221, where the Court said—I will just read a paragraph from the opinion.

The Constitution does not state when the Congress shall consent to compacts, whether it shall precede or follow a compact made, or whether it shall be expressed or implied, in many cases the consent will precede the compact or agreement. But where the agreement relates to a matter which could not well be considered until its nature is fully developed, it is not perceived why its consent may not be given subsequently.

Then as to whether or not we are trespassing upon the law in creating a compact to control production in this industry, let me read to you from an opinion by Chief Justice Fuller rendered 36 years ago, when the Court had under consideration the Wilson Act. He said this, and this has never been overruled, so far as I can find, and I have searched diligently. He said:

The power of the State to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity, is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the General Government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

I wish to call your attention especially to this opinion, the paragraph which I have just read; it was a statement made in the discussion of the great case In Re Rahrer (140 U. S. 554). It held that the State could "impose restraints and burdens upon any person or property in the conservation and promotion of its prosperity." This is the clear purpose of the compact bill proposed in this resolution under consideration. Without some way of controlling the production of tobacco in this Nation, those who produce this commodity cannot hope to be prosperous. Overproduction is ruinous, and unless we in some way remove the hazard of overproduction which hangs over those farmers who apparently cannot, without Government or State aid, curtail their production, this great industry cannot prosper.

I desire to present to you upon the authority of States to enter into agreements or compacts by consent of the Federal Government excerpts from the following opinions of the United States Supreme Court:

That States may enter into agreements and compacts is "a doctrine universally recognized in the law and practice of nations. It is a right equally belonging to the States of the Union, unless it has been surrendered under the Constitution of the United States. So far from there being any pretense of such a general surrender of the right, that it is expressly recognized by the Constitution and guarded in its exercise by a single limitation, requiring the consent of Congress. The Constitution declares 'no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State', thus plainly admitting that with such consent, it might be done; and in the present instance, that consent has been given. The compact, then, has full validity, and the terms and conditions of it must be equally obligatory upon the citizens of both States" (Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. 209).

"If Congress consented, then the States were in this respect restored to their original inherent sovereignty, such consent, being the sole limitation imposed by the Constitution, when given, left the States as they were before, as held by the Court in Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. 209" (Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. at p. 724).

"The terms 'agreement' or 'compact' taken by themselves are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all forms of stipulations, written or verbal, and relating to all kinds of subjects; to those to which the United States can have no possible objection or have any interest in interfering with, as well as to those which may tend to increase and build up the political influence of the contracting States, so as to encroach upon or impair the supremacy of the United States or to interfere with their rightful management of particular subjects placed under their entire control" (State of Virginia v. State of Tennessee, 148 U. S., at p. 518).

This Congress has authorized more than 20 State compacts; many of these compacts were authorized before the State laws were passed and many of them confirmed after the passage of State laws. This resolution is in no sense new legislation. There has been more than 20 cases before the United States Supreme Court arising under these com-pacts of States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has uniformly held that such agreements and compacts can be made by any two or more States in respect to those powers which have never been delegated to the Federal Government and which involve State sovereignty.

Joint resolution granting consent of Congress to the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut to enter into a compact for the creation of an interstate sanitation district, approved August 27, 1935.

Joint resolution consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas in the States of Texas, California, New Mexico, and recommended for ratification by Representatives from the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, and since ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Illinois, and Texas, approved August 27, 1935.

Joint resolution authorizing the States of New York and Vermont to enter into an agreement relative to the creation of Lake Champlain Bridge Commission, approved August 23,

Compact between Pennsylvania and New Jersey authorizing the creation of the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission.

Joint resolution giving consent of Congress to States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States for the boundary waters between two or more of said States, approved March 4, 1921.

Consent of Congress given any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for the cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and for other purposes, approved June 6, 1934.

An act consenting to States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota to enter into compacts for the improvement of navigation and for the prevention of floods, approved August 8, 1917.

An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State for the purpose of watersheds of navigable streams, approved March 1, 1911.

Compact of the States of New York and New Jersey by which the port facilities of New York Harbor are governed.

Compact between the States of Washington and Oregon for the purpose of establishing the fishing rights with reference to the Columbia River.

Compact relative to water rights of the Colorado River as a result of the erection of Boulder Dam, involving seven States.

Compact authorizing New England, New York, and Pennsylvania to agree upon the establishment of wages, hours, and working conditions of laborers.

It will be of historical interest to know that the first State compact ever proposed on this continent was between the Colonies of Virginia, Maryland, and (Albemarle) which was evidently then a part of North Carolina. This compact passed in 1866 and had for its purpose the regulation of the production of tobacco in the Colonies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes, which shall not be taken out of the time provided under the rule. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time cannot be changed by the Committee of the Whole. The time is fixed under the rule.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, the tobacco growers of this country are facing another serious crisis. This is nothing new to tobacco growers. I recall that I saw the great burley crop of 1919 sell for a season average of $32.36 per hundred pounds. The following year the price dropped to $13.37, with all the consequent disaster, bankruptcy, poverty, suffering, and despair throughout tobacco-growing sections. After a measure of prosperity returned, growers enjoyed for a few years a living price for their principal money crop. Then we saw the entire 1931 crop of burley drop to $8.63. Again we were face to face with a serious situation that brought back unhappy memories of conditions that had prevailed in other years when the tobacco crop had sold for much less than the cost of production. Then the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Kerr Tobacco Act brought hope of better conditions and that hope became a reality to growers when they found as a result of these measures that they were able to pay debts and provide some of the comforts of life for themselves and their families. A better price for burley tobacco during those 3 years brought improved living conditions and benefited every business and every person in the tobacco sections. The entire 1935 crop sold for an average of $19.05. The Supreme Court held the Agricultural Adjustment Act invalid, in consequence of which there are indications of a large increase in the next burley crop. Now we are face to face with another situation similar to those with which we have been confronted so many times in the past.

When that Court decision was rendered, producers of many other important farm commodities also faced a serious crisis. It is hoped and expected that the Soil Conservation Act will in a large measure solve the problem of those commodities. We joined with you in passing the Soil Conservation Act. Our tobacco pays into the Federal Treasury the half billion dollars appropriated to finance the entire program inaugurated by the Soil Conservation Act for the benefit of all your farm products. We hope it will solve your problem. It will not solve our problem. Now we come to you and ask you to give us nothing. We do not ask you to confer, or attempt to confer, any power on any State, but simply to grant the consent of the Congress that our tobacco States, if they wish, may form compacts, under the Constitution, to attempt to solve their own problem in the exercise of their own inherent power as sovereign States. We think our request is fair. The question is, Will you withhold from us that consent?

PRODUCTION CONTROL ONLY PROTECTION

Mr. Chairman, we have tried many methods of handling the tobacco question. We have had cut-outs; we have had pools. Experience has taught us that the only way by which the price of tobacco can be protected is by production control. We have learned that lesson. We know that if we raise too much tobacco we cannot avoid the inevitable results of the immutable law of supply and demand. Our highest Court has decreed that the Federal Government cannot control production but that if it can be controlled the power to control it lies only in the State governments. In action by the States lies our only hope. We believe that the States in the exercise of the police power inherent in the sovereignty of the States can control production. But one State acting alone cannot make control effective. The control must exist throughout the territory producing the vastly major portion of the type of tobacco in question. To make it effective the States producing that type of tobacco must cooperate. The States could act separately, but we are convinced that to make the plan truly effective and beneficial it is necessary to maintain crop control through State compacts. We come, therefore, and ask the consent of Congress that our States may enter into such a compact, with full confidence of its constitutionality in view of a long line of decisions by the Supreme Court.

NO COMPULSION

There is no compulsion in this bill. There is no attempt to force this plan on the States, nor to dictate that they shall adopt this plan. The bill merely authorizes such a compact and offers them the opportunity if they wish to avail themselves of the plan to protect the price of their principal money crop.

PROSPECTS OF BURLEY COMPACT

The flue-cured compact is a foregone conclusion. As to burley I do not know, but I do know that a serious effort is being made by serious-minded, forward-looking, experienced, well-informed tobacco growers in the burley section of Kentucky to have a burley compact adopted in time to handle the 1936 crop. Today at Lexington, Ky., the largest loose-leaf tobacco market in the world, in the district which I have the honor to represent, representatives selected by growers of 26 burley counties are in session making plans for a Statecontrol act similar to the Virginia act and for a burley compact. They have been in session frequently during the past 2 weeks and have communicated with me several times. Some of them have told me that the Governor of Kentucky has already indicated his willingness to include the consideration of a State-control act, essentially the same as the Virginia act, in a call which he proposes soon to make for a special session of the general assembly. If such an act is passed, and our sister State of Tennessee will take similar action, then we will have a burley compact for this year's crop embracing Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and North Carolina.

SHOULD INCLUDE ADDITIONAL STATES

Members of the Burley Growers' Committee, now meeting at Lexington, have advised me also that they contemplate that the Kentucky Act will provide for the inclusion, insofar as crops in subsequent years to 1936 are concerned, of the potential burley-producing States of West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri. I understand that an amendment will be offered to this bill today, and I hope it will be adopted, whereby, if those States join in the compact for 1937 by enacting substantially the Tobacco Control Act, it will be unnecessary for them to come back to Congress for ratification. The situation is this, that if Kentucky and Tennessee enact the control law this year, a compact will exist between Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and North Carolina to control the burley crop for 1936. A compact in 1937, embracing Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri, will include practically all of the burley-producing and known potentially burleyproducing territory. Those eight States were included in the original burley compact authorization bill which I introduced in the House February 6, 1936.

Mr. Chairman, contrary to the wishes and judgment of a number of well-informed Members of this House, the Committee on Agriculture eliminated from this bill what were believed to be the only legitimately controversial questions, those involving the question of interstate commerce. Confident of the constitutionality of the compact plan, relying on a number of decisions of our highest Court for that conviction, we were surprised that the gentlemen of the minority undertook apparently to make political capital out of the present plight of American tobacco growers. May we express the hope that our friends across the aisle will withdraw their opposition to this effort which we are making in behalf of 400,000 American tobacco growers, patriotic citizens whose sole purpose is the opportunity, in an orderly, constitutional manner, to protect the price of their major product, the price of which is the measure of their purchasing power and the foundation of their prosperity?

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, at 9 o'clock on the evening of January 3 last, the President of the United States in an address not so much on the state of the Union as on the state of the New Deal, and delivered not so much to the Members of Congress as to the boys out at the forks of the creeks and the crossroads, very grimly and determinedly informed us that this administration would not retreat but would advance. Just a month after uttering those words the administration did retreat, and he sent a special message to this House asking the Members of Congress to repeal three acts—the Cotton, Potato, and Tobacco Control Acts—which this administration had previously urged the very same Members to enact into law.

Notwithstanding the fact the N. R. A. was declared unconstitutional, a skeleton N. R. A. was set up and for many months thousands of employees of the old bureau remained on the public pay rolls. After the A. A. A. was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court thousands of employees in this alphabetical agency remained and still remain on the pay roll. A short while ago the Members of this House voted for the camouflage Soil Conservation Act, which in reality is a crop-control act, which was nothing more than a stubborn refusal to admit the failure of the old A. A. and an attempt to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court; and today this spurious, specious legislation is brought in, which is a subtle mixture of subterfuge and sophistry. It is nothing more than another one of the numerous, deliberate, and insidious attempts, if you please, silly and idiotic in my opinion, to repeal the laws of nature and to substitute the edicts of man. I trust the time will arrive eventually when the Members of this House will realize that artificial legislation such as this is just as futile and foolish as would be legislation to repeal the law of gravitation or to prohibit a tornado such as the one which unfortunately but unavoidably recently visited the Southland.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill is enacted into law a dangerous precedent will become established whereby a few States can control any particular commodity they produce, whether it be tobacco, fruit, sugar beets, or some other product of the farm. Any form of compact or agreement which, in my humble but honest opinion, amounts to collusion that would tend to foster and encourage monopoly would be a violation of the antitrust laws and would penalize the many to take care of the few.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHORT. My time is limited, but I yield briefly.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman appreciate the fact that the congressional consent sought by this act can be withdrawn at any moment there is an attempt made by any State to abuse the power granted?

Mr. SHORT. That may be true; but you are splitting frog hairs when you draw a distinction between consent that is given by Congress and Federal control. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but I want to point out the fact that this act goes even farther than the old A. A. A., because it makes compliance compulsory.

It is contemplated that each one of the State legislatures of the few interested States besides Virginia will enact a law similar to that drawn in the great Commonwealth of the Old Dominion State. I should like to read section 19 of the Virginia act that imposes a penalty on those individual growers or producers of tobacco who willfully violate the provisions of that law. It says in section 19:

Any person willfully selling or buying or reselling, redrying, or conditioning, or otherwise processing, tobacco of any kind harvested in any crop year for which a State quota and individual farm quotas have been established for such kind of tobacco, not covered by marketing certificates or resale certificates issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, and anyone willfully participating or aiding in the selling or buying or reselling, redrying, conditioning, or processing of any such tobacco, or any person offering for sale or selling any tobacco except in the name of the owner thereof, shall forfeit to the State a sum equal to three times the current market value of such tobacco.

Section 20 makes it a misdemeanor and subjects the violator to a fine of $10 for the first offense and $25 for each subsequent offense.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this is nothing more nor less than a clever attempt to regiment the American farmer. A short time ago I pointed out on the floor of the House that when a boy I used to sprinkle corn along the lawn to entice chickens to a pen, only to wring their necks after I got them in it. Often I have gone into a field with an ear of corn in my left hand in front of me and with a halter in my other hand behind me. With that sop and with that ear of corn I enticed the horse until I got the halter on him. After I got him in the harness and the collar rubbed his shoulder sore and the traces wore all the hair and hide off his sides he did not like so well this enticement or sop which I had handed out to him.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the worst provisions of this bill are found in section 9, subsection (g), at the top of page 10, which states as follows:

The action of any officer, employee, or agent in determining the amount of and in making any payment authorized to be made under this section shall not be subject to review by any officer of the Government other than the Secretary of Agriculture.

In other words, the Comptroller General of the United States will have no authority or jurisdiction whatever to check the amounts of these benefit payments. I want to point out to the Members of the House that only last Sunday night the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which had to be wormed out of him, informed us that one Florida sugar corporation under the old A. A. A. had received a total of $1,067,665 in three checks. A Hawaiian sugar producer got a single check for $470,313, and in all will receive $1,022,047.87. A sugar grower in Puerto Rico was paid $961,064.

Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering what huge and vast sums have been paid to the cotton, wheat, and corn-hog producers of this country. I am wondering how many benefits will be paid the tobacco growers of this Nation by these men who are attempting to resurrect a skeleton whose bones are rattling this day.

The conclusion of this bill, section 12, states that the Secretary shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I have great sympathy for the tobacco growers. I know the huge sum of taxes paid by the tobacco industry of this country in the State of North Carolina, but, Mr. Chairman, this is bad and vicious legislation which turns over to Czar Wallace complete authority to regulate in his omnipotent, infallible, impeccable, and flawless wisdom the growing not only of tobacco but will establish a precedent that will lead to the control of the production of every crop in every section of this country, setting class against class and section against section. It is unsound, in my opinion, unconstitutional and un-American, and should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri seems to be greatly disturbed over an honest effort on the part of the Congress to improve the condition of the tobacco growers of this country. If the gentleman only knew anything about the conditions which prevailed in the tobacco districts of this country prior to the adoption of what is known as the A. A. A. I do not believe he would have made the speech that he just delivered.

Mr. Chairman, in 1932 all the tobacco growers in America only received $107,000,000 for every stalk of tobacco raised in this country. That is not all. In the same year the four large tobacco companies in America made in net profit over $110,000,000 and paid out in dividends to their stockholders in cash over $79,000,000. The tobacco price level had fallen to around 7 cents per pound, and every tobacco grower in America was headed for the poorhouse. Now, the gentleman says that the A. A. A. came along and regimented the tobacco growers of America. Let me tell you what it did. It increased the price level of tobacco, in less than 2 years, from 7 cents to around 20 cents per pound. It increased the cash income of the tobacco growers around $150,000,000. If increasing the cash income of the tobacco growers of America from $107,000,000 in 1932 to around $250,000,000 in 1934 is regimentation, then I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that what the tobacco growers in America need to- affirmed yesterday by our good friend, the gentleman from day more than anything else is a little more of the same kind of regimentation. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What type of regimentation did the Hoover Farm Board give the farmers of America, including the tobacco growers?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The Hoover Farm Board ruined my farmers, not only my tobacco farmers but my cattle raisers, my wheat growers, and my corn growers. We do not want any more "Hooverism" down in the Ninth District of Virginia. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman from Virginia is familiar with the peculiar system of marketing tobacco, and last year the gentleman was the author of a bill, which became law, providing better protection for the growers in the marketing of their tobacco. In addition to other reasons which have been advanced for the passage of this proposed legislation to make it possible for the States, through compacts, to control the production of certain types of tobacco, is it not true that tobacco is a peculiar commodity, in that there are relatively few buyers of tobacco, and therefore, if there is a large surplus of tobacco, the price goes down relatively more than it would in the case of cotton or wheat, where there are a large number of buyers of those commodities?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, no doubt this bill will be passed before we adjourn this afternoon, it will then go over to the Senate, and what I have to say about it is spoken quite as much in consideration for the tobacco growers as in criticism of the bill. I have very serious doubts about it and I want to call these doubts to the attention of the country and of the gentlemen who are in control of the measure so that we may know more about the bill and of the legal principles involved and thereby determine whether it will accomplish what it is desired to accomplish.

I want to help the farmers who raise tobacco. I know that the little package of cigarettes that my friend from North Carolina exhibited to us the other day is taxed as high as 7 cents in many States, and that the tobacco growers are doing their duty in contributing revenues to the country. I know that their burdens are heavy and that their complaint is of long standing. It was many years ago that I read of the night riders down there who went around burning the warehouses and the barns in order to get rid of the surpluses of tobacco. The tobacco-farmer is entitled to economic prosperity. He should have a fair price for his product and one that will enable him and his family to live in comfort and according to the standards of an enlightened twentieth century civilization. You have no moral right to enjoy the solace and comfort which his investment of capital and which his labor and which his product brings to you unless you are willing to pay him the cost of producing that product. But, Mr. Chairman, when he crys for help and for support he should not be compelled to rely upon a broken reed. And that is why I rise to direct the attention of the gentleman in charge of the measure to what I believe are its basic and fundamental defects, and that is why I hope for a legitimate way by which such defects may be remedied.

In the first place, compacts between States do not confer upon or delegate to the States any Federal power. This is agreed to by everybody. When this bill is passed any one State such as the State of Virginia, for example, will not have a single thing by way of Federal power that she does not now have.

The second proposition is equally evident and it was Georgia [Mr. Cox] in support of the bill. The bill does not give to Virginia any State or local power that she does not now have. It does not amend or add to the powers already possessed by the States. It leaves the States exactly as it finds them so far as constitutional authority is concerned.

The Constitution provides that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State. That is all it says about it. The Federal Government does not do anything except give its consent that the States can make a compact. This clause does not delegate to the States any congressional power whatsoever. It does not give the States themselves any firmer grip or hold upon the powers that are reserved to the States. In times past Congress has given its consent to the making of compacts between States, and about 60 of them have been entered into. I wish more information could have been given us in the committee hearings or in this debate concerning them, showing just what they related to. I have examined most of them and I do not find a single compact that attempts in the remotest way to regulate the property rights of our citizens-not one. About 25 of these are agreements which fix boundary lines between States. About six of these compacts relate to jurisdiction over lands ceded by one State to another. Nine compacts are concerned with the question of concurrent jurisdiction over common waters. Some agreements have been made whereby the States are to jointly perform some service such as to build a bridge or a tunnel or to create an interstate corporation to do some work of this character. Sixteen authorizations are water apportionment agreements. But there are none, and especially none that have received the sanction of any responsible court, which have to do with property rights of individual American

We may be certain that if there is any such compact then the able gentlemen who are in charge of the bill would have referred us to it. All of the interstate compacts so far made over a century and a half of our Nation's life have related to something else and different than the property rights of citizens. A great many of them relate to rights in public waters and navigable rivers. For example, compacts are found with respect to the allocation of water in a river that runs through and irrigates the land in two or more States. Manifestly there is no property right of an individual citizen involved in any of these. One of the last cases on this question came into the Supreme Court from Oregon, being the case of Olin v. Kitzmiller (259 U. S. 260). It had to do with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish in the waters of the Columbia River, which separates the State of Oregon from the State of Washington, and over which the two States have concurrent jurisdiction. The appellant wanted a fishing license. The State authorities denied him this privilege and the Supreme Court upheld their action. The Columbia River is a navigable stream. The fish in that river are not the property of any citizen. Fish and game belong to the king-in America the whole people are king-and not to any citizen. It is proverbial that "fish in the sea" belong to nobody. Manifestly there was no individual property right of any citizen invaded or denied by the compact between the two States which merely regulated fishing rights in the boundary river and protected and preserved aquatic life in that stream for the benefit of future generations. Nobody's property was taken away.

But the right to plant tobacco and to raise and cultivate it upon privately owned land and thereafter to own it and control it and sell it is a property right. This was freely admitted at page 44 of the hearings by the sponsors of the bill. When I enter upon my land to plant and cultivate and grow tobacco I am not entering upon any activity having to do with public health or public safety or public morals, and the police powers of the State are not involved in any way. And when I plant and grow tobacco there is not involved any question of the conservation and protection of some irreplaceable natural resource which is necessary to public welfare or public defense. So here again no State has the right under the police power to interfere with my business as a tobacco farmer. And no State, and no number of States, can take away my property by a mere legislative enactment without due process of law. But that is precisely what this bill sanctions and seeks to do.

The oil- and gas-producing States, as custodians of the police power, have more and more of a responsibility for protecting the Nation's limited oil reserves against waste. Under its police power the State may regulate the correlative rights of the common owners of an oil pool and may provide against waste even though the underground resources may be privately owned. This follows because of the peculiar nature of oil and gas. These minerals, differing from solids in place such as coal and iron, are fugacious in character and of uncertain movement within the limits of the pool. Every person may drill wells on his own land and take from pools below all the gas and oil that he may be able to reduce to possession, including that coming from land belonging to others, but the right to take and to acquire ownership is subject to the reasonable exercise of the police power of the State to prevent unnecessary loss, destruction, and waste. But there is nothing of this character involved in the growing of tobacco. There is nothing evanescent or volatile about tobacco plants, and they are not disposed to flee or fly or flow away from my neighbors' land onto my own land. The State has no right under any police power to hinder or abridge or regulate the enjoyment of my property right to produce and sell tobacco.

Now, with these propositions beyond doubt and practically admitted, I do not see how this bill can help the tobacco grower. It seems to me to be a futile and an innocuous bill, a work of supererogation. It grants nothing to the States. It takes away nothing from them. It is inept and without real substance. In its legal application it is the same as no bill at all.

For example, after this law is passed, Virginia cannot punish anyone for refusing to comply with the quota system proposed under the State regulatory features contemplated by the bill, because she cannot deprive a citizen of the things which he owns without due process of law. Especially is she without power to deprive a citizen of any property rights wherein the activities involved have no real and proper and substantial relation to the police power of the State. After this bill has become law and after the compacts have been entered into, any farmer may raise and sell and transport in intrastate commerce and in interstate commerce all of the tobacco that he desires to raise or sell or transport. My right to sell my goods in commerce is a property right which is attached to my ownership and is equally protected by the due-process clause of the Constitution.

After this bill has become a law and after the compacts are made, and after the States' statutes are passed, still no State can punish anyone for violating the compact in another State. Virginia cannot punish one for violating a law or a compact over in North Carolina, and this bill does not attempt to confer any such power upon Virginia. The statute of Virginia, even though passed under sanction of the compact, cannot have any extraterritorial force of the character involved here. You cannot punish a man out in one State for having committed a crime in another State. The bill does not and cannot confer upon any State any extraterritorial jurisdiction out beyond the limits of its own sovereignty.

But it is argued that the A. A. A. decision has to do with the questions involved in this legislation. It is true that that decision struck down as being unconstitutional many of the provisions in the law which established the A. A. A. It is true that the Court there said that that act was unconstitutional, insofar as it tried to regulate and control the production of crops. It is true that the right to regulate and control such production was held not to be a Federal function because control over production of crops had never been granted to the Federal Government. It is true that the Court intimated that control of production was a thing which was reserved to the States. But that case does not intimate, and no case holds, and no theory is valid under which it can be said, that a State has the right to take away property without due process of law.

It is agreed that the right to raise and sell tobacco is my property. If this be true, I wonder where we are going with this bill. I do not understand how it can help any tobacco

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman mean to say that by implication the Supreme Court decision held that neither the Federal Government nor the States had a right to control an agricultural product?

Mr. GILCHRIST. No; the holding was that the Federal Government had no right to control agricultural production. The question of State control of production was not involved in that case. By way of argument they said that the Federal Government could not control production because it is a State function.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then the gentleman does agree that the control of agricultural production is a State function?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I am willing to admit that it is a State function. But in exercising and administering that function the State will also be compelled to keep and comply with every limitation or regulation which the Constitution requires it to heed and observe whenever it proceeds to control or regulate anything. Certain things are denied by the Constitution to the States. For example, the State must not, in controlling or regulating production, take away property without due process of law. There was not a single intimation in the A. A. A. case that the State could do that. This bill will do that very thing. I do not see how anyone can contend that it will not. The fact that the State may do something does not give the State the right to violate the other express provisions of the Federal Constitution. Under the Federal Constitution the power to do certain things is given to the Congress, and under the Federal Constitution the power to do a vast number of other things is reserved to the States. But in either event the Congress or the States must observe the limitations and prohibitions that are set forth in that same Federal Constitution. While some powers are granted, there are other powers that are expressly denied, and these denials must always be observed by States and by legislatures and by Congress. The bill of rights and the several amendments contain many commandments whereby the States are told "thou shalt not." One of these commandments in positive and flaming language says: "Thou shall not take property without due process of law." So much for the law of the case.

But if the day shall ever come when by a system of State compacts it becomes possible for two or more States to abrogate and annul the express provisions and limitations of the Federal Constitution; and if by a system of compacts between two or more States they could invade and annul the Bill of Rights; and if by a system of interstate agreements two or more States could strike down all of the safeguards which that instrument provides to protect the rights and privileges and immunities of our people and thereby strip them of the protection which that instrument gives to them. then that day will be a sad and calamitous one for American

And if the proposed system of compacts between States is approved by Congress and upheld by the courts, the possibility for harm will be infinite. There are 48 States. As a mathematical proposition I suppose that 10,000 combinations can be made with 48 units. No man can conjecture nor can the wildest imagination fathom the results of such combinations. And for this reason I regard the bill as unsound and ominous, even if it should be constitutional.

I will make another suggestion. Whenever governmental sanction and approval are given for the taking of agricultural lands out of certain kinds of production, then in fairness we have a duty toward other agricultural lands, and we should see to it that the lands which are subsidized or which are given special preference by Federal legislation should not be allowed to go into competition with lands which are not so favored. The present bill does not regulate this in any way and is therefore objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire, to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Drewry].

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is necessary because it will save from impending disaster the farmers of this country to the number of 400,000, who will produce by their crop of tobacco a revenue for this Government estimated in 1936 to be half a billion dollars. I am in favor of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is an attempt to so regulate the production of tobacco that the producers will get a price for their product that will enable them to continue the growing of their market crop. In order to maintain such a price the amount that is offered for sale must not exceed the normal requirement or the price will fall to a point where the tobacco farmer will find that it does not pay him to produce tobacco. As a large proportion of farmers in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Kentucky, as well as farmers in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Connecticut, and a smaller proportion in a few other areas in this country are dependent upon the production of this crop for their living, the importance of legislation to protect them, if such be possible, is readily seen.

Not only is this legislation necessary for the benefit of the tobacco growers and the communities in which they live, but it is most important to the country as a whole, for practically one-eighth of the entire revenue of the United States comes from the tax on tobacco. If disaster comes upon the tobacco industry, then the Government may realize a loss in its revenue that will necessitate an increase of taxation in other directions. With the importance of the production of tobacco in mind, let us look into the situation that now confronts the tobacco farmer.

In 1929 tobacco growers received an average price of 18.4 cents per pound for their crop of tobacco, and the farm income from the crop totaled $282,000,000. Then the farm tobacco income began to decline until it was only $211,000,-000 in 1930, $130,000,000 in 1931, and $107,000,000 in 1932. Thus in 3 years the farm income from tobacco declined approximately 581/2 percent, which was greater than the decline in the income from all other farm products as a whole. The result is well known to all. Among the tobacco growers the distress was widespread and severe; farm property deteriorated, and the consequent losses to business in the tobacco growing area were heavy; taxes could not be collected, and the entire area suffered.

In the first year of the administration of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Kerr-Smith Act, in 1933, the size of the crop was not substantially affected by the productionadjustment program, as the crop of tobacco had generally been planted before the program became effective, and there was a production that exceeded consumption. The markets were temporarily closed, and the growers by a large majority agreed to limit their production. The reduction in production for the next year being assured, the leading domestic tobacco buyers were called in and they agreed to purchase the supplies needed by them at a price at or above specified minimum levels and in quantities sufficient to take care of the supply on hand. Thus there was an increase this year, so that the farm income of the tobacco growers jumped from $107,000,000 in 1932 to $178,000,000 in 1933. Under the reduction programs, production was reduced in 1934 and 1935, and the farm income increased to $223,000,000 in 1934 and $242,000,000 in 1935.

The effect was immediately seen in the tobacco-producing The farmers paid up their back taxes, settled their indebtedness, repaired their farm property, bought supplies which they had been forced to do without, and helped to bring the country back from the depression which had settled on them as a black cloud from which in the preceding years they had seen no escape. Most of all it gave them courage to carry on in the work with which they were most familiar, for they thought that at last a way had been found for them to receive a fair price for their tobacco—a price that would compensate them for their labor and provide some of the comforts of life for themselves and their families.

As the Supreme Court decided that production is a matter of regulation by the respective States instead of being a matter of Federal control, it is proposed, as in this bill, to have ! the States in which tobacco is largely grown to enter into compacts or agreements with each other to control the production of tobacco by State regulation. Each State agrees to pass legislation that is uniform. This bill then grants the consent of Congress that the respective States shall enter into compacts or agreements with other States similarly interested, which compacts are to provide cooperation between the States signatory thereto by establishing production quotas for each State, and by formulation of such regulations as will assure the uniform and effective enforcement of the

The decision of the Supreme Court that the A. A. A. legislation providing for this reduction program was unconstitutional came as a shock just at the time when they had begun to see daylight after the darkness. Notwithstanding their disappointment, which was great, there was no great criticism of the decision. These farmers understood the form of Government under which they lived and had no desire to overturn it for a temporary advantage to themselves. They were in full accord with the principles of constitutional government and determined that they would find the remedy for their trouble within the Constitution and not without it. A great lesson had been taught them and they had profited by it. It had been clearly shown that the natural economic law of demand and supply regulated their business and that the remedy was in their hands if they would apply it.

Before the carrying out of the production-adjustment program the tobacco acreage planted each year was very closely related to prices for the previous crop of tobacco and prices received for other farm products during the previous year. The tobacco farmers in the eastern and southeastern States, in the years 1934 and 1935, found that it was more profitable for them to grow tobacco than almost any other crop. It therefore follows that, unless there is some program or method by which production can be restricted, the tobacco crop will be so large as to result in low prices to the growers. As said above, the growers have been taught their lesson, and it is almost the unanimous opinion of this class of farmers that production should be decreased, and there is hardly any dissent on the part of the growers to agree to restrict their production if they could be assured of some legislation that would cause all the growers to comply with the agreement not to increase their production of tobacco because of improved prices. The growers in any single locality cannot make such an agreement effective, nor could it be made effective by the growers in a county or State, if growers in other States are free to increase the size of their crops as soon as prices are improved. As the previous reduction program has been invalidated, other means must be used to regulate the acreage planted in tobacco. An effort is being made in the soil-conservation legislation to provide in part for this, but it is generally believed that this legislation alone will not be sufficient to keep the production of tobacco at a level in line with consumption requirements. So it seems that the problem is more or less a local problem applicable to the States in which tobacco is grown, and as one State alone cannot adequately control production to maintain permanent improvement, then the States affected must have an agreement among themselves to control the production within their respective borders, said control to be uniform, however, in its scope.

This bill is necessary to enable the States to enter into compacts because of the provision of the Constitution of the United States which permits States to enter into compacts or agreements with the consent of Congress. This bill, therefore, provides that all State acts authorizing such compacts shall be essentially uniform and in no way conflicting, and further provides that said State legislation of the respective States shall be in conformity with an act of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 13, 1936, known as the Tobacco Control Act. The said compacts then become effective to the extent and in the manner provided for in said act of the General Assembly of Virginia upon the passage of this measure. A safeguard is thrown about this legislation, however, by a further proviso that at any time that will protect the growers. There is no reason in saying the Congress of the United States of America may hereafter withdraw its consent to any compact or agreement entered into pursuant to this act.

The proposed State acts, which form the basis of the State compact method of regulating the production of tobacco, provide for the appointment of a State tobacco commission to carry out the provisions of the compact within each State, and give in detail the powers of said commission for establishing quotas and other matters connected with the marketing of said tobacco quotas upon the farms of said States, with other provisions covering the regulation of same.

In conclusion, it may be said that, while this legislation may be to some extent experimental, it is an attempt on the part of Congress to help a great industry in a constitutional way. While the constitutionality of this act may be questioned by some, it is the opinion of probably the majority of those who have studied the question that this legislation is within the constitutional requirements and offers a practicable method of assisting the tobacco farmers of the country.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina IMr. BARDEN!.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I live in a district where quite a bit of tobacco is grown, approximately sixty to sixtyfive million pounds. I have just returned from a visit to the district and found that the tobacco farmers were very much disturbed over the present situation. They want this legislation. I do not feel that this legislation contains everything that is needed or that they desire or that I would have included in it, but it is apparently the best act that we can prepare at this time. I believe it will do an immense amount of good for the farmers.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BARDEN. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the Governor of North Carolina call a special session down there?

Mr. BARDEN. I prefer not to comment upon that. I expect he has enough trouble of his own. I know that I have here. I am not in position to make any statement here that would bind him. I do not see why we should at this time begin to presume against the bill if on its face it looks toward the relief of the farmer. I think some in this House apparently have developed what we might call a constitutional complex. Every time a bill is presented on the floor someone jumps up and begins to talk about the Constitution, whether the bill has any bearing on it or not. Yesterday I was very much surprised to hear them begin to discuss the various State constitutions. Apparently they seek now to drag in the 48 State constitutions and dissect them on this floor. I can see no reason why we should assume that the State of North Carolina, the Legislature of North Carolina, the Governor, the attorney general, and the people are not in position to look after the North Carolina constitution. I believe this legislation will open the way for a great deal of relief for the tobacco growers, who produce a commodity that certainly pays more than its share to the Federal Government.

I was interested and amused to hear the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short] relate the circumstances this afternoon about tolling the chickens into the coop with corn and then wringing their necks. I have heard the gentleman tell that two or three times. I am of opinion that the chickens, if he chooses to call the farmers that, were tolled into the coop in 1928, and this administration was able to get them out in 1932 before the Republican administration completed wringing their necks. I do not see where his argument has any bearing upon this bill. Nor can I see why he should be so disturbed over this bill's bearing on a commodity that is of very little interest to him from the standpoint of production in his section. It is not putting one State against another or one section against another. Supreme Court has said that the Federal Government could not control production, and implied that the State governments could control it, and this is an effort to do what I believe the Supreme Court hinted we could and should do. There is no doubt in my opinion but that the very nature of the commodity itself makes it necessary for legislation that the Federal Government should get five times as much from the crop as the man who produces it. There is no reason why the manufacturer should declare many times the amount in dividends that the grower of the commodity gets for producing it. We cannot get along that way. We have experienced some trouble with the potato situation, and the first thing we know we will have a practice growing up in that section which will tend to annihilate the tobacco industry just as we had in the potato industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, the bill now before us has been so clearly and effectively explained that there is little need of further comment. Coming, as I do, from the State which produces approximately 65 percent of the flue-cured tobacco grown in the United States, and having a personal knowledge of what a fair price for tobacco means to the general welfare of my people, I am heartily supporting the bill H. R. 12037, which gives the consent of Congress to the tobacco-producing States to enter into compacts for the purpose of regulating the production of tobacco. If the law of reason, sound economics, and common sense is applied to its administration, it should work wonders toward maintaining and stabilizing the purchasing power of the tobacco growers.

In North Carolina, prosperity and good times are largely dependent upon tobacco prices. If the different types of tobacco grown in the United States were confined to a single State, authorization of the character contained in the present bill would not be necessary. It would be foolish, however, for one State among several to encourage a reduction in tobacco production without the other States doing likewise. This bill merely authorizes the several States producing similar types of tobacco to do, under the authority granted them by their constitutions, what any one of them can do without such authorization. This bill does not, therefore, convey to any State any power which it does not now enjoy. It merely permits several of them to agree among themselves, by uniform legislation, upon a program of economic betterment and self-protection.

I recognize that no farm program can be permanently sound that does not encourage an increase in consumption. At the same time, we should recognize that agriculture is the basic industry of the world, and unless production is related to consumption there can be no well-balanced economy. But for special privileges and governmental protection afforded other industries, agriculture no doubt could hold its own in the world of business. It is foolish, however, to believe that the farmer can keep his feet upon high ground as long as the cards are stacked against him. His purchasing power cannot be effective for his own good as long as he is forced to sell in an unprotected market and buy in a protected one. The A. A. A. was designed to remove this discriminatory situation. With its invalidation by the Court, on the ground that the Federal Government did not have the authority to regulate agriculture or control its production, the Court by inference clearly indicated that this power rests with the States. This bill, therefore, is designed to meet the suggestion of the Court, as set out in the majority opinion. To my way of thinking, the Court adopted an untenable and absurd position in holding that agriculture was a local rather than a national problem. If the Federal Government is without this authority and power, surely there is no other place to which we can go for the protection of agriculture save to the several States. If this bill is passed and the several States enact uniform cooperative legislation and make its administration effective upon an equitable basis for all the growers, it should go a long way toward solving the serious problem confronting the growers in the tobacco-producing areas. Though there is no doubt but that the Soil Conservation Act will be constructively helpful over the long period, it is generally agreed that its influence on the production of tobacco will not be immediately effective. Tobacco occupies a rather unique position among the basic commodities, for the reason that an acre of tobacco involves a considerably larger amount of money than an acre of any other commodity.

Unfortunately it is also a fact that tobacco is the only revenue-producing commodity in the United States. My colleagues, Hon. R. L. Doughton and Hon. Lindsay Warren, have already in a telling way referred to the present exorbitant and unconscionable taxes which are levied against tobacco products. There can be no doubt in my mind but that a removal of a substantial portion of these taxes would be immediately reflected in better prices to the grower. It seems, however, that notwithstanding the efforts of many of us for the past several years to impress officials of the Department of Agriculture with this idea, they have shown little concern or interest in removing this unjust burden against the tobacco producers. As indicated by my colleague, Judge Clark, the tobacco program under the A. A. A. was by and large a phenomenal success. Growers, warehousemen, and manufacturers gave it their wholehearted support and cooperation, and each group reaped a reward without placing any additional burden upon the consumers. I am also glad to take this opportunity of stating that the manufacturers in my State met their obligation promptly and cheerfully, and at no time questioned the Government's claim to the processing taxes as long as they were being used to insure parity prices to the growers.

In conclusion, let me express the earnest hope that this bill will be passed today without a dissenting vote from this side of the House. It may mean the difference between good times and bad times for millions of our country's best citizens. If properly and effectively administered, it will not only bring about and sustain the economic well-being of the tobacco growers but will also directly bring untold benefits to all types of business in the States affected and throughout the country at large. Its suggested merits are certainly worth a fair, sincere, and thorough work-out. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] has expired.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileau].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of difference between the bill we now have under consideration and the bill that was first introduced and considered by the Committee on Agriculture. On yesterday, during the debate, some reference was made to the position which I took, as was evidenced from the record of the printed hearings on the bill H. R. 11928 when the bill was being considered in committee. At the time the committee was considering the original bill I took the position that it was clearly unconstitutional, for the reason that the bill intended to give to a State or a group of States the unlimited right to enter into compacts for the control of tobacco. The original bill was broad in its terms. It was intended, however, to apply to the situation with reference to which we are now legislating, but was so broad in its terms that under the provisions of the original act we would have been giving carte blanche authority to all States to enter into any kind of a compact they might see fit to enter into as long as it dealt with tobacco. The bill now under consideration, however (H. R. 12037), has been amended so that it is not objectionable from at least that constitutional standpoint, because the bill now provides that those States which are named in the Virginia statute may enter into a compact in conformity with the Virginia compact. So that we have before us now, by reference to the Virginia act, a definite, concrete proposition, so that we now know what we are legislating upon. We now know what authority we are giving to the States, and we now know definitely and without question the exact type of compact that we are authorizing those States to enter into. It was my position while considering the original bill that Congress could not give its consent until Congress knew exactly what it was consenting to. It seems to me that is obvious. No one could give consent to a contract unless its terms and provisions were known to the contracting parties. Obviously, under the terms of the original bill, we would have been attempting to give our consent to the provisions of a compact about which we knew nothing. That situation is now remedied. The bill now before us is very definite, and resolves itself down to the proposition of whether or not we are willing to give these particular States named in the Virginia act the right to enter into a compact or agreement between themselves to carry out a control program for tobacco.

Unfortunately, the decisions of the Supreme Court on the question of compacts are not very enlightening, because very few cases have been before the Supreme Court. Although the Constitution very clearly indicates that the States have the right, with the consent of Congress, to enter into certain types of compacts or agreements that they would be otherwise unable to enter into, still the cases before the Supreme Court have been so few and have been upon such very limited lines that we do not have much help from the Supreme Court decisions at the present time in interpreting this particular provision of the Constitution which gives the States the right to enter into compacts. I am of the opinion, however, that these compacts may be entered into under the Constitution, and that we may find, from our experience in the operation of these compacts, a workable solution to many of our problems. It may be that if this compact is entered into it will lead the way for agreements among other States producing other commodities which may solve many of the problems that are now confronting us and which now seem almost insurmountable.

I, for one, am willing to give to those States this right by giving congressional consent. I am willing to give them the right to enter into these compacts. Apparently they all want it. No one seems to feel it is detrimental to their interests. I am willing to give them the right to enter into these compacts; yes—and welcome the opportunity for this country to have the experience that will be developed by putting this compact into operation. [Applause.] For that reason, and because I am satisfied that nothing in the act will be detrimental to the interests of other States, I am going to support this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Boileau] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Burch] 5 minutes.

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Chairman, I first want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolleau] for the splendid address he has just made and for supporting us in this legislation. I wish to assure him that the State of Virginia certainly appreciates his support.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand this bill, no attempt is made to confer upon the States any powers not already possessed under their respective constitutions. This bill does no more than give the consent of Congress to the tobacco producing States to enter into agreements or compacts among themselves for the purpose of endeavoring to regulate and control the production of tobacco.

The Virginia act, which is referred to in this bill and known as the Tobacco Control Act, was recently enacted by the Virginia Legislature, composed of 140 members, and there was only 1 dissenting vote. The able attorney general of the Commonwealth of Virginia, who is an outstanding lawyer in our State, assisted in drafting the Virginia measure, and it had his approval, together with the unqualified approval of our distinguished Governor—himself an eminent attorney. Furthermore, many members of the Virginia Legislature are lawyers of proven ability, so we believe the Virginia act will stand the test under our State constitution.

In a referendum recently conducted among the growers in the flue-cured area in the State of Virginia, 98 percent of the tobacco growers voted in favor of control and regulation of tobacco production. Under the Virginia act it is provided that two-thirds of the tobacco producers must express their approval before the law becomes effective, and 10 percent of such growers may, in any year, on petition to the Governor, demand a referendum. The Virginia act not only requires a majority vote but it is necessary that two-thirds vote in favor of the plan.

During the years 1930, 1931, and 1932, when there was an overproduction of tobacco, the average return to the growers for flue-cured tobacco was about 7 cents per pound, whereas in the year 1934, under a production-control plan of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the Kerr-Smith Act, the average return to the growers of the same type was approximately 28 cents per pound. With an overproduction last year, 1935, which was permitted over the protest of all Congressmen representing districts in which flue-cured tobacco is grown, the average return to the growers was reduced to approximately 20 cents per pound.

The world consumption of flue-cured tobacco is from 560,-000,000 to 700,000,000 pounds annually and an increase in production of 200,000,000 in 1935 has resulted in a production over consumption of more than 100,000,000 pounds, which will be a carry-over to 1936.

This type of legislation is being strongly urged by the tobacco growers in the flue-cured area in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, and Florida, and they have expressed the hope that it might be possible to apply it to the crop for the current year. It is my information that the burley-growing States will endeavor to effect a similar compact in 1937. In my opinion this is proper and adequate legislation, and I consider this method the proper approach to an extremely important proposition. I very strongly favor the enactment of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Burch] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] 5 minutes.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall undertake to point out some significant facts with reference to the desirability of this legislation.

Four hundred and forty thousand farmers in this country produce tobacco. Two million two hundred thousand people are dependent upon its production for their living. The need for this legislation is reflected by the success of the tobacco program under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which has been referred to many times during the discussion of this bill. Of course, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was held unconstitutional, was from the beginning severely criticized by many of the Republicans, including those who now attack this legislation. Many of them, including the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short], who spoke today, have criticized all efforts which have been made by this administration to bring relief to the farmers of this country. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short] stated a few moments ago that he used to know how to induce a horse to put its head into a halter and to induce chickens to come into a coop, and he described the methods he used in glowing terms.

If that is the extent of his farming experience, he is not an authority on the question. But even if he knew that much, it has been so long since he undertook to put a halter on a horse that I dare say he would not now know whether the halter was on the horse's head or on the horse's tail. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that in the year 1931, which is a fair year for comparison because of the season and the crop, there were produced in the flue-cured areas of the United States 669,879,000 pounds of tobacco. This tobacco that year brought $56,406,000. In 1934, after the regimentation to which the inducer and enticer of horses [laughter] referred under the tobacco program of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, there were produced in the same area 556,930,000 pounds of tobacco, and it brought $151,793,000.

The Hoover administration, supported by the gentleman from Missouri, brought to the producers of tobacco poverty, real suffering, darkness, and disaster. This administration's program, so severely criticized by many Republicans, including the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short], brought to fort, prosperity, and confidence in the future.

The tobacco program under the Agricultural Adjustment Act was administered without any increase in cost to the consumers of tobacco products in the United States.

What else has it meant? It has meant that millions of dollars have flowed into the channels of commerce. My good friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes]and I have the highest regard for him-spoke vigorously against the enactment of this legislation. He comes from a State which makes automobiles and more of them than any State in the Union. In the district of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] in September 1934, when the State was under the regimentation imposed by the Agricultural Adjustment Act referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Short], the people in and near the town of Greenville, N. C., purchased from the Ford agency in that town about 267 Ford automobiles, and most of the money paid for them went to the State of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes]. According to my information, the dealer in Greenville, N. C., a town of about 13,000 inhabitants, sold more Fords in September 1934 than any Ford dealer anywhere in the world, and I am astounded that my good friend should object to the State of North Carolina making money with which to buy the products of the State of Michigan.

In 1931 the tobacco crop in North Carolina brought about $42,000,000; in 1934 a smaller crop brought $119,135,000, and so it goes; yet the Republican Party, represented by its spokesmen on this floor, objects to a program which will bring some measure of relief to the people we are seeking to aid by this legislation.

What is the present condition? The average flue-cured stocks of tobacco in the hands of dealers and manufacturers in this country for an average period of 6 years on January 1, prior to 1936, was 834,653,000 pounds. The stocks of fluecured tobacco in the hands of dealers on January 1, 1936, amounted to 964,090,000 pounds, or 129,000,000 pounds above the 6-year average. What does this mean to the grower of tobacco? It means inevitable disaster unless the crop can be controlled. It cannot be controlled by individual effort or individual action. The States cannot obtain control acting individually in this matter. This bill grants no Federal power. This bill sets up no agency to be administered by the Federal Government and does not provide for the expenditure of Federal funds. It merely gives to the sovereign States the consent of Congress, as required by the Constitution, to carry out jointly under uniform laws whatever powers the States possess to control the production and marketing of agricultural commodities.

In 1935 the Treasury Department of the Federal Government, exclusive of processing taxes, collected $478,367,718 from tobacco taxes. For the 1935 crop the producers of tobacco in the United States received about $237,479,000. In other words, the Federal tax last year was more than twice the amount received by the growers of tobacco. It is estimated that during the past 10 years the Federal Government has collected in tobacco taxes in excess of three times the amount of money which the farmers received during the same period of time for their tobacco. Such a tax is excessive and oppressive and ought to be reduced.

The tobacco program under the Agricultural Adjustment Act paid its way, and after meeting all obligations there will be several million dollars in excess of expenditures. In other words, the processing taxes on tobacco enabled the program to be administered on the basis of a balanced budget, a thing so much desired by the Republicans, who unbalanced the Federal Budget in the first place. During the life of the tobacco program approximately $63,000,000 in processing taxes was collected on tobacco, out of which the entire program was financed, and at the same time the cost of tobacco products to the consumer was less in January 1936 than the price to the consumer in 1931.

In its decision holding that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was unconstitutional, the Supreme Court pointed the way to State control. Certainly if the production and marketing readily seen that he does the very opposite from what he is the producers of flue-cured tobacco some measure of com- | can be controlled at all, it must be done by the States. An overwhelming majority of the farmers in North Carolina and. I am informed, in the other States producing flue-cured tobacco are in favor of compact legislation. Those of us from tobacco-producing areas in the flue-cured States urge you today to pass this bill in order that the States affected can, if they wish, under State laws endeavor to solve the problems of the tobacco producers. Participation by any State is a voluntary matter, and a compact, if formed, for any given type of tobacco, in my judgment, cannot injure any State which does not participate and join the compact. Furthermore, if any State enters a compact and does not desire to remain in the compact, it can withdraw at any time it may desire. The program to which we are asking Congress to consent will be largely in the hands of the growers themselves, and certainly they should have the opportunity to solve their problems.

> It is necessary that this legislation be passed without delay. Planting time will soon begin in some of the flue-cured areas and will be under way in all of the flue-cured States within 30 days. If relief is to be afforded this year, it is urgent that this bill be passed at once. For this reason many of us from flue-cured tobacco-producing districts have endeavored in every way possible to obtain action on this legislation as rapidly as possible. We appreciate the consideration shown us by the chairman and members of the House Committee on Agriculture, and we will be grateful for the support of the Members of this House to the end that this bill may be passed today. Up until this time no man on the Democratic side of the House has taken the floor in opposition to this legislation. The opposition has come from the Republican side. They should not play politics with the producers of tobacco, and I am sure that this House will recognize that the attack on this measure is partisan and political and is being made by those who have regularly opposed the efforts of this administration to aid the farmers of the United States. I urge you to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

> Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich].

> Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks-not only the ones I am going to make now but the remarks I made earlier this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, section 12 of the pending bill

The Secretary shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

We all recall very distinctly the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture so far as the A. A. A. was concerned.

The professed purpose of the A. A. A. was to curtail production. But from May 12, 1033, to December 31, 1935, according to the crop reports of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Government paid over $255,000,000 to wheat growers in the United States to curtail production, but the wheat acreage increase of 1935 over 1934 was 7,577,000

From 1933 to 1935 the Government paid over $53,000,000 to tobacco farmers to curtail production, but the tobacco acreage increase of 1935 over 1934 was 187,700 acres.

From 1933 to 1935 the Government paid over $333,000,000 to cotton farmers to curtail production, but the cotton acreage increase of 1935 over 1934 was 402,000.

From 1933 to 1935 the Government paid over $397,000,000 to decrease corn acreage and hogs farrowed, but the corn acreage increase of 1935 over 1934 was 4,932,000 and the increase of hogs farrowed in the same period was 687,000.

The New Deal took the taxpayers' money, amounting well over a billion dollars, and gave it away to bribe the farmers to curtail production. But despite this expenditure, production of 1935 over 1934 in wheat, tobacco, cotton, and corn acreage was substantially increased.

If the control of anything is put into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture for a particular purpose it may be supposed to do. I want to say to the Members of Congress that we are regimenting the farmers of this country and all their business under the laws which have been passed during the last year or so; sooner or later the farmers of America will revolt on this procedure.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the remarks which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made yesterday in speaking for this legislation:

All the farmers ask is to be given an opportunity to continue receiving in the future the benefits they derived in the past as a result of the tobacco-control legislation. If this is done, it is not going to impose any heavy burden on any class of people or on any section of the country.

I should like to say to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who must propose to raise taxes to meet the deficit that the Federal Government has, if we are going to do anything to help the farmers it is time we gave the farmers of this country a pension instead of trying to regulate and harass them by regulation through political control. The farmers will not receive any direct result through political control if we continue to do what has been done in the past 2 or 3 years—increasing the Agriculture Department pay roll and not the farmers' checks.

May I also call attention to this statement which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made:

Those of you who always have believed and still believe, in a high protective tariff whereby the manufacturers receive special benefits directly should be the last to oppose this legislation. This being so, why should we here split hairs over constitutional technicalities?

When the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee refers to splitting hairs over constitutional technicalities, may I say I think the chairmen of the great committees of this House have access to good legal talent. We should not split hairs over anything that is liable to be involved in the question of constitutionality. The House of Representatives has the opportunity to secure the best legal talent in the country to advise it, and any laws that are not constitutional should not be presented here on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I also call attention to the fact, when he speaks about manufacturers and the tariff, I say that we should have a tariff that will protect the American farmer. Let me show you what has happened to the American farmer in the last year in connection with importations. The following table will speak for itself in this regard:

Commodity	Year 1934	Year 1935
Wheat 60-pound bushel. Corn 55-pound bushel. Oats 32-pound bushel. Butter pound. Beef, fresh do Canned meat do Animal oils and fats, edible do Tallow do Carpet wool. do Carpet wool. do Carpet wool. do Tobacco do	7, 736, 532 2, 959, 256 5, 580, 407 1, 107, 020 140, 447 127, 746 46, 777, 875 1, 723, 261 200, 770, 332 42, 813, 299 85, 181, 282 57, 658, 000	27, 438, 87/ 43, 242, 29/ 10, 106, 90/ 22, 674, 64/ 8, 584, 11/ 3, 922, 60/ 76, 653, 24/ 18, 895, 24/ 303, 475, 63/ 245, 850, 92/ 171, 504, 10/ 63, 296, 00/

Note the increase of importation of farmers' produce, yet you want our farmers to let their ground lie idle, pay them for so doing, and import the things they raise in ever-increasing amounts. Why do you do it? You tax the people to pay for permitting foreigners to raise our produce instead of our own farmers. You will wreck the country by this process surely.

We might not be fools here, but we are certainly doing the things that fools would do.

We want a tariff that will protect the American farmers from competition with cheap-paid foreign farm labor. I favor preserving the markets of America to the American farmers; it is without a doubt the best market of the world, and the best market is none too good for the American farmer. He deserves the best market.

We appropriated in 1936, $147,789,692.14 to the Department of Agriculture for the year 1937. The appropriation, after passing the House of Representatives, was $161,873,147, an increase of over $14,000,000. Why the great increase to help the farmers? Well, I question if the farmers get any increase. It is to set up a greater organization for what? Well, look out for the politics this year; the politicians probably will get the money and the farmers will get advice.

Yesterday Mr. Warren analyzed the price of a pack of cigarettes, as follows:

To the farmers for tobacco	Cents 11/4
To manufacturers for gross profit Tax to Federal Government	31/2
Profit to wholesaler and retail merchant	41/4
Price of a pack of cigarettes	15

When he spoke of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents as a gross profit to manufacturers did he realize that the $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pack was for his interest on investment in business—the land, the buildings, the machinery, the taxes he pays to his local communities and his State, his Government income tax of $13\frac{3}{4}$ percent on his profits, for the cost of his labor, of which there are thousands employed in his factories, and his insurance and all overhead expenses of all kinds, so it is not a profit, but includes all items of expenses as well as his profits?

We talk of the great tax on tobacco and the tobacco industry. Sure, it is high. Well, the tax on gasoline is high, the tax on farm property is high, the tax on most everything you buy is high, and if we continue the exorbitant expenses of this administration, they will be higher, not lower. Remember, this administration in its platform promised a reduction in Government expenses of 25 percent, but instead you have increased them over 100 percent. How can any sensible man say we will, or can expect lower taxes when your expenditures are twice as much as your income? You have spent this year, as per the Government report issued by the Treasury on March 7, $2,431,448,501.04 more than your receipts. This administration is wrecking our financial structure. You are regimenting our farmers and camouflaging the people. If the people do not awaken to the fact at once and stop it, you will lose your form of government and the American freedom.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I did not get the drift of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to money paid to the tobacco growers under the A. A. A. I thought I caught the inference that money for this purpose had been paid from the general taxpaying fund of the Treasury to the farmer or to the tobacco grower. If the gentleman intended to convey that meaning, of course, he is in error. Tobacco is one product that paid its way without the additional expenditure of a dollar from the general funds of the United States.' Processing taxes took care of every dollar that went to the tobacco grower under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. When the sum of $281,000,000 was appropriated to make good benefit agreements on other commodities, tobacco did not get one single thin dime of that money. As a matter of fact tobacco paid its way plus.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bonleau] referred to this legislation as being pioneer legislation. I am inclined to think he is right. This is legislation that may solve the problems of other farmers in these United States.

Eighteen of the twenty counties which I have the honor to represent grow burley tobacco. The welfare of the tobacco grower is my most serious thought and purpose. Legislation affecting the tobacco grower is to me the most important legislation the Congress of the United States can pass. The A. A. Was most beneficial in tobacco country and in my district. It meant food, clothing, and the necessities of life to the tenant farmers. In addition thereto it meant ability to pay interest on debts to the man who owned the farm under the tobacco program. The sun did shine bright in my "old Kentucky home."

Mr. Chairman, last night the temper of the House was somewhat different from the temper of the House today. Sleep and opportunity to study the bill has brought sweeter tempers. The distinguished gentlemen of the minority last night evidently misunderstood the bill under consideration.

I have no criticism of that because it was a very natural thing. Hearings were held on one bill. The hearings were printed, and when the Members read these hearings naturally they thought the printed hearings were addressed to the bill under consideration. After the hearings, it was apparent that the committee did not favor certain sections. Instead of committee amendments a new bill was drafted, leaving out sections 3 and 4, which dealt with the commerce powers, and section 11, which dealt with the penalty clause, the portions in the old bill which were not satisfactory to the committee.

What do we have here? The consent of the Congress is granted to States to enter into compacts. I say that each State affected hereunder could pass the identical statute without this character of legislation.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In a moment.

I submit we could have such statutes, but it certainly will be beneficial to the States and beneficial to the tobacco growers of those States to have the consent of the Congress to put this into effect.

The Supreme Court said we could not control production by contract under the A. A. A. They said such is a State function. The States, and the citizens of the States, and the tobacco growers within those States, recognize and bow to this decision of the Supreme Court. They want to control production. They know it requires control of production to secure a fair price. They want to do it under State law. And what does it mean? Does it mean anything to the Treasury of the United States for them to control production? No. Does it mean anything to the consumer of tobacco products for them to control production? No. The prices of manufactured tobacco products experienced no substantial increase under the A. A. A.

What it does mean is that the tobacco grower, who is at the mercy of the manufacturers of tobacco, who fix the price for him, will get the difference between a poverty price and a living price for his tobacco. This is all that is involved in the controlled production of tobacco.

This legislation will permit the States affected to enter into compacts if they desire—in conformity with the Virginia statute—whereby production can be controlled. It means that—nothing more and nothing less. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, there are some gentlemen in this House who devote a large portion of their time looking after the boys engaged in labor. There are others who spend a great portion of their time in the interest of the tenant farmer and the sharecropper. Here is a good time for those interested in labor and for those who are interested in the tenant farmer and the sharecropper to have their say.

All of the 19 counties in my district are tobacco counties and, I suspect, grow more tobacco than any one congressional district in the entire country. If I could have had placed in the galleries and in each aisle here a Republican tobacco grower, who could have heard every word that has been said on this floor here today and from the time the debate opened until we took the vote on the rule, you would not get the vote of a Republican tobacco grower from any one of these counties. If they had heard the proceedings of the House and had seen how the Members voted and had heard your arguments, I am sure you would not have got a single one of their votes, and most of these boys on the hillsides in my district belong to the Republican Party; and if this special session of the legislature is called back there in Kentucky in a few days, there will not be a single, solitary Republican Member of the Senate or of the House who will vote against this proposition, and yet, on the floor of this House, through some means, people who have never seen a tobacco plant growing want to make a political issue out of a matter that has no political significance whatever.

Mr. Chairman, if the situation were uncontrolled and if you were to guarantee them 20 cents next year or set 20 cents as the price for all that they raised, they would raise enough tobacco next year to supply the demands for the next 5 years, and you could not give it away or use it. Therefore, they must proceed in the light of past experience. What would happen to the coal business if you just dug out the coal without some word from the boss as to the amount of output? What would be the result with respect to labor and the coal market?

Yes; they have had their troubles. They have used the missionary system, to sign up by gentlemen's agreements, and then another State would say, "Kentucky is cutting down, we will increase", and the program would be spoiled. This is the only way in which it can be done. [Applause.]

I cannot see why anyone would be against this bill except the tobacco companies, who want to buy it cheaper. One speaker said it would cost the tobacco user more money. I would remind him that in all the years of varying prices there is practically no difference in the prices of cigarettes or other finished product, regardless of whether the price paid the grower was high, medium, or low.

Another speaker said he feared that if this was successful that other farm blocs would use the State compact system to elevate their prices. This is equivalent to saying that he is opposed to an elevation in prices of farm products in general.

Another fears that it might not be constitutional. The decision of the Triple A question said Congress had no right to control production, but that such was a question for the States.

This bill permits the States to enter into a compact with each other for crop-control production by each State by passing a similar law and making it conditional that it is not effective in any State until the same law is passed in all the States concerned.

This makes it impossible for one State to pass a control measure and be left standing alone for it only becomes effective when passed by all the tobacco States named in the bill.

It is the same system as the A. A., but as suggested by the Court should be a State matter.

There is none in all the country who would dare say that the A. A. A. did not serve as a lifesaver for the tobacco growers.

Even those who did not join had the increase in price after payment of the tax over the previous years.

It is amusing to hear some of the argument advanced against this bill by some who never saw a tobacco plant growing. They have not the slightest idea of the working conditions of the tobacco people and of the labor required to produce it. The tobacco plant requires more labor from its first and last handling than any other plant in any country grown by man.

It is true that other crops sometime bring a low price but no other crop has ever been known to be given away. It has happened in my time that growers have worked all the year in a crop, shipped it to market, and when the freight and expense of selling is charged the tobacco failed to bring enough to pay the expense and the warehouse wrote back to the grower to pay the difference. No other crop ever reached that low ebb in price.

If some of the opposition to this bill had ever worked in a tobacco crop or ever lived in a community where it was grown they would be more sympathetic with the aims to try to help these people get a decent wage for their labor.

It is not uncommon in tobacco-working time to see the whole family—mother, children, and all—in the tobacco patch day after day.

Then when sold and expectations are buoyed up depending on the tobacco to get the boy's new suit and the girl new clothes, we find the family receiving the disappointing news of the unheard-of low price and the family air resembles more the news of the death of a friend than a happy family circle.

There is but little competition in the buying of tobacco compared with competition in other business. The world can use only so much and the tobacco companies cannot be blamed for not paying a high price for tobacco they do not need and cannot sell for a long time in waiting.

If gold was as plentiful as coal a bushel of coal would be worth more than a bushel of gold. If diamonds were as plentiful as sea shells on the Florida coast no one would wear them.

When tobacco floods the market we may expect the same result. There are some tobacco growers who may be too short-sighted to know that the raise in price was wholly due to the operation of the A. A. A. method now out of use by the court decision. And with the fair price of 1935 their natural tendency would be to increase the crop in 1936. This would result only in the old story of give-away prices and the grower would receive less for 10 acres than he would for five under a regulated system.

Many growers know this full well, but they are powerless to do anything about it without such a system as this proposed.

When we voted on the motion to adopt the rule to bring this bill up on a rising vote, every vote in opposition was on the Republican side of the aisle. Not a vote stood against it on our side.

I am sure the Republican tobacco growers do not appreciate this vote and do not appreciate your trying to make a political issue out of this matter which has no political significance whatever.

It does have this significance, however, that makes the line-up once more in this House this session of the eastern Republican wing opposing every move to help the farming industry just as you have done for a generation. Why not treat this question on its merits without this effort to make a party matter of it?

Some of these days the Republican farmer will get tired of voting for you people that line up here against every bill intended for his benefit and he will cut loose and vote a few times for himself.

The Republican side of the House is making a mistake both politically and as matter of common justice to lots of good people when you vote against this bill. The tobacco growers may be poor, but they are the kind of people who are the foundation of the Government. There is no foreign element among them such as give us trouble elsewhere. They are all the good, old, honest, hard-working American stock of fine people.

I was born and reared among them and one of them. I speak of their problems both from personal experience and long observation.

We have been skirmishing here for 2 days on this bill that should have passed within an hour. I want to thank those from other States who have no interest in the tobacco business but who have aided the boys from the Tobacco Belt from a sympathetic standpoint and friendly interest.

The sole object of this measure is to help the tobacco raiser, and the sole beneficiary if it is defeated is the tobacco buyer.

After all, what does it amount to to be a Member of this body if we cannot be of service to somebody in need, to lighten somebody's burden, to relieve the oppressed, to dry a tear, and restore a smile?

I have not so far, and I doubt if I ever will, take as much pleasure in the support of any measure that may come before this body as I do in this one. It would be the same if my voice was the only one heard and my vote the only one cast, I would do it with pleasure.

It will help right a wrong of long standing. It will put shoes on bare feet. It will bring cheer to the mothers in the homes of the tobacco raiser in the hills of Kentucky and elsewhere. Those mothers, though they may live in humble homes and their heroic sacrifices to hold together and properly rear their children be unknown to the world, yet they are pure gold and the kind of mothers that make America great.

When you vote against this bill it will be the most heartless vote you ever cast. Such were my playmates and boyhood friends. They have been kind to me in bygone days when I sought public service, and by the eternal, I will never desert them when their interest is being voted on.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Chairman and colleagues, in the very brief time I have I shall not attempt to recount the hardships and vicis-situdes which the tobacco farmers experienced or to recall the misery and misfortune they suffered before the present administration, through the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Act, enabled them to organize for the purpose of controlling their business. I desire, however, to impress upon the House the necessity for this legislation.

We in the tobacco country are facing an awful situation this fall unless the tobacco crop is controlled. Last year we produced a crop of approximately 805,000,000 pounds, against a consumption of approximately 640,000,000 pounds.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COOLEY. In just a moment I will yield.

This year the prospect is that instead of an 800,000,000-pound crop, unless some form of control is exercised, in all probability we will have a much larger crop, and this will result in disastrously low prices to the tobacco farmers of our country.

I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman explain to the Committee just how they propose to control production under the compact? We have not had any explanation of the bill by its sponsors.

Mr. COOLEY. I am sure the gentleman understands that my time will not permit me to go into detail.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does not the gentleman feel, though, that the House should know just what the compact is and how they propose to carry it into effect and what kind of control will be followed?

Mr. COOLEY. I am sure the gentleman knows I have tried to give him such light on that subject as it is possible for me to give. I furnished the gentleman with a copy of the bill passed by the General Assembly of Virginia which sets up the formula which will be followed in all the compacting States. The general purpose of the legislation, of course, is to control production and bring it somewhere near consumption.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman feel that can be done under State laws and under State constitutions?

Mr. COOLEY. That is a matter to be passed upon by the great sovereign commonwealths of the country in which tobacco is produced, and I, for one, am willing to leave that to the chief executives, the attorneys general, and the general assemblies of those States.

Mr. ANDRESEN. And the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. COOLEY. And, of course, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to read this language from the Republican platform of 1932, under the heading "Agriculture"

Farm distress in America has its roots in the enormous expansion of agricultural production during the war.

And again, still reading from the Republican platform of 1932:

The fundamental problem of American agriculture is the control of production to such volume as will balance supply with demand.

Again, reading from the Republican platform:

A third element equally as vital is the control of the acreage of land under cultivation as an aid to the efforts of the farmer to balance production.

I take it from the attitude of the Republicans in the House in the past that the control mentioned in their platform of 1932 was not Federal control. I take it also that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Triple A case was to the effect that the act invaded the rights of the States to regulate and control agricultural products. In that decision the Court likewise took the position that by Federal regulation we could not control production; and at least intimated that the States could exercise control over production. As stated by the gentleman from North Carolina | [Mr. CLARK], we will never have the opportunity to test this until some such an act as this is passed.

Neither this bill nor the State acts forming the compact will force crop control upon the tobacco farmers without their consent. A referendum is provided. Whether control and reduction of acreage is a good thing or not, I for one am perfectly willing to abide by the judgment of the majority of the growers themselves. I feel certain that the tobacco growers understand and appreciate their position and realize that an unusually large crop was produced in 1935 and that this large crop hanging over the market is well calculated to result in a return to starvation prices. If one-third of the farmers decide that they do not want control no control will be forced upon them by virtue of this act or the State acts passed under the consent herein granted.

In this act we only give consent to the States to do what it is assumed they can do at the present time. In my opinion, control in 1936 means the difference between poverty on the one hand and prosperity on the other in the tobacco country, and I hope this bill will pass. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress of the United States of America hereby consents that any of the States in which tobacco is produced may negotiate a compact or compacts for the purpose is produced may negotiate a compact or compacts for the purpose of regulating and controlling the production of, or commerce in, any one or more kinds of tobacco therein: Provided, That all State acts authorizing such compact or compacts shall be essentially uniform and in no way conflicting: Provided further, That any compact, compacts, agreement, or agreements negotiated and agreed upon by the States referred to in the act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 13, 1936 (known as the Tobacco Control Act), which is in conformity with and relating to the type or types of tobacco specifically referred to in said act, shall become effective to the extent and in the manner provided for in said act without further consent or ratification on the part of the Congress of the United Sates of America: Provided, however, That nothing of the United Sates of America: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the Congress of the United States of America from hereafter withdrawing its consent to any compact or agreement entered into pursuant to this

The Clerk read the following committee amendment: Page 2, line 5, after the word "with", insert "said act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if that is by action of the committee? I do not know anything about it, if the committee has had a hearing about it.

Mr. COOLEY. No; the committee has had no hearing on that. I was not speaking for the committee.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is to place other States not included in the Virginia act in the same category, so if their respective legislatures confer authority on them to enter into a compact, they may be able to do so without coming back to Congress to obtain authority. That is the only object of this amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DUNCAN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Statements have been made on the floor of the House during the discussion of the bill that only those States specifically referred to could enter into compacts without coming back and getting the approval of Congress. I see nothing in the bill which sustains that position. It seems to me that the bill does not so provide. Is it the purpose of this amendment to perfect that situation?

Mr. DUNCAN. It is the purpose of this amendment to within the same provisions as these States that are mentioned in the Virginia act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest there that that does not change the requirements that any of these States that come in must come in on the uniform terms of the Virginia statute. In other words, if there are some other States that produce a certain type of tobacco, then they come in if they come under the terms of the Virginia statute. Otherwise there must be ratification.

Mr. MAPES. Where is the provision in the bill which says that these other States must come back to Congress to have their compacts ratified?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will look on the first page, he will see the matter of entering into compacts was stricken out, and we authorized only negotiations. Then we follow the negotiation with a provision that if they follow the Virginia statute specifically, ratification shall not be required. Otherwise they could only negotiate.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman construe that language to require specifically that these other States after they do negotiate a compact must come back to Congress to have it

Mr. JONES. Undoubtedly, unless they follow in substance the Virginia statute, because we simply authorize the negotiation of agreements.

Mr. MAPES. Why would it not be advisable to put in the specific requirement that they shall have their compacts approved by Congress before they become effective?

Mr. JONES. We had that provision in. We provided in the first section for negotiation and entering into compacts. and we struck out the latter part, providing simply for negotiation of agreements and then follow it by an enabling provision to specifically enable these particular types that are set out in the law to be followed without ratification.

Mr. MAPES. But a person reading the statute would not know of that action in the committee.

Mr. JONES. We only give such authority as is affirmatively stated in the statute. We do not affirmatively give any authority for the actual making of compacts, except those specifically named in the bill.

Mr. MAPES. I think it would be desirable to have that more clearly set out in the bill.

Mr. JONES. The enumeration of one would by implication eliminate the other.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. My opposition is not because I am not willing that these compacts be extended to any State that might want to come under it, but I call the attention of the gentleman sponsoring the amendment to what appears to be, offhand, a serious objection to the amendment. This entire consent is predicated upon the fact that we are consenting to States entering into a compact in conformity with the Virginia act. If the gentleman will look at section 3, subsection (b), of the Virginia act, he will find that it pro-

(b) This act shall not become effective unless and until the Congress of the United States shall pass an act consenting to the establishment of compacts such as are authorized by this act; and thereafter this act shall become effective with respect to flue-cured tobacco upon the enactment of a similar act by the Legislatures of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, etc.-

specifying particularly in the Virginia act the States with whom Virginia is willing to enter into a compact. Virginia, by its legislative act, has said that she is willing to enter into a compact with North and South Carolina and Georgia with reference to flue-cured tobacco and with other States with reference to the other types of tobacco. In this amendment we would extend that consent to include compacts with other States that are not specifically mentioned in the Virginia act. Assuming that these three States, North and South Carolina and Georgia enter into a compact, then it becomes effective immediately, but if any other State wants to come in under the provisions of the compact, whether permit any other State that produces tobacco to bring itself | Kentucky, Tennessee, or any other State, it would require action on the part of the State of Virginia before it could become operative.

In other words, the Congress cannot impose a compact upon the State of Virginia with the State of Kentucky when its legislature says they want to agree only with North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. I therefore submit that if you adopt this amendment you will require the State of Virginia to amend its law to conform to our act, and you would have a hodgepodge that would result in confusion, and I doubt very much if it would be constitutional. This act in its present form permits negotiation of compacts rather than entering into compacts with States that are not mentioned specifically in the Virginia act; so that if this amendment is voted down they could still negotiate agreements, as far as burley tobacco is concerned, and then come back here next year with another act. That will clear the right-of-way. If we pass this act and give our approval generally to the proposition of compacts among States with reference to tobacco, I am sure that any necessary perfecting amendment could readily be enacted during the next session of Congress, and you all know that you do not expect to get a compact for burley tobacco this year anyway.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman makes a very interesting observation that should be considered, and I want to ask him, with reference to the Virginia statute, if he has read the paragraph following the one to which he has made reference? Subparagraph (c) reads:

The enactment of this act or similar acts by any of the aforesaid States or by other States shall constitute the basis for a compact between the Commonwealth of Virginia and such

And so forth.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes to clarify this matter. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I confess this matter is new to me and I did not know of this particular language.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman has raised a very interesting point that should be considered. If the House is willing to pass this amendment temporarily, we might come back to it later.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe the Congress of the United States can give consent to a compact in advance of knowing exactly who the parties to that compact are. If we broaden this to include any and all States, I wonder if the consent given by this act would then be constitutional.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. For what is the consent being given? Consent for States to enter into a certain compact. The compact, as I see it, is the thing that freezes the matter. It is the Virginia statute that freezes it. Now, let us assume that under the burley program you have Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Those are the States mentioned in the Virginia statute.

Mr. BOILEAU. And we are giving consent to those States only.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. To enter into a compact. Now, they enter into a compact. They agree to pass identical statutes with the Virginia statute. Wherein is there any new legal problem about Missouri, Ohio, or West Virginia passing identical laws with the Virginia act; and if so, why cannot they come into the compact? As I see it, it is the statute of Virginia that really controls.

Mr. BOILEAU. It freezes it also not only as to provisions but as to the parties to the contract. The State of Virginia might be willing to enter into this kind of a compact with North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia and might not, for some reason or other, want to enter into such a compact with Missouri. I agree with the gentleman that in the case that is before us today it is very unlikely that the State of Virginia would be willing to enter into a compact with some States which grow flue-cured tobacco and not others. I am one of the few lawyers in this House who does not claim to be a constitutional lawyer, but it seems to me very clear that we cannot, in advance, give consent to entering into a compact between States unless the identical States are mentioned, or at least clearly identified.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I remember it, this amendment reads, "or any other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act." It seems to me the words "referred to in said act" refer to the types of tobacco. It has no reference whatever to the naming of certain States in the act.

Mr. BOILEAU. It limits it to those States specifically mentioned, unless the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones] would clear the matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to let this go over for the time being and come back to it later?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am willing to do that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be passed temporarily and be considered as pending, and that we proceed with the balance of the act. with the understanding that we return to this section and dispose of this amendment at a later time, as if it were being done now. I refer to this amendment or any substitutes or modifications thereof that may be in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILLETTE: Page 1, line 7, between the est word "or" and the word "commerce", insert the word "intrafirst word "or' state."

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this act is to consent to certain compacts between States for the control of the production of tobacco, but in addition we are consenting to compacts for controlling commerce in tobacco. I do not believe anybody will seriously contend that we could consent to a compact between States for the control of interstate commerce, but to make it absolutely clear I offer this amendment to insert the word "intrastate", limiting the consent to compacts for intrastate commerce alone in tobacco.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. As used in this act, unless otherwise stated or unless the context or subject matter clearly indicates otherwise—
"Person" means any individual, partnership, joint-stock company, corporation, or association.

"State act" means any act of a State legislature authorizing a compact or compacts pursuant to the consent given in this act.

"Commission" means the tobacco commission created by any State act "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture of the United

'Kind of tobacco" means one or more types of tobacco as classified in Service and Regulatory Announcement No. 118 of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture as listed below according to the name or names by which known:

Types 11, 12, 13, and 14, known as flue-cured tobacco.
Type 31, known as burley tobacco.
Types 21, 22, 23, 24, 35, 36, and 37, known as fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco.

Types 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, and 46, known as cigar-filler tobacco.
Types 51, 52, 53, 54, and 65, known as cigar-binder tobacco.
Types 61 and 62, known as cigar-wrapper tobacco.
"Association" means any association of tobacco producers or other persons engaged in the tobacco industry, or both, formed under the laws of any State for the purpose of stabilizing the marketing of tobacco and providing crop protection to producers of tobacco in any State or States.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I was brought up between the tobacco rows and in my early life on the farm, as the son of a tenant tobacco farmer, I had a part in the sowing of the plant beds, cultivation, and preparation of tobacco for the market, and during those several years I killed hundreds of thousands of tobacco worms. At that time we caught the worm between the thumb and forefinger and flipped its head off. They have changed the process somewhat—they do not kill them by violence, but give them a little sweetened poison, a more

I am, of course, deeply interested in the tobacco growers of my district and of my State. However, I have very great concern about this measure. I am wondering-and may I issue this word of warning to my friends in the House from Kentucky?—if you are not attempting to do the very thing here which in the long run is going to result in positive injury to the tobacco growers of Kentucky and other States in which it is now being cultivated. There are 43 States in the Union and millions of acres in foreign lands whose soil will produce tobacco. Only a few States now produce tobacco in any large quantity; perhaps not more than 21 States in all produce tobacco to amount to anything. Are you not now attempting to do something which will in the next few years result in tobacco being grown in 43 States instead of 21 and increase by millions of acres tobacco cultivation in foreign countries?

Furthermore, the measure before us does not pretend to help any tobacco grower in Kentucky, burley or otherwise. The bill expressly limits its provisions to flue-cured tobacco produced in only four States-Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. Kentucky does not produce any flue-cured tobacco.

This measure authorizes the four States-Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia-to enter into a compact for the production and sale of flue-cured tobaccono other kind of tobacco-provided the Legislatures of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia accept and adopt without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" an act already passed on this subject by the State of Virginia. By forcing Congress and these three other States to accept in toto the plan of Virginia, it seems to me that Congress is being governed by the Legislature of Virginia. The way this bill is brought up there can be no amendment to the Virginia plan. We must swallow it-hook, line, and sinker.

Now, there is another provision in the bill whereby other States could form tobacco compacts, but if they do they must come back to Congress and have the compact approved. Under this bill, when Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia get together and form a compact, Congress will have no opportunity to pass upon it. In other words, we are now undertaking in the House to establish a "flue cured" tobacco bloc made up of four States.

I apprehend that it will not be long until you and I are called upon to establish a wheat bloc, a corn bloc, a cotton bloc, a fruit bloc, a cattle bloc, a hog bloc, and it has been suggested by my friend before me that we will be called upon to authorize a peanut bloc; and in the end our Congress and the country will be made up of blocs. If there is anything that threatens the security of your country and mine, it is blocs in Congress. What we need to think about in these terrible times is a great loyal American bloc, embracing the whole country and all of our people. [Applause.]

What will be the result when we have become a wheat bloc, corn bloc, fruit bloc, cotton bloc, cheese bloc, milk bloc, and hundreds of other blocs that might be formed is something to think about.

Many able lawyers believe this proposed act unconstitutional—just another New Deal unconstitutional proposal.

LOST MARKETS NOT REGAINED

Experience in this country teaches that when we once lose a market, it is difficult, if not impossible, to regain it. The chances are, if these tobacco compacts are put into operation as it is desired, one of these days Kentucky will find her type of tobacco being grown in other States where no tobacco is now grown. We will have the experience we have had with the cotton cut-out under the Bankhead Cotton Control Act. Nineteen hundred and thirty-two is when we had our economic low-water mark, but we exported 4,500,000 more bales of cotton in 1932 than we did in 1935. Our export of cotton in 1935 was not half as much as it was in 1932.

We increased the price of cotton. Brazil and other countries were encouraged to increase their production of cotton, and they began and have been ever since furnishing a lot of the cotton that we used to furnish to England and other foreign countries. We may be bringing about the same result for tobacco, and we may find tobacco being grown in 43 States instead of 21 and Kentucky will be badly hurt. The demand for Kentucky tobacco may be cut down by millions of pounds.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman refers to lost markets, particularly cotton. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the export of cotton is already 1,000,000 bales greater this year than in 1935?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I question the accuracy of the gentleman's information, but if it is true, our export of cotton was 3,500,000 bales short in 1935 of what it was in

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am interested to find out whether my friend is going to vote for or against the bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As it stands at the present time I want to say to the gentleman that he will find me on the floor voting the way I talk and talking the way I vote. [Applause.]

Kentucky used to have a hemp field on almost every farm in the farming sections. The Democrats came into power and took the tariff off of hemp. This encouraged the growth of hemp in the Philippine Islands and other foreign countries. Our Kentucky farmers could not compete with the cheap labor and cheap taxes of those foreign countries. We lost our hemp market, and you can scarcely find a field of hemp in Kentucky today. Generally when you once lose a market it is gone forever. I am afraid that our cotton growers will wake up one of these days to find they have lost a big end of their cotton market forever through the ill-advised, unconstitutional Bankhead Cotton Control Act of this administration.

I make this prediction, if this measure is passed, that the demand for Kentucky tobacco will not be increased 1 pound within the next 5 years, but the chances are that the demand for Kentucky tobacco will be diminished, and that we will find, as I have said before, tobacco being produced in 43 States instead of 21 and tobacco being produced in foreign countries and sent to our country in competition with the American tobacco growers.

Honestly believing that this may be the consequences of this legislation, although brought up on a tobacco farm and sincerely interested in the tobacco growers of my district and State, I feel compelled to cast my vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that unfortunately the gentleman from Kentucky, who has just preceded me, belongs to one bloc he did not mention; that is the antibloc opposed to everything we are attempting to do for the people of this country. [Laughter.]

I am particularly pleased to express a word of appreciation to the gentleman who originated this measure. When it was first written the tobacco growers of my district were not included. When I explained to Judge Kerr and his associates that my district desired to receive the benefits of this legislation our cigar-tobacco farmers were included.

To the Committee on Agriculture I express not alone my own thanks but the thanks of the farmers of the Connecticut Valley, as well as the other farmers throughout the country who will receive the benefits of this legislation.

Just before I left my district to return for this session of Congress, at the request, insistently made, a meeting of the tobacco growers of my district was held in my office. At that time the A. A. A. was still in force. These farmers came together to express to me their will and their wish that I do everything within my power to continue the provisions of the

A. A. And then a black day came for them when that measure was declared unconstitutional and, necessarily, the bill known as the Kerr-Smith bill was repealed. The Kerr-Smith Act, in a referendum held, had been endorsed overwhelmingly by the farmers in my district. Since its repeal I have received telegrams, delegations, and letters pleading that this Congress do something to protect and continue the benefits they had gained in the early days of this administration.

They are watching anxiously everything that is being done here. They are reading every word uttered on the floor of this House. They are praying that the Congress of the United States continue that fine cooperation which we have been giving them during the last 3 years. They ask that that cooperation be continued. As their Representative, I appeal to the Members of the House to support this measure, because it means prosperity not alone to the farmers of my district but through them to industry and merchants as well.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I assume when we reach that state that was referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky a moment ago, that is, when we reach the bloc state, then one might very well address himself to this distinguished body in the words of Cassius when he spoke to the Roman multitude, and said:

Ye blocks, ye stones, you worse than senseless things! Oh, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, knew you not Pompey?

But I shall not speak of any bloc. If I was possessed of the magnificent conceit like the six tailors of Tooley Street who addressed a petition to Queen Elizabeth beginning with the words "we the people of England", I might say that the people of the Sixteenth Congressional District of Illinois are opposed to this bill. The fact is, however, that they have had no chance to be informed on this matter, and so I must speak for them and to vote as I believe they would like to have me vote on a measure of this kind.

But I believe I shall ultimately be constrained to vote against this bill. I find inspiration for this conclusion in the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee, who yesterday spoke somewhat about the unwisdom perhaps of the pending legislation but that it was probably not within the province of the Congress to determine whether this was a wise and discreet policy or not. I can hardly subscribe to this view.

In view of the fact that section 10, article I of the Constitution reserves to the Federal Government the right to withhold sanction or give its approval to States entering into agreements and compacts, this necessarily must imply that we also have the permissive power to determine upon the wisdom and the discretion of the policy that is embraced within the terms of that kind of compact. I doubt somewhat whether this is going to be a very wise policy. Let us not forget that the end of this legislation is not necessarily reduction in production. That is but the means to the end. The real end, of course, is to raise the price of tobacco. If that be true, then the minute there is a recession in the price of other basic commodities we will have the same identical thing to face from other sections of the country.

Let me point out, for instance, that the records of the Department of Agriculture will show that the flax acreage has increased approximately 13 percent; the corn acreage in 1936 will be up 7 percent; spring wheat acreage will be up 19 percent; winter wheat acreage will be up 10 percent; peanut acreage will be up; and other acreages will be up. I venture to say, in view of the heavy carry-over that exists in connection with some basic commodities, such as 152,000,000 bushels in wheat and millions of bushels of corn in the cribs and on the farms in the Corn Belt, there will be a recession in price. There usually is as we go from one crop into another. Nothing can stop it. I venture the prophecy on the floor of the House today that when December corn goes on the Chicago board it will probably go on at 50 cents or the reabouts. When this banners, it simply means our farmers will look to the Congress of the United States for some policy or legislation to bolster the price. Once the precedent of compacts is established they will have a right to do so. The result will be that the Congress will be hearing about the possibility of compacts for other commodities. And how easy it would be in connection with some of the basic commodities to develop compacts whereby you set up a species of sectionalism in this country?

Let us not forget, for instance, that cane sugar is grown in only two States of the Union and flaxseed is grown in only five or six States.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me finish this one thought I have in mind, and I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Beet sugar is controlled in six or seven States. Rice is controlled in four States. How easy it will be, when there is a recession in the price of rice for four States to come in and say, "We ask sanction for a compact", and then what have you? You have one section of the country set against the other for the purpose of controlling prices.

Now, it might be said to me that we do not grow tobacco in Illinois, and therefore we have no interest in the matter. It is true we do not grow tobacco, but we do consume tobacco. We have 8,000,000 people in the State of Illinois, and we probably consume more tobacco than a dozen other small States put together. So we are thinking in terms of the consumer as well as the producer; but what I object to particularly is the setting up of a precedent whereby those who are producing other basic commodities will walk through a door of compacts, and then you will have the Corn Belt against the Cotton Belt, the Tobacco Belt against the Flax Belt, and the Rice Belt against the Sugar Belt, and everything will be done for the purpose of controlling and raising the price without a proper regard for the consumer. Moreover, producers of general crops such as wheat and corn will be at a distinct disadvantage, because it will be infinitely more difficult to bring a larger number of States into such a compact.

Let us not forget that back in Andy Jackson's time we had a sectional difficulty. Let us not forget that the Webster-Hayne debate started from a resolution introduced by a Senator Foote, from Connecticut, who sought to close the settling of western lands so that artisans and craftsmen would not leave the seaboard and go west, thereby creating a labor shortage and raising wage levels in the industrial States of the East. Thus was sectionalism raised, until it became a flaming issue.

I wonder if this is not going to do the same thing, and I would hesitate to vote for this bill on the basis of broad policy. I doubt that anyone will question the right of the Congress to examine into the wisdom of the policy set forth in a proposed compact and to withhold its approval if such compacts are not in the best interest of the country.

The only ground on which this proposal is sought to be justified is that the value of tobacco per acre is so high in comparison with other crops that the new Soil Conservation Act is inadequate to meet the stiuation. That fact can scarcely be cited as justification for this measure, because we are dealing with a matter of broad policy, with vast future implications. In some sections the new Soil Conservation Act already provides for benefits on 30 percent of the base acreage of tobacco as against 15 percent on the base acreage of other crops, and also provides from 3 to 4 cents per pound of the normal production as a benefit payment where erosion-prevention crops or soil-rebuilding crops are planted. Liberalization of the regulations under that act would appear preferable to a measure such as the pending bill, which contains possibilities of great danger as time goes on.

goes on the Chicago board it will probably go on at 50 cents or thereabouts. When this happens, it simply means our pact or agreement between States to control production and raise prices. To corporations who attempt such a policy. we point an accusing finger and say they are attempting to violate the antitrust laws by a monopolistic practice. Can States do it with Federal sanction? To say the least, it presents an interesting question, that will one day return to plague us if this bill becomes law.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, after reading an account of the grass-roots convention sometime ago, held by the Republican Party, I cannot understand the position that they take today on the other side of the House. If there ever was a proposition coming before this House that was for States' rights, this is it.

I represent the tobacco-growing area of South Carolina. Our people want to do with the growing of tobacco and the regulating of its production as they would like, and the grass-roots convention went on record in favor of States'

I cannot understand why my Republican friends should take the position that they have here against this bill. This bill does nothing more than giving the States that grow flue-cured tobacco the right to control the production and the marketing of that staple.

There is no agricultural product in the United States that pays as much tax into the United States Treasury as fluecured tobacco. The records will show this. Last year about $450,000,000 of tax was paid on the manufactured flue-cured tobacco that was raised, mostly in four States of the Union. The estimated amount that will be paid this year, 1936, will be over $500,000,000 from these States paid into the Treasury from this tobacco, which is grown almost exclusively in four States. While we are paying these taxes into the Treasury, and also to the manufacturers, why should we not be allowed, in the States, to pass legislation that will protect the farmers through regulation of the production and sale of tobacco so that they may at least get a living out of it?

This is all we are asking and I cannot understand the position of the gentlemen who are opposing this bill. We are only asking that these States be allowed to control the production of tobacco to this extent, and the Supreme Court has intimated that this was in the province of the States and not of the United States.

I consider the A. A. A. the most important and only act ever passed in the history of this country that would give protection to the farmers of the country, and the farmers are really the main stay and backbone of the country. The farmers of my section of the country have come out of the depression under this act. They are today on their feet, but the Supreme Court has held that the Federal Government had no right to step in with regards to the control of production, but that the people of the States should be allowed to do as they please with regards to that.

Under the Kerr Act and the Bankhead Act these could not become effective until a large majority of the farmers had signed an agreement and were willing to come in under this. The Supreme Court has held that the people of the United States cannot protect themselves under their own agreement by an act of Congress, but they have intimated that they could be protected by an act of their own legislatures for all of their best interest and in the interest of the United States Government.

The only other phase of this bill provides for a loan from the United States to enable the cooperating States to set up their machinery, and I can assure the Members of the House that this loan will be speedily paid if you will give us the right asked under this legislation.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, a question comes here and asks permission to enter into a compact with other States have with this Congress? The purpose of the compact is for the general welfare of their people.

The provision in the Constitution, "No State shall without the consent of Congress enter into any agreement or compact with another State", should be read in connection with the context, which is as follows:

No State without the consent of Congress shall lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power or engage in war unless actually invaded or in such immi-nent danger as will not admit of delay.

Clearly the compact or agreement herein contemplated that the State may not enter into is one that might be contrary to a sound public policy. It is my opinion that if Congress approves the subject matter and general purpose and gives its consent to States to enter into a compact, the States are then at liberty to effectuate the purpose as they think proper, and it is unnecessary again to submit the compacts to Congress after they are made if they are within the purview of the consent given.

If there was no such provision as that under consideration, States might make such compacts as they pleased even to the extent of nullifying the Constitution itself.

The contingency stated is a very different matter from that in which the States are given the authority to enter into a compact for a purpose which if successful will be for the general welfare and which cannot result in any derogation of the powers of the National Government. Under our form of Government, which is one of delegated powers to the National Government, it seems eminently just and proper that when the States request the authority to enter into compacts which have for their purpose as contemplated by the States the general welfare and there is nothing objectionable in the purpose for which the compacts are made that the National Congress should grant the consent.

The right to enter into a compact is after all one of the reserved powers of the States, subject to the required consent of Congress.

In the case of Virginia v. Tennessee (148 U. S. 518) it was held that-the terms "compact" and "agreement" do not apply to every possible compact or agreement between one State and another for the validity of which the consent of Congress must be obtained, but the prohibition is directed to the formation of any combination tending to the increase of political power in the States which may encroach upon or interfere with the just supremacy of the United States (Virginia v. Tennessee (1843), 148 U. S. 518, 13 S. Ct. 728, 37 L. Ed. 537).

That is the philosophy of this provision of the Constitution. If the compact does not encroach upon the supremacy of the Federal powers, it seems to me it would be presumptuous in Congress to say to the States, "We cannot trust your judgment about this matter, and we do not intend to give you the power that you say is for the welfare of your people."

There is one thing certain, that the tobacco farmer came to penury and want, and the Triple A put him back where he could make a living for himself and family. I believe it is proper that the States should be allowed to work out their own problems.

How can you who talk about the concentration of power in Washington, when the States come and ask permission to solve their own problems for the welfare of their people, refuse them? I see no reason why anybody should vote against the bill, because I believe it is based upon fundamental principles and in accordance with the sound Democratic doctrine. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary is authorized to make advances from time to time, from the funds hereinafter provided, to the tobacco commission established by the State act of each State which enters into a compact or compacts under the consent given by this act in such amounts as the Secretary shall determine to be required for the payment of administrative expenses incurred by has come to my mind which has not been discussed. That is, What weight should the request of a sovereign State that provide for the repayment to the Secretary of such advances from any funds received by the commission from the sale of marketing certificates with respect to tobacco, prior to the use of such funds for any other purpose.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I have told you many times, I am a farmer, but perhaps it is not necessary to do so as you could perhaps tell by looking at me. Nevertheless, my friends, I am interested in the farmer, and it does not matter whether the farmer is in Kentucky, Virginia, or Minnesota. I believe this legislation is proper and would be of great benefit to many farmers and should be passed. [Applause.] I am a little sorry that my friend from Missouri, with his eloquence and ability to express his opinion, is not on the side of the farmers of this Nation. I am sure that he could be very helpful to the farmers if he would use his talent in the right way. [Applause.] My friend from Missouri spoke about coaxing chickens into the pen where he could wring their necks, but he undoubtedly has forgotten when Hoover enticed us farmers down the road and forced us to sell our produce for nothing. [Applause.] We did not wait for Hoover to wring our necks, but a great many of the farmers and others in this Nation committed suicide by jumping out of the window and others by taking the shotgun route rather than live under Hoover conditions. He speaks about catching a horse and putting him in a collar with one sore on his shoulder. I should like the gentleman to know that the horse was caught and had two sores on his shoulder when we were trying to beat this Hoover game. [Applause.]

I am surprised at some of you Republicans on this side, the way you talk and work against farm legislation. I have heard some of my colleagues say on this floor that they were against the farmers setting the price. Every other business in this Nation sets the price, and why should not the farmer have something to do with setting his price? The farmers cannot organize individually without some help. We have tried that for generations. We have to have some help from the Government or from the States before we can organize and have a decent price for what we produce. My friends on the Republican side are all good fellows individually, but politically they are on the wrong track. [Applause.] I know a great many of these Congressmen from the East. I can appreciate that they want us farmers to raise foodstuff for nothing, so that they can eat it at our expense. We are just about tired of producing for nothing. I have seen the farmer's wife and children go half clothed, and in some cases half fed as well, while these eastern plutocrats were rolling in fat down there when we were feeding them for nothing. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DUNCAN. The gentleman has referred to the gentleman from Missouri. Will the gentleman please identify the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Oh, I believe the people back home should identify him, the way he is talking here on the floor. I think his name is recorded under the speech that he has made here a few minutes ago, and to which I am attempting to answer.

Mr. DUNCAN. The gentleman refers to my good friend DEWEY SHORT?

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I think I have a recollection of Dewey Short, who has been talking here. plause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to get a little information from the committee in reference to this bill. This refers, as I understand it, to the tobacco growers' compacts to be made between the States for the benefit of the tobacco growers. I ask the chairman of the committee,

How much of this land upon which they raise these tobacco crops is owned by the so-called trust, the big cigarette manufacturers?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Not any of it.

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I wanted to make clear, because I intend to vote for this proposition. I want to make it clear that we are voting for the poor farmer who is raising tobacco, and not for the Cigarette Trust and the exponents of small wages and long hours, whose code, when we had the N. R. A., was written by Clay Williams, for the benefit of the Cigarette Trust. This, as I understand it, is for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The land is owned entirely by individual farmers.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in favor of that sort of legislation, and now let me say to my good friend from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER], who referred to easterners who are living on the fat of the land while the farmer is getting nothing for his product, that up in my congressional district no one eats on the fat of the land. When the shoe workers in the city of Lynn and the textile workers in the city of Lawrence are not working they cannot buy the farmer's product or the product of anyone else, and the United States Government has not stepped in at any time to give them any aid.

Mr. KVALE. Then I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he is a notable exception.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. The most I know about the people in the East living on the fat of the land is that last fall, when I went down to a hotel on Fifth Avenue, they were paying $7 for a bed and $1.50 for meals, and we farmers cannot do that, so I expect that they were living on the fat of the land.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Buckler] that I intend to vote for this bill, which is for the benefit of the farmers, and I hope that when we come here some day with a bill asking for a 30-hour week, higher wages, and shorter hours, in order that the workers may be able to buy the products of the farmers, the gentleman will support us in that proposition.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I have supported labor all through this Congress and I expect to keep on doing it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I wanted to hear the gentleman say. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary shall, upon the request of the commission of any compacting State, designate such tobacco producers or other persons engaged in the tobacco industry and such officials of the United States Department of Agriculture as he deems advisable to meet with the tobacco commissions for the different States for the purpose of advising in connection with the administration of any compact or compacts entered into pursuant to this act.

SEC. 5. The Secretary, from the funds hereinafter provided, is authorized to make loans, upon terms and conditions stipulated by him, to such association of tobacco producers as may operate with respect to the 1936 crop in the Georgia Tobacco Belt, in a manner similar to that embodied in State acts providing for compacts under the consent given in this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 21, after the word "loans", insert "for administrative purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The Secretary is hereby authorized, upon the request of the commission of any compacting State, to make available to the commission of any State such records and information, whether published or unpublished, and such facilities of the United States Department of Agriculture as the Secretary deems appropriate in aiding such commission.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 4, after the word "State", insert the words "or at the request of any association referred to in section 5."

Page 5, line 6, after the word "State", insert "or to any such association."

Page 5, line 10, after the word "commission", insert the words "or association."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 7. (b) Any advances or loans which are repaid to the Secretary by any commission pursuant to section 3 of this act shall be held in a special fund in the Treasury of the United States and shall be available until expended for the purpose of administering this act or until such time as the Secretary shall determine that all or any part of such funds will not be needed for such purpose, whereupon all or any part of such funds shall, upon approval by the Secretary, revert to the general fund of the Treasury of the

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I desire to make a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. JONES. We intend to offer an amendment striking out the appropriation.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. I do not care to argue it. It is conceded by the chairman of the committee, I think.

Mr. JONES. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cooley: On page 5, after the word "association", in line 10, strike out all of section 7 and insert a new section, to be numbered section 7 and to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. (a) For the purpose of administering this act there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that

"(b) Any advances or loans which are repaid to the Secretary by any commission or association pursuant to sections 3 and 5 of this act shall revert to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to discuss the amendment, but section 7 has been stricken out of the bill by the decision of the Chair and by the Speaker on yesterday, and I think the amendment to that extent should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified as to cover the same.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley].

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. All funds available for carrying out this act shall be available for allotment to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal or State governments as the Secretary may request to cooperate or assist in carrying out this act.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against section 8 for the same reason as applied to section 7. The section makes available and transfers funds in the Treasury for a different purpose than that for which they have been appropriated, and I think under the precedents and decision of the Speaker and of the Chair it is subject to the same point of order as was raised to section 7.

If there is any question about the matter, I should like to call the attention of the Chair particularly to a precedent in the Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, page 4891, where somewhat similar language to this was passed upon by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time. Democratic leader at that time, Mr. Garner, now Vice President, participated in the debate; also the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Longworth, who was afterward Speaker of the House. It pertained to a bill to control the importation of dyes and chemicals, and a point of order was raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Walsh, against section 3 of that bill. Section 3 of the bill reads as follows:

That the appropriation "Collecting the revenue from customs, 1922", is hereby made available for the payment of salaries and all other expenditures incident to the operation of the Dye and Chemical Section, Division of Customs, Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Longworth, argued against

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee | spoke in favor of the point of order. I should like particularly to read what the gentleman from Texas said-I am quoting from the remarks of the gentleman from Texas on the point of order:

> Mr. Garner. Mr. Chairman, this case is undoubtedly on all fours with the pink-bollworm proposition. In that instance there was an appropriation of $545,000 appropriated for the eradication of the pink bollworm. The Committee on Agriculture reported a provision authorizing a divergence of $250,000 of that amount for a purpose not originally enumerated in the law, to wit, to pay for the use of land in the eradication of the pink bollworm. Now, the appropriation is already made, but this bill proposes to divert it for another purpose, and I do not think there is any doubt but under the logic of the Chair at the time, who held that the divergence of an appropriation already made was tantamount to making a new appropriation, that the point of order in this case is good because this does divert for another purpose than the appropriation already made. Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, this case is undoubtedly on all fours appropriation already made.

> Let us illustrate it, if the Chair please. Suppose you make an appropriation of $10,000 for a purpose which would take only $5,000. Then $5,000 will be reverted to the Treasury. Now, it is contended that another committee other than the Appropriations Committee has authority to come in and divert the other $5,000 for some other particular purpose. I think the logic of the Chair at the time he held the pink-bollworm diversion was not authorized under the rules of the House was good; and if it was, undoubtedly this is on all fours with it.

The Chairman of the Whole at that time, the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Campbell, agreed with the reasoning of the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Garner, and sustained the point of order.

It seems to me the language in section 8 of the pending bill is equivalent to an express appropriation. It reads:

SEC. 8. All funds available for carrying out this act shall be available for allotment to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal or State governments as the Secretary may request to cooperate or assist in carrying out this act.

I call the Chair's attention to the fact that the fees paid by the handlers of tobacco for so-called marketing agreements under section 3 go into the Treasury of the United States and are a part of the funds referred to in this section. They would remain in the Treasury and not be available to the Secretary of Agriculture or to anyone except for the language in section 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JONES. I desire to be heard briefly, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I submit the suggestion that by the provisions of the amendment to the previous section any advance or loans repaid to the Secretary by any commission, and so forth, shall revert to the Treasury of the United States; so the point of order made by the gentleman is not applicable. Section 7 (a) is where provision is made with reference to the funds mentioned in section 3. All that is involved in section 8 is the amount appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture for administrative purposes, and this is merely a matter of allowing him to permit some other bureau assisting him to use the same fund. It is not a new appropriation, it is the same appropriation and it is for the same function, that of administration. It does not involve a new appropriation if a man's assistant spends the man's money helping him do the job. In fact, this involves no appropriation at all. It only refers to the use of funds authorized to be appropriated in a previous section-if and when such appropriation is made.

If the gentleman from Michigan will look at the previous section, he will find the funds mentioned in section 3, and the collections thereof revert to the Treasury automatically, under the amendment which we just adopted and which takes the place of the provision which was stricken out.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Will not the gentleman from Texas admit that section 8 might divert some of the funds which may be appropriated under the committee's substitute for section 7, which would not be so diverted except for section 8?

Mr. JONES. That would be true for any part of the funds that are appropriated there for administrative purposes but the point of order. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Garner, not for advances and loans, because subdivision (b) of section 7 specifically eliminates all loans and advances and | puts them back into the Treasury when they are repaid. So, by virtue of the limitation in section (b) this can apply only to administrative funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is raised against section 8 of the bill, which provides:

All funds available for carrying out this act shall be available for allotment to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal or State governments as the Secretary may request to cooperate or assist in carrying out this act.

As the Chair understands, this bill does not carry any appropriation—that part of the bill was stricken out on a point of order-and therefore there are no funds available so far as the bill stands at the present time.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. If, pursuant to this act, any compact entered into among three or more of the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Connecticut, becomes effective, or if any association or associations are formed, the membership of which includes at least two-thirds of the producers of cigar-filler tobacco and cigar-binder tobacco in three or more of said States, commerce in cigar-filler tobacco produced in Puerto Rico shall be regulated during the period in which any such compact remains effective or such associations continue to operate, as follows:

(a) The Secretary shall determine for each crop year, by calculations from available statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture, the quantity of cigar-filler tobacco produced in the continental United States and Puerto Rico which is likely to be consumed in all countries of the world during such crop year, increased or decreased, as the case may be, by the amount by which the world stocks of cigar-filler tobacco (produced in the continental United States and Puerto Rico) at the beginning of such crop year are less than or greater than the normal stocks of such cigar-filler tobacco, as determined by the Secretary. For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall specify as a "crop year" such period of 12 months as he deems will facilitate the administration of this section.

12 months as he deems will facilitate the administration of this section.

(b) The Secretary shall determine a marketing quota for Puerto Rico for cigar-filler tobacco for each crop year in which the provisions of this section are operative. Such quota shall be that quantity of cigar-filler tobacco which bears the same proportion (subject to such adjustment, which may be cumulative from one crop year to another, not exceeding 5 percent of said proportion in any 1 year, as the Secretary determines is necessary to correct for any abnormal conditions of production during the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935 for trends in production during such crop years and for trends in consumption since such crop years) to the total quantity of cigar-filler tobacco produced in the continental United States and Puerto Rico and required for world consumption (as determined pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section) as the average production of cigar-filler tobacco in Puerto Rico in the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935 bore to the average of the total production of cigar-filler tobacco in the continental United States and Puerto Rico in the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935.

(c) The Secretary shall establish for each farm in Puerto Rico for each crop year a tobacco-marketing quota, giving due consideration to the quantity of cigar-filler tobacco marketed from the crops produced on such farm and by the operator thereof in past years; to the land, labor, and equipment available for production of tobacco on such farm; to the crop-rotation practices on such farm; and to the soil and other physical factors affecting production of tobacco on such farm: Provided, That the total of the marketing quotas established for all farms in Puerto Rico for such crop year.

(d) The marketing quota established for Puerto Rico and the crop year shall not exceed the marketing quota for Puerto Rico for such crop year.

(d) The marketing quota established for Puerto Rico and the marketing quotas established for farms in Puerto Rico for any crop year pursuant to paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section shall be subject to such uniform adjustment during the crop year, not exceeding 10 percent of said quotas, as the Secretary shall determine to be necessary to establish and maintain normal world stocks of clear-filler tobacco produced in the continents! United States mine to be necessary to establish and maintain normal world stocks of cigar-filler tobacco produced in the continental United States and Puerto Rico and otherwise to effectuate the purposes of this act.

(e) The Secretary shall, under such terms and conditions and in accordance with such methods as may be established in regulations prescribed by him, issue, to buyers or handlers of tobacco from any farm in Puerto Rico, marketing certificates for an amount of tobacco equal to the marketing quota established for such farm, and, for any tobacco marketed in excess of such quota for such farm, sell, to the buyer or handlers of such excess tobacco, marketing certificates for a charge equal to one-third of the current market value of such tobacco, and the Secretary may require the buyer or handler of such excess tobacco to deduct the charge for marketing certificates from the price or proceeds of or advances on marketing certificates from the price or proceeds of or advances on such tobacco.

(f) From the proceeds received from the sale of marketing certificates pursuant to paragraph (e) of this section, the Secretary shall make payments to the producers of tobacco on farms in Puerto Rico from which the sales of tobacco, because of weather or diseases or loss by fire affecting the tobacco crops thereon adversely.

during any crop year, are less than the marketing quotas for such farms for such crop year. Such payments shall be at a rate per pound of such deficit as shall be determined by dividing the funds remaining after deduction of such amount as the Secretary estiremaining after deduction of such amount as the Secretary estimates to be necessary for the payment of administrative expenses incurred in administering the provisions of this section by the total number of pounds by which the sales of tobacco from all such farms fall below the marketing quotas for such farms.

(g) The action of any officer, employee, or agent in determining the amount of and in making any payment authorized to be made under this section shall not be subject to review by any officer of the Government other than the Secretary of Agriculture.

(h) The sale, marketing, purchase, or transportation of any cigar-filler tobacco produced, sold, or marketed in Puerto Rico during any period of time when this section shall be in effect is hereby prohibited unless a marketing certificate has been issued for such tobacco by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cochran: Page 10, beginning in line 1, strike out all of subsection (g).

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. I cannot see any objection to the gentleman's amendment, if no one wants to keep that language in.

Mr. SHORT. I am glad the committee accepts the amend-

Mr. JONES. I am only expressing my own personal ideas, not speaking for the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, since becoming a Member of Congress it has been my pleasure to do everything that I could for the benefit of agriculture and to support all measures that I thought would really be for the best interest of the farmers of this country. I recognize today, as I did when the first Kerr bill was presented to the House for consideration, that those Members of that particular part of the United States engaged in raising tobacco are moved by most sincere efforts to benefit the farmers they are representing. I appreciate that attitude. I expect if I came from that part of the United States and felt that the majority of the people wanted me to support such legislation in my representative capacity, I would do so. But I believe I would be remiss to my theory of government if I did not voice what I think are the objectionable features of this legislation.

I am opposed to it primarily because it is compulsory. I am opposed to any governmental compulsion in regard to business or agriculture. At the same time I wish to state that I was always a staunch supporter of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, known as the A. A. A. It was, in my opinion, as has been often stated, merely a farmer's tariff; however, I can see no relation between that legislation and the proposed legislation. The former was not compulsory, and I say this notwithstanding the Supreme Court's opinion, which I expect to hereafter refer to. It was a voluntary contractual relation for which the farmer received certain expressed consideration, all of which is foreign to the State statutes in question. And while it is merely my personal opinion, I do not believe that this administration is any more in favor of this proposed scheme than it was in favor of the Potato Act, which was passed the latter part of last session and had to be repealed at the beginning of this session. In the next place, as has been brought out here from time to time, I do not believe that the proposed laws, to be adopted by the various States to the compact in question, are constitutional; and, therefore, according to my way of thinking, we should not pass this act and thereby place our stamp of approval on such legislation.

Parts of the proposed act read as follows: Section 10 of the South Carolina bill contained in the committee hearings, commencing on page 26 of the hearings, and section 11 of the Virginia act found in the Congressional Record, commencing on page 5112 of the RECORD of this session, has the following provision:

The commission is authorized and directed: (a) To establish, in accordance with section 12 of this act, tobacco-marketing quotas for each kind of tobacco for individual farms within the State for each year.

And the next section, being section 11 of the South Carolina act, and section 12 of the Virginia act, reads as follows:

(c) The tobacco base established for each farm, under paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section 12, shall be fair and reasonable for such farms as compared with the tobacco bases for other farms which are similar with respect to the following: The past production of tobacco on the farm and by the operator thereof, land, labor, and equipment available for the production of tobacco; the crop-rotation practices; and the soil and other physical factors tending to affect the production of tobacco.

(d) To the tobacco base established for each farm, pursuant to paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section 12, there shall be applied the percentage which the marketing quota for the State is of the total of the tobacco bases for all farms in the State, and resulting figure shall be the marketing quota for the farm.

And the following section in part reads as follows:

SEC. 14. The commission is authorized and directed: (a) Upon application therefore by any producer, as defined in section 2 hereof, to issue to the buyer or handler who purchases or handles the tobacco, marketing certificates for an amount of tobacco not exceeding the marketing quota for the farm on which said tobacco is produced, or the quantity of tobacco marketed from the crop produced on such farm, whichever is the smaller.

And section 19 of the South Carolina and section 20 of the Virginia act reads as follows:

Any person violating any provision of this act, or any regulation of the commission shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined a sum of not less than $10 for the first offense, and not less than $25 for each subsequent offense.

In other words, a commission can tell a farmer what he can raise and what he cannot raise; how much he can raise and how much he cannot raise. And the farmer, under such a law, would not know what day the sheriff might appear and drag him to jail for overproducing or overselling. To be governed by boards and commissions in regard to governmental matters is bad enough, but to have our private businesses ruled by such boards and commissions is objectionable; in fact, it is intolerable and opposed to the American system of government. And it is no less objectionable or less intolerable if the particular board or commission happens to be a State agency in the place of a Federal authority. According to my judgment, a State statute containing such provisions is squarely unconstitutional under that part of the fourteenth amendment of our Federal Constitution which reads as follows:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

I do not believe that the Federal Government or the States have such authority to regulate by compulsion either business or agriculture. I do not believe we can do indirectly what we cannot do directly. The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States of America, petitioner, against William M. Butler et al., receivers of Hoosac Mills Corporation, holding the Agricultural Adjustment Act invalid, seems to be generally interpreted to the effect that the States have the right to take action in regard to such regulation, but I do not think that that is a clear interpretation of this decision. I have studied the Supreme Court opinion, and I find nowhere in that decision the holding that it lies within the power of the State to pass such legislation as is here proposed. It does hold, as I interpret it, under the tenth amendment to the Constitution, that the Federal Government does not have any such authority. It is stated in that opinion that such powers as are not granted to the Federal Government under the Constitution are reserved to the States or to the people. What does that mean? It means those powers are reserved to the States or to the people to grant to the Federal Government. That is the way I interpret the decision.

If such statutes are unconstitutional and therefore the passed in the first instance? It will ultimately be set aside by the court of last resort, but in the meantime, when attempting to put it into operation, it will merely add confusion and dissension to the business in question and also set a bad precedent in the field of legislation.

I notice from the provisions of the proposed State acts that they are operative upon enactment, but become ineffective with respect to any kind of tobacco in the next succeeding crop year, providing more than one-third in a referendum vote against continuance of the act. In other words, there is no direct referendum in respect to the original operation, but its future depends upon whether it meets with the approval of two-thirds of the producers. This calls to my mind that in the last session of Congress the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] suggested that it was a Fascist idea that the majority of persons engaged in a business may employ the force of government to compel the minority to do as the majority wishes. Fifty-one percent, he said, according to this philosophy of the persons engaged in a business, be it farming or anything else, under the Fascist idea, may with the support of the government or its bureaucracies enact and enforce a law governing the conduct of business and compel the 49 percent to live a life decreed by the 51 percent, and by his remarks raised the question as to whether such philosophy was desirable in this country. Personally, I do not believe that it is. As I recall history it has been some pioneer or other who departed from the beaten tracks who discovered new worlds and opened up a new life and new freedom and new methods of business, which if he had been restricted by a 51-percent or 75-percent vote would never have been brought forth.

We all know of many instances where someone has determined that the orthodox method could be improved upon and the exception that he created later became the adopted rule of the majority. We all believe in rule by the majority in regard to governmental matters, but the very government that is established by the majority at the same time insures the rights of the minority. If we depart from this theory of our Government, it will be doubtful whether we can avoid a dictatorship or something even worse in this country.

Jefferson believed that the stability and future of this country was firmly attached to agriculture, and he made this statement in his first inaugural address: "Still one thing more, fellow citizens—a wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, which shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities." Jefferson also said if we should wander from the creed of our political faith in moments of error or of alarm that we should hasten to retrace our steps and regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Any receipts by the Secretary under section 9 of this act shall be held in a separate fund and used by the Secretary for purpose of paying administrative expenses and incurred or made in connection with section 9 of this act.

SEC. 11. If any provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 12. The Secretary shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, under the previous agreement we were to return to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Duncan: On page 2, line 15, after the comma, insert the following: "or by any other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act"

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like to prolong debate on this matter, because I stated my position a little while ago. I stated at that time that if this amendment is adopted it would add compact authorized in this act voided, why should it be to the constitutional difficulties, and I have not been convinced to the contrary. Of course, I may be in error, but | it seems to me that the adoption of this amendment might result in the acts being held unconstitutional.

I want to point out one matter for the general information of the House with reference to the effect of this legislation. There are various types of tobacco produced in the United States. Down around Kentucky, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia they produce flue-cured tobacco, burley tobacco, and fire-cured tobacco. I believe those are the principal types. Those are the types referred to in the Virginia act. In other words, this legislation provides that with reference to those types of tobacco the States may enter into these compacts without further action on the part of Congress. Any State which produces the type of tobacco referred to in the Virginia act may enter into a compact and have it effective without further action on the part of the

There is another type of tobacco produced in this country and it is quite generally produced in a different section of the country. We have the so-called cigar-wrapper and cigarfiller types of tobacco produced largely in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Wisconsin.

The only difference in this bill as to the treatment of those particular States and the more favored States is that we hereby give full carte-blanche authority to any State producing the type of tobacco raised in the South to enter into compacts which become effective without further action on the part of Congress. With reference to the type of tobacco produced in the North, we provide that those States can go ahead and negotiate a compact, but before it is effective they must come back here for our consent or ratification. The people in the cigar-type section of the country have not had an opportunity to discuss this matter, and they have not formulated a program. They do not know whether they want compacts or not, for the simple reason they have not given it any thought or consideration. I am wondering if this House of Representatives again wants to go on record in the legislative history of this session of Congress by saying that Southern States can enter into compacts without further consent of Congress, even though some of those States have not heretofore given any consideration to this type of legislation, and at the same time provide that the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Connecticut, and Wisconsin must come back and get the consent of Congress to a compact before it can become effective.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAINES. Has the gentleman received any information from his constituents on this bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I have not any information one way or the other, and I should very much like to have information and should be pleased to yield in my time to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who understands the problems of the cigar-type of tobacco as well as anybody in this House, to get his viewpoint on it.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard a word from my people back home on this proposal, and I am somewhat up in the air about it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that in my opinion this bill would not affect the type of tobacco produced in those States.

Mr. HAINES. I am confident it will not.

Mr. BOILEAU. And for that reason I am inclined to support the bill, but I think the amendment adds to the constitutional difficulties presented by the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does the gentleman consider that this lack of consideration for all the States would act as a discrimination against the Northern States and that they would have to come back here and get a ratification of their compact, while the Southern States would not have to do so?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the way it works out, but I may say to the gentleman, in order to be absolutely fair about the proposition, that I do not think there is any sentiment I this statute, but certainly in the light of the decision of the at the present time in the Northern States for such a compact.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not have any tobacco in the section I represent. There has been no disposition whatever to make this a sectional matter by anybody on the committee, and I know the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] does not intend to intimate as much.

The only reason this particular type of contract or compact is exempted from the requirement of ratification is because the people who live in these particular areas have drawn up in so many words just what they want. Naturally, we should know what we give consent to. We give consent to any State that wants to follow just what we have looked at here. If these other people from other areas of the country want a measure and will go just as far as these people have gone, I do not believe there is a man in the House who would not be willing to grant consent if the terms are reasonable and do not tend to injure the people of any other

At first, we practically determined to write into the bill that all of these negotiations should require ratification. It was discovered that if we were going to do anything this year in reference to the flue-cured tobacco of these areas it would be necessary to secure early action, and since we knew just what they were going to do and what they wanted it seemed we might make an exception as to them. As to the other types that the gentleman refers to, if they can use this character of bill they can come in under the proposed

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am sure the gentleman will agree that there is no possibility of a compact being entered into which can be effective this year with reference to any other type of tobacco except flue-cured.

Mr. JONES. I think that is probably true, although I do not know. I am not tobacco man enough to know and I would rather these other gentlemen would answer that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman recall the fact that in the committee it was made very clear by the Representatives from Kentucky, and the other States, that there would not be any possibility of those States entering into a burley program this year?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We are trying to do that.

Mr. BOILEAU. The Members from the other States gave us every reason to believe that there would not be a burley compact this year.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. There may not be, but we are trying to do so.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. How would it affect the bill if the door were left open to the other States to enter into compacts without any further ratification?

Mr. JONES. The door is open now, as long as they follow the lines of this bill. The only way there is any limitation. even by implication, is the fact that the growers of some other types of tobacco might want an entirely different bill, and, of course, we would not want to give our consent in advance to that:

Mr. O'MALLEY. Under this bill the door is closed to any other type of bill without further ratification.

Mr. JONES. Without further ratification, any type of tobacco can come in, if they will follow this plan.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the gentleman is in error. I believe the bill limits these compacts to the types of tobacco referred to in the Virginia act, which are fire-cured, fluecured, and burley tobacco.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman is correct. However, I am sure that if a reasonable program is fashioned the consent would probably be granted.

I repeat that I am not sure of the wisdom of legislation that is contemplated by the States that may be affected by Supreme Court it comes strictly under the head of the business of those States.

There may be some question as to the legality of what the States are trying to do, but the attorneys general of the various States, so I am informed, believe in and back this bill.

Inasmuch as we do not undertake to pass on the interstate feature in any sense but merely give consent, I do not believe that it is proper for me to match what little study and judgment I might have against those who want to deal with their problem that comes under the jurisdiction of those States.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bolleau) there were 81 ayes and 35 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise. Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12037) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced, providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes, and, pursuant to House Resolution 476, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? Mr. BOILEAU. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Duncan].

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en bloc. The other amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the comma, insert the following: "or by any other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Boileau) there were 87 ayes and 52 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Martin of Massachusetts) there were 106 ayes and 54

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present. The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question was taken; and there were-yeas 190, nays 116, answered "present" 2, not voting 121, as follows:

LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That any person who shall engage himself for pay, or for any consideration, to attempt to influence legislation, or to prevent legislation, by the National Congress, or to influence any Federal bureau, agency, or Government official, or Government employee, to make, modify, alter, or cancel any contract with the United States Government, or any United States bureau, agency, or official, as such official, or to influence any such bureau, agency, or official in the administration of any governmental duty, so as to give any benefit or advantage to any private corporation or individual, shall before entering into and engaging in such practice with reference to legislation as herein set out register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, and shall give to those officers his name, address, the person, association, or corporation, one or more, by whom he is employed, and in whose interest he appears or works as aforesaid. He shall likewise state how much he has been paid, and is to receive, and by whom he is paid, or is to be paid, and how much he is to be paid for expenses, and what expenses are to be included, and set out his contract in full.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11663, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the so-called Black lobbying bill?

Mr. MILLER. This is the bill as amended by the Senate. The Senate simply struck out all of the House bill and inserted the so-called Black bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And at the present time it is practically a new bill?

Mr. MILLER. It is a new bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. WEAVER, Mr. MILLER, Mr. CELLER, Mr. WALTER, Mr. HESS, and Mr. GUYER.

MONSIGNOR TIMOTHY DEMPSEY

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, Mgr. Timothy Dempsey, known throughout the Nation as "Father Tim", died in St. Louis Sunday night. The passing of a clergyman is ordinarily of local concern, but, Mr. Speaker, in this instance the last call comes to a man who during his lifetime set an example that might well be followed by others in large communities throughout our land.

"Father Tim" came to St. Louis from Ireland many years ago. When he became pastor of St. Patrick's Church in downtown St. Louis he founded a home for workingmen also known as Father Dempsey's Hotel. This was in 1906. This was followed by a home for working women. Then a convalescent home for sick women unable to be employed, a home for colored men, an emergency free lunchroom, a day nursery where women could leave their children while at work, and finally an organization known as the White Cross Crusade, which had as its purpose the prevention of tuberculosis in underprivileged children. The emergency free lunchroom was established in 1931, and since the date of opening official statistics show that over 7,000,000 free meals have been served to deserving people-black, white, Catholic, Protestant, and Jew.

His charities were supported by the good people of St. Louis and our businessmen and our women, regardless of creed, never said "No" when "Father Tim" would call them over the telephone and say, "I need $25 or $50 from you this month."

Our business houses, starting with the packers and bakers, were daily contributors.

Over 6 feet 2 inches, weighing well over 200 pounds, "Father Tim" was a commanding figure as he walked through the crowds that flocked to his places for assistance daily. He always had a word of good cheer and one of his favorite expressions was "Never mind; times will be better." When all others failed "Father Tim" stepped in and settled numerous labor disputes in our city.

"Father Tim's" charities and his institutions were successful solely because of his personal supervision and the loyal support he received from the citizens of the St. Louis community. Only the Archbishop of St. Louis can say whether they will be continued.

Just think, Mr. Speaker, of one individual being responsible for the supervision of charities, one of which alone has furnished 7,000,000 free meals to unfortunate people and you will realize the enormity of his undertaking.

While "Father Tim" thought of the unfortunate during his or her lifetime, he did not even forget them in death, for he established an "exiles' rest" in one of our leading cemeteries, and he saw to it that his unfortunate friends who stayed at his institutions received a decent burial and a last resting place. At his request he was buried along with his friends in "exiles' rest."

The example set by this good man will live long in the memories of the people of St. Louis, and while we all realize it will be a most difficult task to carry on his activities I am sure every effort will be made by the archbishop to do so.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill, H. R. 12037, have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMANDER PERCY TODD

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11053) authorizing the President to present the Distinguished Service Medal to Commander Percy Tod, British Navy, and the Navy Cross to Lt. Comdr. Charles A. deW. Kitcat, British Navy, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, strike out "Tod" and insert "Todd."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the President to present the Distinguished Service Medal to Commander Percy Todd, British Navy, and the Navy Cross to Lt. Comdr. Charles A. deW. Kitcat, British Navy."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal, disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, and the special order, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the gentleman from Missouri making an address on Thomas Jefferson, but I wonder whether the people of St. Louis are going to be opposed to that $30,000,000 to erect a memorial to Thomas Jefferson when they already have one, and whether the gentleman can satisfy the people of this country that we should build these two great memorials in St. Louis to Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon]?

There was no objection.

EXAMINATION OF NUECES RIVER IN TEXAS

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 11006) providing for the examination of the Nueces River in the State of Texas for flood-control purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been before the committee and has the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WEST. Yes. I have a report from the War Department also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination of the Nueces River in the State of Texas, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the examination of the Nueces River and its tributaries in the State of Texas for flood-control purposes."

RENEWAL OF BADGE OF UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 11562) to renew patent no. 25909, relating to the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is a regularly reported bill from the committee?

Mr. TERRY. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. This is merely following up a policy which has been adopted generally that these patriotic orders which have a badge distinctive of their order should be permitted to keep it beyond the patent period. For instance, the Daughters of the American Revolution have it, as well as various other organizations. This simply allows them to keep their badge beyond the patent period.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are there any of the girls of 1812 left? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a certain design patent issued by the United States Patent Office of date August 11, 1896, being patent no. 25909, is hereby renewed and extended for a period of 14 years from and after the passage of this act, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to the same as of the original patent, being generally known as the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE ALLOCATION OF RELIEF COSTS BY THE F. E. R. A. AND EMERGENCY RELIEF EXPENDITURES

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein three tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks, including tables showing, first, the allocation of relief costs by the F. E. R. A.; second, emergency-relief expenditures.

THE ALLOCATION OF RELIEF COSTS BY THE F. E. R. A.

In the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933—act of May 12, 1933; Public, No. 15-which was entitled "An act to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government, the several States and Territories, and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes", it was stated in section 4 (a):

Out of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made available by this act, the Administrator is authorized to make grants to the several States to aid in meeting the costs of furnishing relief and work relief and in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment in the form of money, service, materials, and/or commodities to provide the necessities of life to persons in need as a result of the present emergency, and/or to their dependents, whether resident, transient, or homeless.

This act gave the Administrator unlimited discrimination in allocating grants. But from the act it would appear that the main responsibility for relief rested upon the States; the Federal Government only assumed a secondary responsibility.

Mr. Roosevelt, in interpreting this section, said as follows:

The Emergency Relief Act is an expression of the Federal Government's determination to cooperate with the States and local communities with regard to financing the emergency-relief work. Federal Emergency Relief Administration has principle that it means just that. It is essential that the States and local units of government do their fair share. They must They must not expect the Federal Government to finance more than a reasonable proportion of the total. (Statement at a conference of Governors and State emergency relief administrators June 14, 1933.)

That is a statement of policy. How has that policy been administered? Or, in other words, how has a fair share or reasonable proportion of the burden been determined in the case of each individual State? The Federal Emergency Relief Administration in its report to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in response to Senate Resolution No. 115, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, printed in Senate Document No. 56 of the same Congress, made a statement which purports to be an explanation of the method by which available funds were allocated as between the several States. The Assistant Administrator of the F. E. R. A., Mr. Corrington Gill, asserted that the bulk of the various factors taken into consideration in the effort to arrive at a determination of the grants to each State can "properly be included under four broad classifications":

First, it would be necessary to take into account the need for relief. We know that this item varies widely from State to State and from community to community. In April 1934, for example, when 14 percent of the population of continental United States was receiving public relief, percentages ranged from 4 percent of the population in Vermont to 35 percent in North Dakota. Obviously, the burden of caring for one-third of the population of a State is an enormously greater strain on its financial resources than is the burden of caring for one twenty-fifth of its people. To grasp the significance of this variation it need only be recalled that, all other things being equal, the larger the proportion of population in need of relief the smaller the group left to supply the necessary financial resources.

Second, due weight must be given to the relative abilities of the political units to finance relief. Economic capacities vary to an extreme degree. In some instances States and their political subdivisions are already in poor financial condition and are, therefore, unable to provide additional funds. Then again there are some States where economic capacity is adequate but where it can-not be employed because of constitutional and statutory limitations either on the levying of taxes or the incurrence of debt, or the performance of service. Where these constitutional or statutory restrictions are obstacles in the way of the provision of relief funds, taxpayers in other States have a right to expect the removal of such limitations. Unfortunately the revision of constitutions and statutes is a lengthy process, and in the meantime the needy unemployed must be cared for.

Third, proper attention should be given to the relative amounts spent by the political units for public-welfare purposes other than direct relief. Their significance is obvious. Those activities frequently reduce the necessity for direct relief.

Fourth, geographical variations in living standards and relief costs, as well as weather and seasonal factors, must be considered in arriving at any available and fair conclusion on the amount of participation by the Federal Government in helping meet the relief needs of the various States. It should not be forgotten that in general States and localities appropriate a given sum of money to be used during the given period of time. Thus the amount is inflexible and there is small opportunity to increase the amount by legislative action between sessions of the legislative bodies. Furthermore, the Federal Government endeavors to grant to the States an amount equal to the difference between the State's ability to finance relief as indicated by their relief appropriations and their need from month to month as indicated by the relief-case load. Thus changing economic factors from month to month make it necessary for the Federal Government to change its policy as regards grants to any particular State without being able to plan its exact participation a year in advance. An unusually severe winter or a summer drought may change the relief load beyond any possibility of human forecast.

The Assistant Administrator went on to say:

Although the foregoing are the most important of the factors used in measuring the ability of the States and localities to finance unemployment relief, there are other more practical and less academic items which have, in some cases, made it difficult to secure adequate financial participation, such as the unwillingness of some governors to call special sessions of the State legislatures, the lack of responsibility or the presence of political factionalism which may prevent legislative action, and in a few cases perhaps which may prevent legislative action, and in a few cases perhaps the unwillingness of the people dominating the political scene to go on record as favoring the raising of funds for the relief of their unemployed. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration has consistently followed the policy of exerting all the legitimate pressure which it could properly bring to bear without causing undue suffering to the unemployed themselves who are not represented for the attitude of those determining the first policies. sponsible for the attitude of those determining the fiscal policies of States or localities (pp. 641, 642).

In answer to one of the specific questions asked in the resolution which elicited this document-What cooperation or assistance was required in the several States to which appropriations or allotments were made?-the Administrator presented an extended discussion of the various factors affecting the financial ability of the States, but in concluding that discussion he stated:

It should be clearly understood that these suggested quotas constituted only a basis of negotiation with the governors and legislative bodies of the several States. In each instance there were discussions between the State executives and the relief Administrator or the field representatives of the Administrator, and the final quota urged upon each State represented a meeting of the minds between the Administrator and the Governor of the State concerned (p. XIV, Senate Doc. No. 56).

In the previously mentioned memorandum presented by Mr. Gill, the second item, the ability of the States to pay, is the one that comes in for the most extended discussion. The Administrator indicated that the studies of financial ability being carried on by his research division were organized along three lines: First, they constructed a composite index number, representing the economic capacity of each State; second, they made a case study of the individual States, modifying their relative positions in the above index on the basis of additional information; third, they estimated the yield in each State of a model tax system.

What went into this above-mentioned index number of the economic capacity of the States? According to the Administrator, the following components were utilized: Gainful workers, 1930; national income, 1929; manufacturing output, 1931; mining output, 1932; and agricultural output, 1933; retail sales, 1933; spendable money income, 1933; net wholesale sales, 1933; Federal income-tax receipts, 1933-34; savings deposits as of July 1, 1933; passenger-car registrations, 1933; State and local governmental cost payments, 1932; State and local revenue receipts, 1932; assessed valuation, 1932; net governmental debt, 1932; estimated taxable wealth, 1931.

The Administrator stated:

The total of each of these items was distributed among the several States on the percentage basis reported for each. Certain of these factors were then weighted so as to give them greater For example, retail sales was considered ant as governmental debt. The result was value than to others. three times as important as governmental debt. The result was a final index of the percent of economic capacity which was assumed to lie in each State.

A total proposed contribution of $300,000,000, $400,000,000, and $500,000,000 was then distributed according to those percentages. If a State had been badly damaged by drought or its known low economic capacity was generally recognized, the allocation was made according to the $300,000,000 total. If, on the other hand, States were known to be wealthy and to have suffered relatively less than others from the depression, they were placed in the $500,000,000 group. The balance of the States were placed in the $400,000,000 group and tentative quotas assigned accordingly (p. XII).

The components of the index of the capacity of the States to pay represent a number of diverse and, in some cases, overlapping measures of various segments of the economic structure of the several States: For example, if you include national income in an index, there would hardly seem to be justification for also including in the same index spendable money income or, for that matter, Federal income-tax receipts. Or, again, there does not seem to be any particular justification for including both estimated taxable wealth and savings deposits and assessed valuation in the same index number. Likewise any figures for State and local government cost payments might be expected to be very close to figures for State and local government revenue receipts.

A more serious problem arises if you try to justify the inclusion of figures for government debt as a measure of the economic capacity or the relative economic position of the several States. After all, the figure for government debt in a particular instance may well be a function of certain accidents of political management or local theories of financing government improvements without any connection, therefore, between the amount of debt any particular jurisdiction has incurred and its economic capacity.

And what about the weight assigned to the various constituent elements of the index in the effort to get a composite index which should be a measure of the capacity of the States to pay? The report is certainly most obscure, and one is inclined to believe intentionally so on the matter of weighting. The one illustration of actual weights used is that retail sales was considered three times as important as the Government debt. But why three times? Why not 5 times, or why not 10 times? There is nothing in the report to justify that particular weighting.

As was stated in the last quotation, on the basis of an assumed total contribution from the States aggregating $300,000,000, $400,000,000, and $500,000,000, an allocation among the States on the basis of this index was worked out. The shares of the individual States were determined on the basis of their relative position in the composite index of capacity to pay. The report goes on to say:

If a State had been badly damaged by drought, or its known low reconomic capacity was generally recognized, the allocation was made according to the $300,000,000 total.

If, on the other hand, States were known to be wealthy and to have suffered relatively less than others from the depression, they were placed in the $500,000,000 group. The balance of the States were placed in the $400,000,000 group (p. XII).

What was the measure of the fact that a State had been badly damaged by drought? That is to say, what standard was there by which it could be determined that State "A" was badly damaged by drought and therefore should be asked for a relatively small contribution, whereas State "B" was not badly damaged and therefore a larger contribution should be requested from it? One may well ask also what standards were used in determining what "States were known to be wealthy"?

The above quotation gives rise to a very pertinent inquiry. If States were known for their low economic capacity or for their wealth in advance of these studies, then why should there be all of this complicated mathematical mechanism to arrive at an index of capacity to pay? If it is necessary to compute an index of capacity to pay, then there can be no justification for predicting adjustments on the basis of low economic capacity or of high economic capacity that is supposed to be shown from other unreported sources. This procedure would seem to have all the earmarks of a statistical support for a previously arrived at conclusion. This can hardly be said to be scientific.

The second group of procedures used in determining financial ability is a case study of the condition of each State. In beginning the discussion of the case study the report states:

It is unfortunate that accurate data on wealth and income for the Nation and its subdivisions are not available. The inadequacy of these criteria used for determining tax capacity are freely admitted. Certainly they are estimates, rather than the result of actual enumeration; the significance of particular items and of weighting may be a matter of individual opinion; and the resulting ranking of the States in ability is indicative and relative, rather than absolute. Accordingly, an effort was made to check the results of the foregoing method by a case examination of each State, considering an additional number of criteria of financial conditions, including crops, benefit payments, bank resources, automobile purchases, tax delinquencies, estimated severity of drought, condition of State finances, revenue system, etc. (p. XII).

According to the report-

The States were then arranged in six groups. Tentative quotas were assigned to each group, beginning with $6 per capita, or 2 percent of total retail sales, in the first group and ranging to $1 per capita, or 1 percent of retail sales, in the lowest group (p. XIII).

The text gives no clue as to how the six groups were formed or as to how the values attached to each one were arrived at.

In actuality all this case study does is to go through the same process that was followed in the construction of the index number, except a few more miscellaneous items and subdivisions of the original data are included. As to what is gained by the case study it is difficult to say, except that it adds confusion to the entire issue.

The report then takes up the third procedure for determining financial ability—the yield of a model tax system as applied to all States.

As a further check on the tentative quotas already set up, an effort was made to apply certain reasonable rates of taxation to the existing values, estimated personal income, estimated business income, value of natural resources, etc., as known for each State. These hypothetical tax rates were applied in accordance with the recommendations of the special committee of the National Tax Association made up of tax officials and recognized economists. The result showed possible tax collections under this method of a total of $4,825,000,000. Ten percent of this total was approxi-mately the figure arrived at, as a minimum total to be asked of veral States, and tentative quotas were assigned accordingly

The Administrator does not reveal how they determined that 10 percent of State and local tax income should be devoted to relief.

This model tax system that was applied to all States was composed of the following taxes: Real property, $20 per $1,000 of full value; severance on gas and oil, 2 percent on gross value; personal income, progressive rates, varying from 1 to 6 percent; corporate income, 4 percent; inheritance taxes are so arranged as to make maximum use of the rebates allowed to States; gasoline, 4 cents per gallon; licensing of motor vehicles according to the New York State rates; and a sales tax of 1 percent. This tax scheme is not described in the document; its content is derived from other sources. It should be noted that both the tax on gasoline and the fees for motor-vehicle licenses can hardly be called taxes based upon ability to pay; they are quite distinctly benefit taxes. It seems rather strange that a 1-percent sales tax was included in the scheme. The sales tax is highly regressive, and it will fall most heavily upon the class of people who are receiving relief.

The report proceeds:

From the foregoing it will be noted that four independent estimates of the economic capacity of each State were made: One, by 10 weighted indices of economic ability; two, by estimated eco nomic groups related to retail sales; three, by estimated economic groups related to purchases; four, by application of uniform tax rates to estimated taxable wealth and income (p. XIV).

The report admits that-

These tentative quotas were determined independently of each other, and from them a fifth quota was made, which was be-lieved to represent a reasonable request that might be made upon each government. These quotas were then modified by taking each government. These quotas were then modified by taking into consideration the constitutional limits upon taxation, existing revenue systems, State and local debt, defaults on bonds, Treasury condition, public attitude toward various types of taxa-tion, the contributions that have been made by the State during tion, the contributions that have been made by the State during the past 2 years for relief. Also consideration was given to the attitude toward relief and the per-family cost of relief. For example, a State with a relatively good economic condition and with a high standard of relief measured in dollars per family per month might be expected to contribute more generously than a State with a lower standard, where the Federal contribution would be small even if it constituted a larger percentage of the total (p. XIV).

In the paragraph just quoted from the Administrator's report reference is made to a quota which was believed to represent a reasonable request that might be made upon each State government. Nothing is said, however, as to what standard of reasonableness was set up or what factors went into the determination of what amounted to a reasonable request in any particular case. Then these "reasonable requests" were further adjusted to put a premium on the existence of archaic tax systems in any particular State. Those States which had continued to go along with an outmoded system of taxation were rewarded insofar as they were given the benefit of consideration on that score and the amount that was asked from them was correspondingly reduced; whereas those States which had made a decent and honest effort to meet the responsibilities that rightly and justly were theirs by altering their system of taxation in accordance with new ideas were penalized insofar as their requested contributions were relatively increased.

Some of the inequalities that result from this confused and hit-or-miss basis of allocation are clearly set forth in the accompanying table. A comparison has been made between certain measures of ability to pay and the proportion contributed by State and local governments to total relief expenditures during the period from January 1, 1933, through the end of September 1935. The period selected is a fair test of the operation of the system insofar as the burden of relief expenditures began to decline measurably in the latter part of 1935, due to the introduction of the works-progress

The ranking of the States in proportion to their contribution to their total relief costs have been compared with their rank in per capita wealth on the latest available date (1929); their rank in per capita net income on the last date for which there are any scientific figures (1929); and their rank in per capita taxpaying ability according to the only scientific study that has been prepared to date (1930).

The index of the taxpaying ability of the States has been taken from a study made by Prof. Mabel Newcomer, of Vassar College, for the Columbia University Council on Research in the Social Sciences, which has been published under the title, "An Index of the Taxpaying Ability of State and Local Governments (1935)." This index was constructed by applying a model tax system to each of the States and determining the yield from each of the component taxes. The following taxes are used in the system: Real property, $20 per $1,000 of full value; severance tax, 2 percent gross on oil and gas; personal income, which varies from 1 percent to 6 percent; business net income, 4 percent on corporations and 2 percent on unincorporated enterprises; the incorporation of business enterprises, five-tenths of 1 percent of the value of the stock; stock transferred, four-hundredths of 1 percent of the value of the stock; liquor, varies from 31/2 cents per gallon of beer to $1 per gallon of whisky; and a progressive tax on inheritances ranging from 1 percent to 10 percent.

This particular measure of the taxpaying ability of State and local governments seems to be superior to that used by the F. E. R. A. in the following respects: The F. E. R. A. model tax system includes a 1-percent sales tax which is clearly regressive—that is, it would fall most heavily on people in the lower income groups-for example, people on relief; the F. E. R. A. system also includes gasoline and motor vehicle taxes which are not predicated on ability to pay, but on benefits.

Examination of the attached table reveals that certain States bear a higher percent of the costs of relief than their financial position, as measured by these three indexes would warrant. For example, the State of Maine has paid 48.7 percent of the total costs of relief in that State. It stands fourth in the list of States according to the percent of costs of relief that were borne by the State and it stands thirtysecond in terms of taxpaying ability, twenty-fourth in terms of income, and thirty-second in terms of wealth. The case of Vermont may also be cited. It stands eighth in terms of relief costs borne by the State, but it stands thirty-sixth according to its taxpaying ability, twenty-fifth according to income, and thirty-fifth according to wealth. It would seem from a consideration of this table that there is a good cause for believing that Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and Indiana have also been treated in a discriminatory manner.

From a perusal of this table it also appears that certain States were especially favored in the allocation of relief funds; that is, they have not been required to bear as large a share of their relief costs as their financial position would warrant. For example, Nevada only assumed 9.4 percent of the cost of relief in that State. It is ranked thirty-eighth in the list of States according to the percentage of the cost borne by the State, but it ranked second in terms of taxpaying ability, seventh in terms of income, and first in terms of wealth. The case of Wyoming might also be cited. This State stands thirty-ninth in terms of the percent of the cost of relief borne by the State, but it stands eighth in terms of taxpaying ability, sixteenth in terms of income and second in terms of wealth. From the data presented in the attached table it would appear that the following States also received special benefits in the distribution of relief funds: Oregon, Arizona, Montana, and New Mexico.

1 Data from Congressional Record, Jan. 30, 1936, p. 1228. The period covered by this data is believed to be most representative of what took place during the life of F. E. R. A., since it covers practically the whole period in which extensive grants were made. Shifting of the load to W. P. A. began in the fall of 1935, with the result the total expenditures for emergency relief declined from $188,571,767 in May 1935 to $70,555,119 in December 1935. The proportionate contribution by the Federal Government declined due to the fact the W. P. A. attempted to care for all employables.

Based on Brookings estimate in America's Capacity to Consume, p. 173.

This is taken from Mabel Newcomer, An Index of the Taxpaying Ability of State and Local Governments, New York (1935), p. 59. This index was constructed by applying a model tax system to each of the States and determining the yield from each of the component taxes. The taxes used in the system are as follows: Real property, $20 per $1,000 of full value; severance tax, 2 percent gross on oil and gas; personal income, rates vary from 1 to 6 percent; business net income, 4 percent on corporations and 2 percent on unincorporated enterprise; the incorporation of business enterprises, 0.5 of 1 percent of value of stock; stocks transfer, 0.04 of 1 percent of value of stock; liquior varies from 3½ cents per gallon of beer to $1 per gallon of whisky; and a progressive tax on inheritances ranging from 1 to 10 percent. This model tax system is practically the same as one developed by a committee of the National Tax Association.

EMERGENCY RELIEF EXPENDITURES

The attached table gives, by States, expenditures under the emergency-relief program during the calendar year 1935. In the table the contributions from Federal funds, contributions from State and local funds, as well as the total expenditures in each State, have been presented.

There is likewise a statement of the number of families on relief during July 1935, as reported by the F. E. R. A., and, based on our estimates of the number of families in each State July 1, 1935, there has been calculated a statement of the percent of all families in each of the several States that were on relief during July 1935.

Several important and necessary qualifications must be made of the latter percentage figures as they now stand. In the first place, the concept "family", as reported to the Relief Administration, varies among the several States. Likewise a definition of what is involved when any such family is considered on relief is determined under State law. Therefore, on the basis of any information that has been available to us, it is impossible to make any generalization as to what constitutes a family for use in connection with relief statistics or. further, what precisely is involved, statistically speaking, to be included as being on relief.

In the absence of any accurate knowledge on either of these two subjects, the last group of columns in the accompanying table which gives expenditures of relief funds by sources for each family on relief in the several States must be used with extreme caution. It will not do to say directly that in California, for example, the expenditures per relief family were $762 and that in Nevada they were $164 per relief family, representing outrageous discrimination in favor of California residents as against those in Nevada. The reason this cannot be done-to emphasize what has been said above—is that a family on relief, as tabulated in California statistics, is probably not at all the same thing as a family on relief as reported in the statistics for the State of Nevada.

It is therefore urged upon anyone using these figures to bear closely in mind that there are great limitations, due to lack of comparability of data for the several States. While attention may be called to the fact that on the basis of available statistics it would seem that families in State A obtained a great deal more than families in State B, such comparisons should be used only in an effort to discover wherein lies the source of this divergency.

That is to say, one might suggest to take the illustration above, that residents of California seem to get a great deal more than the residents of Nevada; and it would be desirable to discover exactly how much of this discrepancy is due to statistical accident and how much of the difference between the two States represents a justifiable distinction on the basis of varying economic conditions.

³ Obtained by dividing the estimated population in each State by an estimate of the average number of persons per family in that State. The average population per family in the United States in 1930 was 4.1, but this figure has been decreasing by ¾10 of a unit per decade since 1890, and it seems reasonable on the basis of the assumption that this decrease is continuing to reduce the 1930 figure by ½10 in connection with the 1935 estimated population. This procedure has been used for each State, the 1930 figure for the average number of persons per family in the State being reduced by ½10 for use with the 1935 estimated population. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the making of an annual appropriation by the Congress to the use of the State of New York, in the sum of $2,500,000, for the maintenance and operating expenses of the New York State Canal system, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. COPELAND.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition, signed by David Lasser, national chairman of the Workers Alliance of America, praying for the prompt making of an appropriation to provide housing, food, and return transportation to about 200 of the delegates to the second national convention of the above-named organization now in session in the city of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COOLIDGE presented a resolution of Local Union No. 2178, United Textile Workers of America, of Millbury, Mass., favoring the enactment of the so-called Ellenbogen bill, pertaining to the textile industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of Local, No. 38, United Shoe and Leather Workers Union, Lowell, Mass., favoring the enactment of the so-called Marcantonio bill, being the bill (H. R. 11186) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from G. A. Henderson, chairman of the general grievance committee, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen (Boston & Maine Railroad System), Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the State of New York has invested, and continues annually to appropriate and invest, huge sums of money in the construction and maintenance of a State canal system; and

Whereas the facilities of said canal system are and have always been available to the shipping of all the States of the United States and have contributed greatly to the development of commerce in the entire United States; and

Whereas there is no other State in the Union that maintains a canal or canals for the use of the public at its own expense; and Whereas the State of New York contributes annually to the Federal Government more money than any other State in the Union, which for the last fiscal year amounted to the sum of

Whereas Congress, recognizing this fact, passed legislation in 1931 appropriating $2,500,000 for maintenance of the State canal system with the condition that the State surrender title to said canal system to the Federal Government, which condition was refused by the legislature of this State; and refused by the legislature of this State; and

Whereas the Federal Government subsequently, in the year 1934, appropriated the sum of $27,000,000 for the deepening of a portion of said canal system with no condition for the surrender of title to the canal system by the State of New York: Now, therefore, be it Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, respectfully memorialized to appropriate annually to the use of the State of New York the sum of $2,500,000 for the maintenance and operating expenses of the New York State canal system; and he it further

H. R. 9267. A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of Big Mulberry Creek, in Crawford County, Ark., from the point where it empties into the Arkansas River up a distance of 8 miles, to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the controlling of floods (Rept. No. 1793); and

H. R. 9874. A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of Cadron Creek, Ark., a tributary of the Arkansas River (Rept. No. 1794).

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4002) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1796) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 8, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2288. An act to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes;

S. 2496. An act to amend the Railway Labor Act;

S. 3761. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain land to the town of Wamsutter, Wyo.;

S. 3860. An act to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the National Defense Act", approved May 28, 1928: and

S. 3971. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 4457) authorizing the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the Third Circuit; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4458) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Sabine and Neches Rivers and their tributaries in the Sabine-Neches Conservation District in the State of Texas with a view to the control of their floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4459) to amend section 603 of the Revenue Act of 1934; to the Committee on Finance.

(By request.) A bill (S. 4460) for the relief of the P. L. Andrews Corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE:

A bill (S. 4461) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.:

A bill (S. 4463) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the cities of South Sioux City, Nebr., and Sioux City, Iowa; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 11006. An act providing for the examination of the Nueces River and its tributaries in the State of Texas for floor-control purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11562. An act to renew Patent No. 25909, relating to the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812; to the Committee on Patents.

GRACE PARK

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2042) for the relief of Grace Park, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Grace Park, a minor, the Westerly Hospital, and Dr. H. M. Scanlon."

Mr. LONERGAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PLACE OF FILING CIVIL SUITS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2524) amending section 112 of the United States Code, Annotated (title 28, subtitle "Civil suits; where to be brought"), which

Page 1, strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including "title" in line 6 and insert "That section 51 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 58, sec. 112) is amended to read as

"'SEC. 51. Civil suits; where to be brought: Except as provided in the five succeeding sections, no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action before a district court; and, except as provided in the six succeeding sections.'"

Page 2, line 1, strike out all after "the" where it occurs the third time down to and including "found" in line 10, and insert "defendant; except that suit by a stockholder on behalf of a corporation may be brought in any district in which suit against the defendant or defendants in said stockholders' action, other than said corporation, might have been brought by such corporation and process in such cases may be served upon such corporation in any district wherein such corporation resides or may be found."

Amend the title so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read: "An eat to amount wherein such corporation in the strike so as to read."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend section 51 of the Judicial Code of the United States (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 112)."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, this bill has passed the Senate and the House. The House has adopted slight amendments clarifying the language but not changing the philosophy of the bill. I have taken the matter up with the chairman of the committee and I think there will be no objection. I was the author of the bill.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. The motion was agreed to.

COMMERCIAL AIRPORT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"That there is hereby created a commission to be known as the 'District of Columbia Airport Commission' (hereinafter referred to as the 'Commission'), to be composed of three Members of the United States Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, who because of their official positions are interested in the development of a commercial airport in the District of Columbia. No person shall serve on the Commission who has any financial interest direct or indirect in any site or sites for said airport which may be the subject of consideration. The Commission shall proceed immediately after its appointment and organization to examine all available data concerning potential sites for commercial airports and to inspect such potential sites, and shall select a site for such purpose with due regard to the cost of its acquisition and development, its safety, and its adaptability to the requirements of commercial aviation and national defense.

"Sec. 2. The Commission shall preserve its decision and selection in confidence and shall make a confidential report thereon to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives if Congress is not in session: Provided, however, That said report shall be made as soon as practicable.

"Sec. 3. The members of the Commission shall receive no salary as such, but shall be reimbursed for actual expenses incurred in the discharge of official duties as such commissioners. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000, to be charged one-half to the moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be used for carrying out the purposes of this Act, including the employment of such experts and other assistants as the Commission may deem necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

William H. King,
Millard E. Tydings,
Warren R. Austin,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

VINCENT L. PALMISANO, JACK NICHOLS, EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

REHABILITATION LOANS TO STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, we were considering the amendments of the committee, and I ask that the next amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 4, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,000,000", and to insert in lieu thereof "$50,000,000", so as to read:

The aggregate of loans made under this act shall not exceed $50,000,000.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS UNDER A. A. A.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to submit a correction in the Record in behalf of the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, and a brief statement in connection with it. It will take me only a moment, and I am sure it will not interfere with the consideration of the pending business.

On March 23, when I submitted my resolution asking the Secretary of Agriculture to report upon the larger A. A. A.

benefit payments, I said, among other things, the following. I quote from page 4150 of the RECORD:

Again, I understand the average wheat contract in Kansas run in the neighborhood of $800. But I know, for example, of one such contract—although in this instance I know neither the State nor the acreage—which produced 65 checks for a total of $78,638 in 2 years.

In other words, I was undertaking to identify wheat benefit payments of $78,638.

At the end of about a week, after Mr. Secretary Wallace reluctantly yielded to the demand for some slight ventilation of the subject, in his letter to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] he said—and I quote from page 4999 of the RECORD:

The largest wheat payment for a single year under the program totaled $29,398.32.

In other words, there seemed to be a discrepancy between my figures and the figures of the Secretary, mine showing at least one contract for $78,000—his statement insisting that the largest contract was $29,000. Naturally, the distinguished Secretary had better sources of information than I can hope to command; but I was chagrined to have seemingly erred, although all my other figures were vindicated.

Mr. President, I am happy to note in this morning's Washington Post that even my wheat figures are now conceded and that the Secretary made a statement last evening, from which I quote as follows:

In his preliminary list, Wallace had recorded the largest wheat payment disbursed under A. A. A. as $29,938.32. In a correction letter sent Senator Smith yesterday, Wallace said the actual figure should have been $78,634.32.

One interesting part about the matter is how the Secretary apparently happened to discover that he had made this mistake. When I presented my original statement I indicated that I did not know the name of this particular beneficiary, but that I had his check numbers. So I wrote the Secretary of the Treasury and I submitted this simple inquiry:

I want to know to whom check no. 9,502,291 was issued, probably in January 1935.

Mr. President, I got no responsive answer from the Secretary of the Treasury. I got no information from him. But this morning I have an explanatory letter from Mr. Morgenthau, which says:

I learn that this is an Agricultural Adjustment check, and, since Secretary Wallace is now in correspondence with the Senate Committee on Agriculture with respect to the identities and amounts paid to recipients of crop-benefit payments, it seems to me fitting that the inquiry should be addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture.

In other words, when the Secretary of the Treasury discovered that I was asking about a wheat check, he hastened to notify Mr. Wallace instead of me.

Therefore, it appears that my letter to the Secretary of the Treasury is now answered through the Secretary of Agriculture, who, when put upon notice regarding check no. 9,502,291, discovers that he was mistaken in his figures and that my figures were correct. This is not a very satisfactory method of getting public information from the Departments. Of course, I am not yet allowed to know the name of this particular beneficiary. That information is still held secret. But I am confident that whenever our governing authorities are willing to identify the payee on check no. 9,502,291, we shall know the answer to my question. It is beyond my comprehension why there should be so much mystery and indirection about a matter of the public business.

I am sorry that it is difficult for me to get direct information from the departments with reasonable promptness in respect to this problem.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield, except that I want to be very sure I do not intrude on the time of the unfinished business.

Mr. MURPHY. May I ask the Senator what his original inquiry to the Secretary of Agriculture covered? Am I correct in understanding that it related to the wheat-benefit payments made?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct, except that I never submitted any preliminary question to the Secretary himself.

Mr. MURPHY. Is it possible that the amount of $29,000, or whatever it is, would be the amount of the wheat benefit payments made, and that the larger amount might represent payments to cover other contracts than wheat?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Apparently not. The Secretary is quoted this morning as saying in a letter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] yesterday that the actual figure of the wheat payments should have been $78,634. The Senator should quiz the Secretary, not me.

Mr. MURPHY. Is that the amount of the specific checks concerning which the Senator addressed his inquiry to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, Mr. President; there were 65 checks paid to this particular beneficiary, and the total of the checks is the figure indicated. My inquiry about one of these checks evidently put the Secretary on the trail of the balance.

Mr. MURPHY. Is the Senator advised as to whether or not this payment of $29,000 was for the crop year or was $78,000 for the crop year?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not advised, Mr. President.

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator has no information as to whether or not these payments were made under separate contracts covering each county?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no information, Mr. President, except that which an outsider is enabled to dig out from a reluctant department. If the Senate had adopted the resolution to which I have been trying to get its consent, there would be less need for speculation on the subject. I know of no sound reason why we should encounter continuing delay in this connection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield, if the Senator from Iowa has concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. With respect to the Senator's statement that he does not wish to trespass—I think that is his exact language—on the time of the bill under consideration, I point out to him that the Senate met this morning at 11:30 to consider that bill, and that more than half the time available has already elapsed. The consent was for the consideration of the bill advanced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher].

I will say to the Senator that ample opportunity will be afforded, as soon as it can be secured, for the consideration of the resolution to which he has referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his assurance. I take it in the good faith in which I know the Senator makes it. I will not yield for further interruption, and I will conclude simply by saying that in respect to this process which seems to be in vogue of answering my farm inquiries to the departments by rerouting them via the Department of Agriculture I hope the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will not have to wait more than 10 more days, the period which has already intervened, to send me an answer, either direct or through the Secretary of Agriculture, to the following question:

I should like to know whether Mr. Thomas Campbell or the Campbell Farming Corporation leases lands from the Government—lands belonging to the Indian Service. If so, I should like to know the acreage and the annual rental.

I am seeking correction of the Record this morning, Mr. President, because I put in the Record the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary's letter was incorrect. I hope the Senate may have an early opportunity to facilitate the inquiry submitted by my resolution. We shall never know the whole truth until the whole facts are disclosed. The country is entitled to know precisely what Secretary Wallace did with its money.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I insist that in all good faith the Senate ought to be permitted to consider the bill we met to consider.

REHABILITATION LOANS TO STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 4, line 8, to strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 9, to strike out "That the" and to insert "Sec. 2. The", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The title of the said act is amended to read as follows: "An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. Title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 5 thereof the following new section:

"Sec. 6. (a) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building-and-loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions, heretofore or hereafter approved by the Administrator as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them subsequent to the date this section takes effect and prior to January 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation upon his determination that the emergency no longer exists, for the purpose of financing, by the owners of real property or by lessees thereof under a lease for a period of not less than 1 year, the restoration, rehabilitation, rebuilding, and replacement of improvements on real property and equipment and machinery thereon which were damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, hurricane, flood, or other catastrophe in the years 1935 or 1936, either on the same site or on a new site in the same locality where the damaged or destroyed property was located. The Administrator is authorized to grant insurance under this section to any such financial institution up to 20 percent of the total amount of loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purpose, and any insurance reserve accumulated by any such financial institution under section 2 of this title prior to April 1, 1936, shall be applicable to the payment of any losses sustained by it as a result of loans, advances of credit, or purchases insured under this section.

"(b) No insurance shall be granted under this section to any such financial institution with respect to any obligation representing any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase by it (1) unless the loan bears such interest, has such maturity, and contains such other terms, conditions, and restrictions, as the Administrator shall prescribe in order to make credit available for the purposes of this section; and (2) unless the amount of such loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $2,000, except that in the case of any such loan, advance of credit, or purchase made for the purpose of such financing with respect to apartment or multiple family houses, hotels, office, business, or other commercial buildings, hospitals, orphanages, colleges, schools, churches, or manufacturing or industrial plants, such insurance may be granted if the amount of the loan, advance of credit, or purchase is not in excess of $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, when the committee amendments have been completed I wish to offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the committee amendments have not as yet been agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) The third sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The total liability incurred by the Administrator for all insurance heretofore and hereafter granted under this section and section 6 shall not exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000; except that if the President finds at any time that there exists a necessity for such insurance in order to make ample credit available he may authorize the Administrator to incur additional liability for such insurance in an amount not in excess of the amount of the liability incurred under section 6."

(b) Section 2 of such act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The Administrator is authorized to waive compliance with regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by him with respect to the interest and maturity of and the terms, conditions, and restrictions under which loans, advances of credit, and purchases may be insured under this section and section 6, if in his judgment the enforcement of such regulations would impose an injustice upon an insured institution which has substantially complied with such regulations in good faith and refunded or credited any excess charge made, and where such waiver does not involve an increase of the obligation of the Administrator beyond the obligation which would have been involved if the regulations had been fully complied with."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the word "systems", to insert a comma and the words "highways and bridges."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is really included in the bill, but I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "individuals", it is proposed to insert a comma and "municipalities or political subdivisions of States or of their public agencies, including public-school boards and public-school districts, and water, irrigation, sewer, drainage, and floodcontrol districts."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the present law does not permit loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for highways and bridges and for the purposes enumerated in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not thoroughly familiar with all the provisions of the several acts relating to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; but I might say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the proposed amendment was suggested by one of those who have to do with the administration of the act. He thought it might be necessary.

Mr. WALSH. I am not opposed to the amendment, but I am under the impression that the present law takes care of the loans that may be applied for by States, municipalities, or counties for public purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think that is true as to all of the regular loans; but there possibly is some difference as to the degree of security required for general loans and those filed under the provisions of this bill—that is, for purposes of restoring places damaged by the various recent catastrophes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The effect of that amendment is to transfer paragraph (c), on page 3, to page 2; is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say to the Senator from Florida that it does not transfer all of that language, as I understand the purpose of the amendment; and I freely confess that I am not thoroughly advised of the necessity for all this language, because the matter was just called to my attention since the Senate convened this morning. As I understand, the purpose of the amendment is to enable municipalities and political subdivisions to avail themselves of the loans of the character described in the first portion of the bill which are reasonably secured, as well as under paragraph (c), which are secured by taxation or by tax-anticipation warrants. amendment amplifies the class of subjects which are eligible to avail themselves of loans. Subsection (c) deals with the kind and nature of collateral which will be accepted to secure

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no objection to leaving paragraph (c) in?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; as I understand, paragraph (c) is also essential.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Florida. Inasmuch as the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] has been adopted and the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] has been adopted, does the Senator from Florida think that $50,000,000 is sufficient to carry on this work, when there are to be included bridges, highways, schoolhouses, and so forth?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is sufficient. It will probably take a year to utilize the $50,000,000. Congress will be back here again, I think, before that amount is exhausted.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Florida is of the opinion that $50,000,000 will be sufficient until Congress reconvenes next year?

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee seemed to think so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill

The bill was passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 1747) is as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The bill as reported, insofar as rehabilitation loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are concerned, is the same as the bill which passed the House, with the following exceptions:

First. The aggregate amount which may be loaned by the Corporation for such purposes has been increased from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000

cond. Under the House bill the catastrophe with respect to the loan is made must have occurred in the years "1933, which the loan is made must have occurred in the years "1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, and 1937", while under the bill as reported the catastrophe must have occurred in the years "1935 or 1936."

Third. Under the House bill there was a requirement that as a condition to obtaining a loan the repair, construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, or acquisition be deemed by the Corporation to be "economically" useful or necessary, while under the bill as reported the word "economically" has been eliminated.

The bill as reported also contains the substance of S. 4396, introduced by Senators Walsh and Bulkley, which had the approval the bill as reported also contains the substance of S. 4396, introduced by Senators Walsh and Bulkley, which had the approval of the Federal Housing Administration. It provides for adding a new section to title I of the National Housing Act, as amended, under which the Federal Housing Administrator is authorized to inder which the receral Housing Administrator is authorized to insure financial institutions heretofore or hereafter approved by him as qualified by experience and facilities as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans, advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them for financing the restoration, rehabilitation, rebuilding, and replacement of property damaged or destroyed by flood or other catastrophe in 1935 erty damaged or destroyed by flood or other catastrophe in 1935 or 1936. To be eligible for such insurance, the loans or advances must have been made subsequent to the date the new section takes effect and prior to January 1, 1937, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation upon his determination that the emergency no longer exists, and no such loan or advance may be so insured unless it was made to an owner of real property or to a lessee thereof under a lease for a period of not less than 1 year.

The maximum amount of insurance which may be granted under the new section to any approved financial institution is fixed at 20 percent of the total amount of such loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by it, and any insurance reserve which it may have accumulated under section 2 of the National Housing Act prior to April 1, 1936, is made applicable to the payment of any losses it sustains as a result of loans, advances of credit, or purchases insured under the new section. The provisions with respect to the maximum amount of individual loans and advances which may be insured, and those which relate to interest, maturity, etc., correspond to the provisions contained in such section 2.

The provision of existing law that the total liability of the Administrator for all insurance under such section 2 shall not Administrator for all insurance under such section 2 shall not exceed $100,000,000 is made applicable not only to such section but also to the new section added by the bill as reported. However, if the President finds at any time that there exists a necessity for such insurance in order to make ample credit available, he may authorize the Administrator to incur additional liability for such insurance in an amount not in excess of the amount of the liability incurred under the new section.

A provision is also added authorizing the Administrator to waive A provision is also added authorizing the Administrator to waive compliance with his regulations in certain cases where the enforcement thereof would impose an injustice upon an insured institution which has substantially complied with such regulations in good faith, and where such waiver would not increase the obligation of the Administrator beyond that which would have been involved if the regulations had been fully complied with. The purpose of this provision is merely to remove certain technical difficulties that have arisen in connection with the administration of title I of the National Housing Act.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION, CLEVELAND, OHIO

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 233.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition, to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, last night the question was asked as to how the money authorized by this resolution was to be expended. An appropriation of $275,000 is authorized by the resolution. Of that amount about $105,000 is to be paid as rental for the space of Government exhibits in the exposition. This is an item which is comparable to the erection of buildings which the Government has undertaken in other similar expositions. The Government in this case will not construct a building but will pay a rental for the building erected by the exposition itself. The balance, $170,000, is for the purpose of preparing and managing the exhibits. The proposed expenditure is at as low a rate per square foot as has been expended in connection with similar expositions in other cities.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, because of the lateness of the hour last evening and the general rush of business on the calendar and not knowing anything about the subject matter of the bill, I objected to its immediate consideration. Inasmuch as it involves the progress of the eight States surrounding the Great Lakes and authorizes the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate in the exposition, I have no objection at this time to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WHY KENTUCKY IS FOR THE NEW DEAL—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LOGAN

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a speech delivered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] before the National Emergency Council at Louisville, Ky., April 8, 1936, on Why Kentucky Is for the New Deal.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the spring of 1933 Kentuckians, regardless of their business or profession, were in the depths of despondency. The laboring man was without a job, and many were without food or shelter. The banks, and other financial institutions, had ceased to function. Farmers were in hopeless despair, and there was no way for them to sell the products of their farms for enough to pay interest on their indebtedness, much less to support their families in reasonable comfort. The home owners saw their homes sold in foreclosure proceedings, or for taxes. The professional man might work but no one could pay him for his services. The mines were largely closed and the operators were confronted with bankruptcy and the miners hopeless and dumb in the face of the disaster that had overtaken them. Business had ceased. Even the wisest could find not a gleam of hope for the future. The high and low, the rich and the poor, the learned and the ignorant all suffered together. These difficulties had been approaching for 4 years and reached their culmination at the time mentioned. Then came the inauguration of a new President, and he delivered his inaugural address before the assembled multitudes, and the radio made it possible for him to speak to the Nation at large. When his voice was heard, hope was born. He promised to build again national affairs on a fair and just foundation. We Kentuckians have not been disappointed in the promises which he made. Instead of destitution and despair, Kentucky is prosperous and happy. Her people rejoice in what the present national administration has done for her. It is fitting that Kentuckians should give their reasons why they have an abiding faith in the promises of President Roosevelt and the great leaders, who seek to solve the problems of the Nation, with whom he has surrounded himself. Speaking for Kentucky, I shall briefly summarize that which has been done for my State by the present administration in which the Senators and the Members of the House of Representatives have taken part.

I have said that at the beginning of this administration the farmers believed that they were without hope; but that belief was soon changed when the Farm Credit Administration, under the wise guidance of our national leaders, by the authority of Congress, commenced its efforts to relieve the distress of the farmers in Kentucky. Five thousand seven hundred farmers secured loans from the Federal land banks in the aggregate sum of $20,983,100 between May 1, 1933, and January 31, 1936, and 11,805 farmers secured loans through the Land Bank Commissioner in the same period of time aggregating $18,990,200. Thus 17,505 loans were made, aggregating aggregating $18,990,200. Thus 17,505 loans were made, aggregating $39,973,300, to help distressed farmers. In addition to this vast sum which the farmers secured, through the aid of the present administration Production Credit Associations made loans to 5,122 farmers aggregating $2,258,016. There were 12,602 emergency crop loans aggregating $611,861, and the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporations made 1,141 loans aggregating $441,271. While the Federal intermediate credit banks made loans to, and discounts for, private financing institutions aggregating $69,935. Therefore it is seen that beginning on May 1, less than 60 days after the present administration came into power, and continuing to January 31, 1936, the farmer has received help at the hands of the national administration aggregating $43,354,483. These advancements enabled the farmer to save his farm and to aid him in operating it. The promise made by the President to aid farmers in the Nation has been farmer to save his farm and to aid him in operating it. The promise made by the President to aid farmers in the Nation has been abundantly carried out to the farmers in Kentucky.

I mentioned the distress of the home owners. The President promised that they should have relief, and between the date that promise was made and February 27, 1936, 9,158 loans have been closed in the amount of $25,161,588. Other applications are still under consideration. The promise made for the relief of home owners has been kept insofar as Kentucky is concerned. That is not all that has been done by the administration for the home owners in Kentucky. Six thousand four hundred and fifty modernization and repair notes were insured for $2,213,001, under title I of the Federal Housing Administration Act, and 522 mortgages have been accepted for insurance under title II, amounting to $2,373,870. This covers the period up to December 31, 1935. The Federal Housing Administration has enabled home owners in Kentucky to secure private loans at a low rate of interest for the modernization and repair of homes in the aggregate of $4,586,871. In order to provide work for those who had no jobs, the Civil Works Administration spent in Kentucky $9,953,210 up to January 31, 1936.

The Civilian Conservation Corps camps located in Kentucky have received funds derived from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 up to December 31, 1935, in the total sum of $23,321,964.60.

Works Administration up to December 31, 1935,

The Public Works Administration up to December 31, 1935, had made allotments for non-Federal projects in the sum of $15,082,015, of which sum $5,360,009 had been expended up to that time, and had made allotments for Federal projects aggregating $14,967,519, of which sum $13,275,000 had actually been expended.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation made loans to Kentucky institutions up to December 31, 1935, as fellows: To banks and trust companies (including receivers, liquidating agents, and conservators), $17,077,447.26, and of this sum $15,868,040.14 had been repaid: to building-and-loan associations (including receivers), $1,395,011.61, all of which has been repaid; to mortgage loan companies, $50,000, all of which has been repaid; to processors or distributors who are subject to processing taxes, $3,428, all of which has been repaid. These loans, made under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, aggregate $18,525,886.87, of which sum $17,316,479.75 has been repaid. In addition to the loans made under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act as amended, under section 5 (d) it made loans to industrial or commercial businesses of $92,500 and purchases of participations in the sum of $268,333.33, making a total under section 5 (d) of $360,833.33, of which sum $15,987.62 has been repaid. It has also made loans to self-liquidating projects in the sum of $948,000, of which sum $655,000 has been repaid; and loans for the financing of agricultural commodities and livestock in the sum of $2,332,233,18, of which sum $389,382.52 has been repaid; and has made available for relief and work relief $6,728,987, or a total for emergency relief and construction of $10,009,220.18, of which sum $1,044,382.52 has been repaid. It has subscribed and purchased preferred stock in banks and trust companies in Kentucky $8,874,850, of which sum and construction of $10,009,220.18, of which sum $1,044,382.52 has been repaid. It has subscribed and purchased preferred stock in banks and trust companies in Kentucky $8,874,850, of which sum $468,500 has been redeemed. The grand total of loans and advances made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to Kentuckians to aid in the carrying on of business up to December 31, 1935, was $37,770,790,38, of which sum $18,845,349,89 has been repaid.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration, up to December 31, 1935, had made grants for general relief purposes in Kentucky in the sum of $30,198,151; for transient relief, $1,086,856; for rural rehabilitation, $719,000; for education, $1,134,167; for Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, $2,061,000; for miscellaneous purposes, $1,186,776. The total granted to Kentucky for Federal emergency relief aggregates $36,385,956.

Rentals and benefit payments to farmers under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration up to January 31, 1936, amounted to $20,670,971.77, distributed as follows: Cotton, $203,145.04; wheat, $651,648.60; tobacco, $14,346,111.58; corn and hogs, $5,470,048.55; peanuts, $18.

The amount of grants, loans, and benefits which the present national administration has extended to Kentuckians in approximately the last 3 years reaches the enormous total of $231,255,-368.75. These benefits were extended by the following agencies of Government: Farm Credit Administration, $43,354,483; Home Owners' Loan Corporation, $25,161,588; Federal Housing Administration, $45,86.871; Civil Works Administration, $9,953,210; Emergency Conservation Work (C. C. C. camps), $23,321,964.60; Public Works Administration, $30,049,534; Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $37,770,790.38; Federal Emergency Relief Administration, $36,385,-956; Agricultural Adjustment Administration, $20,673,971.77. In addition to these sums, out of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act there has been allocated to Kentucky the sum of $60,502,388.35, and on December 31, 1935, the sum actually expended out of this allocation was $33,777,406.35. The sums expended by the Agricultural Department for public roads aggregate $9,803,978.25; by the Commerce Department, $95,780; by the Interior Department, $20,-157.60; by the Labor Department, $140,546; by the Treasury Department, $186,859.98; by the War Department, $67,276; by the Resettlement Administration, $1,129,970; by Rural Electrification Administration, $98,500; by Works Progress Administration, $18,-184,090.50; by Employers' Compensation Board, $25,535.02; by Veterans' Administration, $69,050.

When these sums from the Emergency Appropriation Act of

When these sums from the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1935 are added to the grand total above mentioned, Kentucky has shared in benefits conferred by the present national administration in the aggregate of nearly $300,000,000, exclusive of sums expended by the War Department on Army camps, locks and dams, and flood control.

These benefits which Kentucky has received from the national administration since the spring of 1933 have been reflected in the improvement of business conditions along all lines. Contracts awarded for total construction in Kentucky in 1932 aggregated $20.651.500. In 1932 aggregated $20.651.500. In 1932 aggregated $20.651.500. the improvement of business conditions along all lines. Contracts awarded for total construction in Kentucky in 1932 aggregated $20,651,500. In 1933 contracts awarded amounted to $27,-648,200. In 1934 contracts awarded amounted to $21,055,100, while in 1935 they amounted to $28,104,900. The percentage increases in contracts awarded for total construction in Kentucky in 1935 over 1932 is 36.1 percent. The yearly average indexes of employees and pay rolls in all groups for Kentucky as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, United States Department of Labor, show the following percentage increases:

In 1932 employment was 94.2; in 1933, 100; in 1934, 107.3; in 1935, 107.2. While the pay roll indexes were for 1932, 93.2; 1933, 100; 1934, 123.1; 1935, 135.1. The receipts by Kentuckians for the sale of principal farm products, including benefit payments, as reported by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for the period 1932–35, inclusive, were: For 1932, $73,706,000; 1933, $66,493,000; 1934, $95,218,000; 1935, $133,325,000, or an increase for 1935 over 1932 of 80.9 percent. Contracts awarded for residential construction in Kentucky for the period 1932–35 were: For 1932, $2,465,900; 1933, $3,390,200; 1934, $1,837,700; 1935, $4,184,100, or an increase in 1935 over 1932 of 69.9 percent.

The agencies of the Federal Government represented by those in attendance today have been instrumental in carrying into effect the plans whereby nearly $300,000,000 has been expended in Kentucky. In the main the affairs for the Government by those looking after them in Kentucky have been efficiently managed. There has been no major scandal, graft, or fraud. There has been some complaint in connection with the expenditure of relief funds. I have attempted to ascertain the proportion that the expenditure of funds about which complaints have been made bears to the total expenditures in the State. It is a liberal estimate to say that the complaints that have been made relate to less than one-half of 1 percent of the total. Out of every dollar that has been expended there has been no complaint, so far as I know, about the expenditure of 99½ cents and the complaints are confined to the expenditure of the other one-half cent out of every dollar. Considered as a whole this is a remarkable record. It may be said that many of the complaints have not related to the method of handling the funds, but have been directed at those in charge of the handling of the funds.

The good that has come to business generally in the State is perhaps more correctly reflected by the increase in income-tax collections than in any other way because it is only those who earn incomes that pay income taxes. The amount of income taxes paid by Kentuckians for 1933 was $4,522,534; in 1934 the amount increased to $6,325,332, and in 1935 there was a further increase to the sum of $9,455,697, or an increase for 1935 over 1933 of 109 percent. This would indicate that the people in Kentucky in 1935 had an increase in business income of more than double what it was in 1933.

There has been much said about the new indebtedness created it was in 1933.

It was in 1933.

There has been much said about the new indebtedness created by the National Government to carry out its program. It is true that large sums have been expended, but the amounts are small compared to the total national assets, and if the Nation could be saved only through the plans that have been followed, many persons well informed would say that the price of salvation has been cheap. The result of the spending, however, has been an asset, taken as a whole, rather than a liability. The increase in the value of property attributable directly to the program of the Federal Government in the last 3 years has been many times the amount of money which has been expended. The increase in the value of securities listed on Wall Street—and these securities are held by the people throughout the Nation—have increased in value by $30,000,000,000. held by the people throughout the Nation—have increased in value by $30,000,000,000. Real-estate values have increased many billions. The value of coal mines and their output has increased enormously. The value of coal produced in Kentucky has increased from $40,000,000 in 1932 to $65,000,000 in 1935 and wages of coal miners have almost doubled. I think it might be well to refer to some of the large industrial concerns and make a comparison of their income in 1933 with their income in 1935. It seems to be big business that is complaining about the manner of operating the Federal Government. It is well, therefore, to call the attention of big business to the truth, which everyone should know, and that is that not only have they been protected but they have been placed in a position to convert deficits into large incomes. In 1933 the United States Steel Corporation had a deficit of $36,501,123. In 1935 it had a net income of $1,084,917, a gain of more than $37,000,000 over 1933. In 1933 Bethlehem Steel had a deficit of $8,735,723, while in 1935 it had a net income of $4,291,253, a gain of more than $13,000,000. In 1933 National Steel had a net income of $2,812,407, while in 1935 it had a net income of $11,-136,451, a gain of more than $8,000,000. In 1933 the American Rolling Mill Co. had a deficit of $673,109, while in 1935 it had a net income of $4,150,000, a gain of more than $4,700,000.

The figures that I have just given indicate how the policies of the present administration have affected big business.

Let us consider for a moment whether the money which has tration have affected big business.

Let us consider for a moment whether the money which has been expended in Kentucky represents money that must be repaid by taxation. Forty-three million three hundred and fifty-four thousand four hundred and eighty-three dollars was loaned by the Farm Credit Administration to farmers and is secured by a first mortgage on farms. Twenty-five million one hundred and sixty-one thousand five hundred and eighty-eight dollars was loaned by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and is secured by a first mortgage on homes. Four million five hundred and eighty-six thousand eight hundred and seventy-one dollars was expended through the Federal Housing Administration, and the notes insured by the Federal Government, but they are all secured in a way satisfactory to the banks that advanced the money. The $37,-770,790.38 loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was all secured and $18,845,349.89 has already been repaid. The $20,-670,971.77, representing rental and benefit payments made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to farmers, was collected under the provisions of that act, but the decisions of the Supreme Court nullifying that act will perhaps require a refund of this sum that will have to be repaid out of the general funds of the Federal Government. Much of the $30,049,534 allocated to Kentucky by the P. W. A. was for self-liquidating projects and for the erection of necessary buildings. An analysis of the other expenditures will show that $9,953,210 was expended by the Civil Works Administration as work relief. It may be admitted that this expenditure did not add value equal to the expenditure, but much of it was expended for permanent benefits to the public. The $23,321,-964.60 expended on the Civilian Conservation Corps camps has resulted in increasing values to the amount of the expenditure or even more. The $36,385,956 expended for relief in Kentucky by the Federal Government will be paid through taxation. Perhaps one-fifth of the total expenditure in Kentucky, all for relief, represents the total Let us consider for a moment whether the money which has been expended in Kentucky represents money that must be repaid sents the total burden that will have to be borne by the taxpayers of the Nation, and the balance will largely be paid by those who secured the money.

I did not come here today to deal in generalities or to entertain you with wild fancies or to spread propaganda. I have given you facts obtained from the records, as it is only through understanding facts that the truth may be known.

THE GOLDEN RULE WAY TO UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an exceedingly interesting article by Mr. George A. Hormel, chairman of the board of George A. Hormel & Co., of Beverly Hills, Calif. The article is entitled "The Golden Rule Way to Unemployment Relief."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GOLDEN RULE WAY TO UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

We enjoy in America today benefits which are unparalleled in any other section of the world. During the last three decades we have made strides in science, medicine, transportation, and in many other fields which have opened for the American people opportunities for self-expression, advancement, and happiness beyond any dreams of the last century. We are reputed to be in possession of nearly one-half the wealth of the world. We have what appears on the surface to be everything necessary to make our people content, happy, self-respecting, and creative.

However, although the ideal may be a state of happiness among our people, the facts are no longer consistent with that ideal. A nation cannot be happy when ten or more millions of its wage earners are out of employment and have no immediate hope of being placed back in their jobs. This amazing unemployment load has brought perplexities and hardships to 30,000,000 of our people. It is most certainly inconsistent with the ideals of government as expressed by our forefathers, and reiterated by of government as expressed by our forefathers, and reiterated by our present-day patriots.

The causes of this unhappy condition do not rest in our philosophy of government; wholesale unemployment is the direct opposite to its ideals. Nor can these causes be considered a part of the physical structure of our Nation; there is enough wealth in America, if properly administered, to make this condition impossible. Must we not recognize that the responsibility for finding the ultimate solution of the unemployment problem which has threatened the very security of the Nation, rests upon employers in the field of business and industry? A frank discussion of the fundamentals involved will, it is hoped, throw some light on this problem. this problem.

The arguments which follow and the conclusions which have been reached are based on a knowledge of conditions in the business world gained through many years of experience in a company which today employs approximately 4,000 men and women. The simple and direct steps herein indicated, to lift us out of the depression into prosperity, are not new and untried. They are merely the present application of methods used so successfully in the present.

THE ECONOMIC SITUATION SEEN IN PERSPECTIVE

We can better understand our present plight and ferret out its causes through a brief summary of recent trends.

Looking over the sociological movements of the past 30 years, we become aware of important major factors. Until the amazing industrial advances made in America during the late decades of the last century, most of the simple commodities which were available were made by hand. A wage of $1 to $1.25 for a 12- or 14-hour day purchased all that the world then afforded for the family of a workingman. family of a workingman.

Then came the great industrial development with new machines speeding up mass production. The results of education and the development of inventive genius were being felt in American business and industry.

A wave of prosperity set in with feverish activity. When the war broke out this prosperity was definitely assured. It was then that a miracle took place which changed the whole basis of American life. After our own country entered the war, the Army took large numbers of the best of our young men. This created a shortage of labor, and the wage rate was correspondingly increased. Everyone was busy throughout the war period, and wages were the highest they had ever been in the history of the world. What followed the close of the war should be a guide to industry in the future. We shortened the hours and maintained the pay, and that was the greatest contribution to our period of prosperity.

At the end of the war the demand on American industry for war supplies was cut off, and the time for an economic readjust-

At the end of the war the demand on American industry for war supplies was cut off, and the time for an economic readjustment had arrived. This was one of the most serious problems we ever faced, but a depression was prevented at that time by supplying a need. The need was employment for the men returning from overseas, and we supplied that need by reducing hours of labor and substantially maintaining the pay.

At that time the railroads were operated by the Government and an 8-hour day, without reduction in wages, was established. But industry was reluctant to follow, claiming, as some claim today, that the increased cost of living would reduce buying and retard industry, thus throwing labor out of work.

However, President Harding conferred with the leading businessmen of the Nation, urging the adoption of the shorter-hour day without reducing pay. After several sessions with the heads of the steel industry, the 10- and 12-hour day was reduced to an 8-hour day, and it was only a short time until 8 hours became the working schedule for nearly all lines of business throughout the Nation. It is stated that the late Judge Gary, then at the head of United States Steel, was strong in his contention that it was the best thing that ever happened for business.

The following years drew millions of people from the farm into was the best thing that ever happened for business.

The following years drew millions of people from the farm into town and city industries, and the ex-farmer became an industrial consumer. Increased efficiency in farming gave an increased supply of agricultural products, notwithstanding the decreased number of farmers. However, in the later twenties the Nation began to feel the effect of the many new labor-saving and automatic machines in industry. Usually when such a machine was invented one man operating it would do the work of 10 or 20, but industry failed to divide the work among all the willing workers. Therefore they must either remain idle or go back to the farm to crowd the ranks of agriculture.

Newer industries failed to spring up as fast as labor-saving machines were installed. The more we sent men back to the farm the more volume of farm products increased, until in 1929 and 1930 our elevators and warehouses were bulging with a surplus of foodstuffs. The law of supply and demand lowered market prices of farm products to a level which was under their cost of of farm products to a level which was three theorems of farm production.

The year 1929 brought our greatest crisis and found our people drunk with speculation. Then came the stock-market crash. This was a tremendous shock to buying power. Many had been living by their wits. They had no special jobs. But when the crash came it precipitated this class down to earth. They mortgaged their homes, their cars, borrowed where they could, lost it all, and were in debt. Business was at a standstill. Manufactured goods began to accumulate. Business America became panicky. We cut and slashed prices to make sales. Later we cut and slashed wages to reduce cost, and by so doing further curtailed buying power, and at this point we utterly destroyed the most perfect economic situation this country had ever enjoyed.

In other words, the reduced pay sapped the lifeblood from our business system, and within 6 months we were in the depths of depression. Withdraw one-third of the blood from the human system and we have a sick patient with many aliments. Likewise, if we reduce the pay check by one-third, we withdraw one-third of the money in actual circulation, and we have an anemic nation, with grave disorders in many of its economic departments.

Is it not reasonable, therefore, to conclude that a transfusion of money throughout the arteries of our national trade will revive our sick Nation and restore business to normal health?

Here, then, we find the solution to our problem, through shortening the hours of labor and increasing the pay check of those now at work. The increased buying power thus established will put into circulation billions of dollars, which will revitalize our national life.

This process is as natural as any law of nature. It is the inevitable result of a theory which has long since proved sound. The idea of shorter hours and more pay is not new. We are not required to experiment. We applied this very remedy to a sick nation after the war. It resulted in prosperity. Is there any reason why the same treatment will not be just as effective

Let us see how this remedy will work. A 36-hour week with time and a half for overtime for all employees between the ages of 18 and 60, a $4-per-day minimum basic wage for figuring hourly rates for common labor, with skilled workmen higher in propor-tion, would mean an increase of $8 per week over the N. R. A.

of $16 per week. There are approximately 35,000,000 wage earners on our pay rolls. If each pay check is increased $8 per week, it would mean $280,000,000 added money circulating through all avenues of trade each week.

each week.

For every added dollar that is spent, some one must work to make that which the extra dollar buys.

It is claimed that the extra spending of $280,000,000 weekly will create enough jobs to put 10,000,000 of the unemployed back to work within 6 months. The combined new buying power ($240,000,000 per week) of the newly employed, and the increase of $280,000,000 of those at work, will place more than $500,000,000 of new money into circulation every week.

Is it not reasonable to conclude that the addition of $2,000,000,000,000 a month to our buying power and the 36-hour workweek will

000 a month to our buying power and the 36-hour workweek will result in giving every willing worker a job and will restore prosperity to every line of industry and business?

THE VERY BEST BUSINESS INSURANCE IS EMPLOYMENT ASSURANCE

The proposed plan will work for the mutual advantage of employer and employee. It is a natural solution of the problem written in the laws of the economic order rather than a temporary or artificial remedy.

Let every industrial leader ask himself the question: Is it more Let every industrial leader ask himself the question: Is it more hazardous to add a trifle to the selling price of his product in order to insure an increased pay check, and pass it on to the consumer, than to pay the tremendous Federal, State, and municipal taxes which are unavoidable, and will continue to be so as long as we permit millions to remain jobless? Is it as costly and ruinous as the income and inheritance tax? Can we reasonably expect anything but destructive taxation if economic disorders are not corrected by our business leaders themselves?

We have reached the crisis. Something must be done. The longer we defer shortening hours and raising pay, the more we are encouraging communism and socialism. Our rapidly mounting taxes will eventually ruin us.

Furthermore, $500,000,000 added to our weekly circulation will relieve the distress of the American farmer, since it will create enough new business to attract the ex-farmer back to the cities and towns where he will become an urban consumer. This increased buying power and the removal of the ex-farmer from the field of production will enable the legitimate farmer to operate at a profit once more.

THE PRACTICABILITY OF THE PLAN

It does not require a stroke of magic to increase the pay check in all lines of activity as some would have us believe. In the company in which the writer is interested, for example, the statistical report for the year ending October 26, 1935, shows an average of 2,925 people employed at the main plant in Austin, Minn. The total tonnage of packing-house products sold during the year was 336,259,660 pounds. According to these figures it would require adding to the price of the product sold three-tenths of a cent per pound in order to increase each pay check $8 per week over the N. R. A. basis of $16.

One of the leading milling companies in America advised that it would require adding 6 cents to the cost of a barrel of flour to would require adding 6 cents to the cost of a barrel of flour to increase each pay check on their pay roll $8 per week. A report from one of our leading chain bakeries advises that it would add approximately three-fourths of a cent to the cost of a loaf of bread to do likewise for their employees. Would the aggregate increase in price make it a hardship for the wage earner if he received an extra $8 per week?

Like a thunderclap out of a clear sky our Government demanded of the meat packer a processing tax of $2.25 per hundred on all hogs slaughtered, or about $5 per hog. For the year ending October 26, 1935, this tax amounted to $4,325,017.39 for our company at Austin, while our entire plant pay roll totalled $3,730,407.07 for the same period. In other words, the processing tax for the year amounted to $594,610.32 more than was paid in wages.

The Government at the same time demanded of the miller a processing tax of $1.38 per barrel of flour. This enormous tax of the packer and the miller was added to the cost of what they produced and it created no noticeable administrative problem. It produced and it created no noticeable administrative problem. It required a simple routine of business—a matter of bookkeeping. Like any other item, it was added to the cost of production and

Like any other item, it was added to the cost of production and passed on to the consumer.

Can it be consistently argued that the miller can absorb a Government processing tax of $1.38 per barrel but cannot add 6 cents a barrel for the purpose of increasing the pay check? Is it fair reasoning to say the packer can pay a Government tax of $5 per hog but cannot add a fraction of a cent per pound to the cost of his product to increase the pay check?

The packing business and the milling business are fundamentally the same as any other line of business and will be equally affected by an increased pay check. Since the educated brain from our high schools and universities has entered your business and my business, it has developed efficiency methods and labor-saving machinery which has multiplied the production per man so enormously that a triffe added to that which is produced will make possible the increased pay check and the 36-hour week.

Would it not be more reasonable to give money directly to the employee than to have it collected by governmental agencies and redistributed with a high and necessary wastage? Diversified disredistributed with a high and necessary wastage? Diversified distribution of wealth through industry would be much more economical and satisfactory than centralized control.

APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GIVE AND TAKE

APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GIVE AND TAKE

The Golden Rule will work in business. It is the solution of our unemployment problem. The fundamental law of human life is service, cooperation. All progress of our race must be measured in terms of this law. America has excelled all other nations because it has recognized and put into practice this principle to a higher degree than any other country. The employer, in helping the worker and the unemployed, will inevitably help himself.

The W. K. Kellogg Co., of Battle Creek, Mich., has been operating on a 36-hour week and $4.50 per day minimum-wage basis, plus a bonus system, for nearly 5 years, and openly declared through the columns of the press that it is the only solution to the problem of unemployment relief and business recovery.

It is understood that the Ford Motor Co. is operating on a $6 problem of unemployment relief and business recovery.

It is understood that the Ford Motor Co. is operating on a $6 minimum wage per day and a shorter hour week. Should we not be encouraged to do likewise when companies of this character have set the example? If all employers in industrial, commercial, financial, and professional lines would unite in carrying out this policy, there would be no depression.

Obviously, public opinion among employers must be strong enough to insist on a universal adoption of these higher standards to avoid malpractices. Why should workmen in one line of business be required to work longer hours than workmen in other lines? Why should we let unscrupulous employers who chisel for longer hours and lower pay disrupt a uniform basic policy? Why not discourage the demand for Government regimentation and regulation of business by a voluntary uniform basic work day and wage scale? and wage scale?

A VOLUNTARY RATHER THAN A LEGISLATIVE SOLUTION

A VOLUNTARY RATHER THAN A LEGISLATIVE SOLUTION

The business flurry we are having now is not enduring, when more than 10,000,000 remains unemployed. This activity is artificial. Government spending is like a hypodermic; when the administration of Government funds ceases, we will again have increased unemployment and business depression.

We reached the lowest depth of our depression within 6 months after we cut and slashed the pay in 1932.

Cut the pay check now $8 a week under the N. R. A. basis of $16 per week, and within 6 months half of our present industries will, for lack of buying, close up shop.

Increase the pay check $8 a week over the N. R. A. basis of $16 per week and within 6 months, with a 36-hour week, every willing worker will have a job, and we will have renewed business activity in every line.

in every line

True, industry can take care of only part of the unemployed, but industry can take the initiative in adopting a 36-hour week now, the same as it did following the war when the working schedule was reduced from a 10- and 12-hour day to an 8-hour day. It set the example, and employers of labor throughout the Nation followed. It required no law to establish the 8-hour day. It will require no law to establish a 36-hour week.

By what method can we achieve the shorter hour day and higher

By what method can we achieve the shorter hour day and higher pay? It is suggested that every local chamber of commerce throughout the country cooperate with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers of the United States, and sign up employers in establishing a readjustment of hours and wages, to become effective on a certain date. No employer will suffer because the relative level of competitive cost for each group will advance by the same amount for all. If industry and commerce take the lead, employers in miscellaneous lines will be obliged to follow.

Whatever plan is adopted, action must not be delayed. It should make no difference what administration is in power. Our problem is one for American business to solve and must not be left for either put the jobless to work with higher pay and stop the need of huge Government spending for relief purposes, or submit to continued increases in taxes each year which are bound to ruin us. Would not the universal adoption of the Golden Rule plan help to end our depression and reestablish prosperity? Our people would be lifted once more to a plane of selfrespecting citizenship through honest employment, so that it will again be true in fact that this is a nation "of the people, by the people, and for the people." people."

TAXES FOR EXTRAVAGANCE-ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARBOUR

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered over the National Broadcasting System last night by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] on the subject Taxes for Extravagance.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Once again the tax collector comes knocking at the doors of the American people. This time he has in his hand an entirely new weapon which on first glance seems only to strike a small group of our citizens. Actually, it will hit everyone of us. It en-dangers those who have jobs, those who seek better ones, and those who want to find jobs.

Perhaps the tax man has never climbed your particular front steps. It may be that because you are exempted from income tax by reason of a family or dependents you believe that you will not feel the blows contained in these new tax laws. It may be that feel the blows contained in these new tax laws. It may be that because you are not now employed you feel that a new tax bill does not concern you.

The new tax bill, now being considered in Congress by request of the present administration, directly concerns corporations and stockholders. For that reason you may be inclined to pass it by with only a glance. If you will do me the kindness of listening for just a few minutes I believe I can show you that you are affected by the new bill, no matter what may be your income or whether you have any income at all.

affected by the new bill, no matter what may be your income or whether you have any income at all.

Taken by itself, the new tax bill is a strange animal which, once unleashed, would gobble up the little businesses that are the backbone of this country. On its heels, however, comes a message from the President suggesting that business begin to employ more men. This is only the latest attempt of the New Deal to exploit the unfortunate by subterfuge.

Probably you already know that every man, woman, and child in this country pays taxes. The little child with a nickel to spend for an ice cream cone unwittingly sends part of the nickel to the United States Treasury. The white-haired grandmother who buys a shawl to throw around her shoulders likewise enriches the Treasury in Washington to the extent of part of the purchase price.

United States Treasury. The white-haired grandmother who buys a shawl to throw around her shoulders likewise enriches the Treasury in Washington to the extent of part of the purchase price.

Of course, we have always had to pay taxes to the Government so that it could continue its functions. In recent years, however, our taxes have piled up higher and higher. Now comes an entirely new proposal to add to the top of that pile so that the American people are asked to pay more taxes than ever before in their history.

Why are more taxes necessary at this time when all of us have diminished incomes? We can hardly complain when we are asked to pay taxes to the Federal Government to maintain our courts, our Department of Justice, our Agricultural Bureaus, our Weather Bureaus, our Lighthouse and Lifesaving Services, our Military and Naval Establishments, and all the other ordinary activities of government that make for the safety, health, and well-being of our citizens. For such ordinary activities, however, we need no new taxes. Were these activities alone drawing on the Federal Treasury, our taxes would be but a fraction of what they are now, and the child would be getting a bigger scoop of ice cream for a nickel, and the grandmother would be paying less for her shawl.

It is the out of the ordinary activities that the present administration has added to the Government which make additional taxes necessary. You are now being asked to begin to pay for the helter-skelter collection of New Deal bureaus and alphabetical agencies that have been run on borrowed money.

For 3 years the New Deal has tumbled billions of dollars into a bottomless well. It has spent money that it did not possess, mortgaging the country in the sublime confidence that "everything will come out all right." With hardly a crumb to offer as evidence of all that has been squandered, the bill is now presented to you for payment.

Remember that the income tax is still in force and will continue to you for payment

Remember that the income tax is still in force and will continue to be. The new tax proposal is in addition, and has for its avowed purpose the taxing of the "rainy day" savings of corporations and dividends paid to stockholders.

Perhaps you are saying, "How does that affect me? I am not a corporation and I own no shares of stock."

The answer is this: If you or the breadwinner in your family works for a corporation—and most businesses are corporation—your future employment is in danger, because without these "rainy day" savings the corporation cannot employ you when earnings fall off.

If you are now unemployed, your chances of getting work are going to be poorer, for without such "rainy day" savings a corporation cannot expand and so employ more workers.

If you own shares of stock, of course, you are directly and immediately affected, as you are if your income comes from a trust fund or insurance policy, both of which depend for a portion of their earnings upon corporation dividends.

corporation is a person, even though an artificial one. run by human beings, it employs human beings, it conducts its business just like the country storekeeper or the barber or the plumber. It has its good years and its bad, and it tries—if it is honestly and ably run—to save out of its current earnings a reserve to tide it over in evil times so that it may continue to reserve to tide it over in evil times so that it may continue to employ its workers, produce its goods, and pay interest to those who have invested their savings in it.

The administration tax bill proposes to tax the reserves of a corporation thus putting a penalty upon its attempts to save for a "rainy day." If the corporation gets rid of its reserves by paying them out in dividends to stockholders, the Government taxes the employees as well as the stockholders.

During the depression many of our factories and businesses—most of them corporations, of course—would have been unable to employ any workers at all had their reserves been destroyed by such a tax as is now proposed.

most of them corporations, of course—would have been unable to employ any workers at all had their reserves been destroyed by such a tax as is now proposed.

The great bulk of American business is done by small corporations which must plow back their earnings into wages and equipment if they are to expand and prosper and so create more employment. The large corporations in this country already have extensive plants and equipment, and most of them are probably not considering expansion. It is the small business which this proposed tax bill would cripple and through it any hope of increasing employment in America. I bluntly and confidently declare that the New Deal's tax bill will stifle small businesses, keep them small, and thus protect and enrich the bigger monopolies.

Remembering that the effects of this measure would be to restrain businesses from expansion, I am trying in vain to reconcile the tax proposal with the latest message from the White House urging American business to offer more jobs to the unemployed. I should like to see greater employment, of course, but we shall never have it by crippling business, which is the most abundant of all sources of jobs.

That the New Deal sorely needs money to pay for past extravagances no one denies. That a tax bill of some kind may be necessary is a matter we must face, without delay. We cannot help but remember the old maxim that "nothing is certain but death and taxes."

but remember the old maxim that "nothing is certain but death and taxes."

However, I very much regret that when the administration sent to Congress this present tax proposal it did not also send along a little note saying that it had learned a lesson in thrift and would hereafter mend its extravagant ways.

What is the use of passing a tax bill designed to draw from the pockets of the American people all these millions when we are not told to what uses all that money will be put? Before we send the tax collector out after the American people armed with a larger net than ever before, let us have some assurance from the New Dealers that this money is not going for new extravagances nor even for a continuation of the old ones. Let us hear the cheering news that the Government octopus is going to divest itself of some of its costly and useless tentacles. Let us hear that it will cut down its bulging pay rolls. Let us hear that it will pass no more fortunes out to people for making things that nobody wants, for tearing things down, for doing nothing at all.

There was a time when Congress itself determined how much money would be spent by the Government and for what purposes. It was the New Deal that inaugurated the system of sending down a blank check which Congress was asked to sign and return. It was the New Deal which began the expending of huge sums for projects never divulged to Congress nor to the people of the country. The friends of the administration in Congress actually turned over many of their legislative powers to the New Dealers who used them to promote projects that would be merely funny if they were not so costly.

Those men whom all of you have seen dotting our city streets and countryside, leaning on shovels or pickaxes and giving the

Those men whom all of you have seen dotting our city streets and countryside, leaning on shovels or pickaxes and giving the appearance of being almost ready to go to work, are a result of this New Deal innovation. Those men are not to be blamed. Most of them, I believe, would welcome a job where they would really be doing something useful in return for their pay. But they were assigned to projects so utterly trivial and useless under bosses so incompetent and dawdling that it is no wonder that they have little or nothing to show for a day's work.

It is this useless waste of money that I would like to see curbed before any such tax bill as is now proposed becomes law. I want to see Congress take back the powers and responsibilities it voted away. I want to see Congress decide where and how money shall be spent. I do not wish to take jobs away from men and women. I wish rather to see them engaged in something worth-while, but until we in Congress can again determine how public moneys shall be spent, that will never be.

I shall continue to oppose such tax measures as the one now proposed until I have the assurance that governmental extravagance is over and that Congress has taken back its traditional and constitutional right and duty of standing guard over the Treasury of the United States. Those men whom all of you have seen dotting our city streets

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY ICKES BEFORE COMMUNITY FORUM, PITTSBURGH

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting and informative address delivered by Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Administrator of Public Works, before the Community Forum, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the evening of Monday, April 6, 1936.

printed in the RECORD, as follows:

country than such a gathering as this. You have come together to discuss politics. This is as it should be and yet it is a far cry from the time, not so very long ago, when citizens generally considered politics to be beneath them; as something to be endured but not encouraged; a subject not fit for discussion in the presence of the immature. Those were the days when we brought up our children in the belief that storks were the common carriers who delivered habies with a conditional attached to the customers. up our children in the belief that storks were the common carriers who delivered babies with a c. o. d. tag attached to the customers who had placed orders for them. Public meetings, except religious services, were for the purpose of "acquiring culture", or "improving the mind" and not by the widest possible stretch could it even be imagined that there could be either pleasure or profit, let alone a healthy stimulation of the mental processes, in listening to or participating in a discussion of politics.

Citizens throughout the length and breadth of the land, whether they be rich or poor, native or foreign born: employers

Citizens throughout the length and breadth of the land, whether they be rich or poor, native or foreign born; employers or employees, industrial workers or farmers; whether they boast Phi Beta Kappa keys and doctors' degrees, or are barely literate, are today interesting themselves in politics as they have not done for many years. Since governments are begotten of politics; since mayors, governors, legislators, Supreme Court Justlees, and Presidents are all more or less perfect flowers of politics; and since our economic well-being and our social order depend upon politics, we have all come to realize the importance of politics in even the most intimate details of our daily life. So groups of men and women, concerned about the future of their country, since with that future the well-being and happiness of themselves and their children are inextricably bound up, are not only willing, they are eager to seek information that may help them to perform as intelligently as possible their full duty as those citizens upon whom, in the final analysis, rests the responsibility, not only for what America is but what America is to be.

No speaker can promise his audience transcendent wisdom on whom, in the final analysis, rests the responsibility, not only for what America is but what America is to be.

No speaker can promise his audience transcendent wisdom on any subject. In these days of great metropolitan newspapers, of magazines with national circulations, and radio programs devoted to public affairs, all anyone can hope to do is to add something to the store of current knowledge. As a member of the national administration, my sympathy with its point of view and policies must, of course, be taken for granted. As you listen you must decide for yourselves how greatly you should discount what may be said on account of the loyalty that is frankly avowed. There can be no assurance that every statement made will be uncolored by personal beliefs that are held or by the political allegiance that has been voluntarily and gladly assumed. It is only fair to warn you in advance that your guest is a man of strong convictions who lays no claim to being a disembodied spirit functioning in the sterilized tube of an immaculate laboratory. He does not pretend that he can look at a pressing political or social issue with complete detachment. All that he can and does claim for himself is that he will say nothing to you that he does not believe. He will in all matters try to be straightforward, leaving it to you, on the basis of your own prejudices and of whatever facts you may have, to agree with him, either in whole or in part, or to disagree with him with your whole heart.

Another thing may be said, and that is that I have never approached a political question in the spirit of a partisan. I have never believed that all the political wisdom, all the public zeal, all the disinterestedness, and all the patriotism lay in any political party. It may be charged that my political principles are colored by my prejudices, but it is honestly my belief that I cannot justly be accused of partisanship in the sense that my convictions have ever been surrendered into the keeping of any political party.

A son of your own great

A son of your own great State, I can point to an ancestry in this country in both lines back to pre-Revolutionary War days. And there is not a drop of American blood in my veins that is not true Pennsylvania blood. In the oldest line that I have been able to trace I represent the tenth generation in this State, and I was the first one in my direct line to leave Pennsylvania. Politically, as first one in my direct line to leave Pennsylvania. Politically, as might be expected, I was brought up in the Republican tradition. My mother, who was of full Scotch descent, clung to her politics almost as tenaciously as she held onto her hereditary Presbyterianism. In my direct line on both sides, from the time that the Republican Party was founded, there was never a break in allegiance to that party until I discovered, to my great surprise, that there were occasions when candidates on the Republican ticket was leaved between leave described the many terms leave on other ticket. there were occasions when candidates on the Republican ticket were less desirable than were their opponents on other tickets. I remember as a young boy that there was a black sheep in the fold. A cousin of my father's avowed himself to be a Democrat. Even his consanguinity did not save him from the contempt that, in our belief, he so richly merited. So far as we were concerned, he was outside the pale, a skeleton in the family closet, one to be pitied because of his political aberration.

With such a relitical background and with guah convictions it

With such a political background and with such convictions, it With such a political background and with such convictions, it was only to be expected that when the campaign of 1932 came around I should support that candidate for President whose character, record, and public accomplishments seemed to promise most for the well-being of the people as a whole. I had closely followed the record that had been made by President Hoover. I had seen him go into office in 1929 generally acclaimed as the best-equipped man who had ever occupied the White House. America was already entering the last phase of the greatest era of prosperity that we had ever known. People were not much concerned about politics in those days. Economically, the country seemed to be solidly set on

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be rinted in the Record, as follows:

There could not be a more hopeful portent for the future of our buntry than such a gathering as this. You have come together of discuss politics. This is as it should be and yet it is a far by from the time, not so very long ago, when citizens generally

How like a mighty and beneficent demigod Herbert Hoover ap-peared in those days. But when the acid test came we discovered to our consternation not only that we had been looking at him through the little end of a very large telescope, but that the big end was placed so close to him that he was magnified out of

to our consternation not only that we had been looking at him through the little end of a very large telescope, but that the big end was placed so close to him that he was magnified out of human seeming. Mr. Herbert Hoover had been able to lead when no leadership was necessary, when we were being rushed onward in the swirl of a highly stimulated but false enthusiasm, which had been engendered and kept going with shots in the arm under his own and preceding administrations.

The popular hero, the great engineer, the best equipped President that the country had ever seen became a figure to be pitted after the crash of 1929. Where was his capacity for leadership then? What quality did he have to stand at the helm with clear eye and steady hand and bring the ship of state once more safely into harbor? What reserve of morale did he have to share with stricken men and women, who, bereft of their savings as well as of their jobs, had little hope for the future? Unable to stimulate convincingly a courage that he did not possess, incapable of supplying the leadership that the people so desperately needed, Mr. Hoover's statesmanship could rise no higher than a declaration of a moratorium on his pet forecasts of "a chicken in every por" and "two cars in every garage." As a substitute, he undertook to whistle down the chilling winds that meant cold and hunger to despairing millions, by uttering in a doleful voice the prophecy that "prosperity is just around the corner."

In order, so far as possible, to evade personal responsibility in case prosperity should forget the corner around which it was hiding, Mr. Hoover frantically began to organize committees; to call conferences; to request employers to share the work; to suggest studies of this or that or the other problem; to lecture local communities on their duty to support their citizens who might need help even although those cities had reached the end of their resources; to utter platitudes about the initiative, the enterprise, and the inherent pride of American citizen

A do-nothing, but, on the surface, a highly successful administration prior to the crash of 1929, continued, after that catastrophe, to be a do-nothing but an admitted failure as an administration. In making this indictment I do not overlook the fact that under President Hoover rich treasure was siphoned the fact that under President Hoover rich treasure was siphoned out of the vaults of the United States into the banks and the great corporations of the country. Surely none of you have forgotten the eighty-odd millions generously poured into the lap of Mr. Charles G. Dawes, of Chicago, in order to ball out his bank just after Mr. Dawes had resigned as President of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Hoover, while sternly denying Federal relief to starving men and women because he did not want to usurp the functions that local governments could no longer perform, or on the ground that he did not wish to weaken the moral fiber of American citizens who, notwithstanding that fiber, were nevertheless hungry and who, notwithstanding that fiber, were nevertheless hungry and cold, did not hesitate to weaken the moral fiber of banks and insurance companies and manufacturing and industrial enterprises by generously handing over to them millions of dollars that you and I have had to pay in taxes, and the repayment of which by and I have had to pay in taxes, and the repayment of which by some of the beneficiaries is being resisted in the courts on the ground that in lending that money the Government exceeded its constitutional powers. Mr. Hoover made his choice in those days of catastrophe. He elected to help the bankers and the investing classes. They must have their property though the people starved. When I was in Pittsburgh in October of 1934 I discussed the profound changes that were taking place in this country. I traced the story of the disappearing frontier, the dawn of the machine age with its subsequent industrial expansion, the era of immense fortunes and of political rule by the sheer power of big business. And then, as I recall, I said that it was with a feeling of regret that was akin to shame that truth forced me to assert that this State of my birth stood out among her sister Commonwealths as that was akin to shame that truth forced me to assert that this State of my birth stood out among her sister Commonwealths as furnishing an unwholesome example of a heedlessly exploiting minority battening upon the miseries and profiting from the oppressions of a great but helpless people. As I warmed to my subject I called a spade a spade—I even mentioned names—names which at one time were of great importance in Pennsylvania, names with which all of you are familiar.

I singled out Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, of your own city, once upon a time acclaimed as "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton" whose most recent contribution to the cause of good government was to give $1,000 to a lobby organization in Washington to help to make the country "tax conscious." I mentioned also his fleet-footed messenger, the lugubrious David A.

Reed, whose senatorial tenure was brought to an abrupt end by the voters of this State in 1934. Nor did I overlook that self-appointed defender of the constitutional rights of a liberty-loving people, that self-admittedly great and profound constitutional lawyer, Mr. James M. Beck, whose views on the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act were not shared by the United States Supreme Court. I have not noted whether Mr. has exercised his judicial prerogative to dissent from the decision in that case.

These men and others of their ilk comprise a school of turtlelike statesmen who hastily withdraw their heads into their shells whenever anything new comes within the range of their limited vision. To them the status quo ante is the utopia of the future. The administration of Herbert Hoover represented to them the ne plus ultra in government. And now that the Nation is emerging hopefully from the economic pit in which they left it in 1933, they deliberately blind themselves to the facts of actual recovery that are recognized by every honest-minded man and woman. They scream aloud their imprecations against the policies of the New Deal. Taking their cue from Mr. Hoover they go about the country spreading the same old gospel of fear; moaning the country spreading the s familiar dirge of despair.

Parrotlike, they nervously bustle about muttering "balance the Budget, balance the Budget", and this comprises the breadth, depth, and height of their economic, social, and political program. Incapable of offering anything themselves, they refuse to believe that another can serve the people. In order to make the country forget their own dismal record of fallure, they insist that whatever this administration has done has been wrong; that anything that it might, could, should, or would do, would equally be wrong. Lacking initiative, devoid of vision, they dread the uncertainties of a political future that must be courageously and intelligently faced if we are not to be overwhelmed by it. They are not even standpatters. They would turn tail and incontinently retrace standpatters. They would turn tall and incontinently retrace their steps to the Hoover millenium.

The perfect flower of their statesmanship is the proposal that we discard the New Deal and reclaim the old deal from the junk we discard the New Deal and rectain the old deal from the junk shop. This is the issue with which we citizens of America are now face to face. This is the suggestion that is before us for consideration, and which I wish to discuss with you tonight. In order to come to grips with this issue, it will first be necessary to define the term "New Deal." As to the "old deal", we know from bitter experience what that is.

To me, the New Deal means the greatest good for the greatest number of the people. And if this is what the New Deal is, then it is not really new because always it has been the aspiration of every enlightened government to achieve the greatest good for the greatest number of its people. That is what governments are for. I do not believe that there has ever been a political campaign since America became a free Nation in which what we today call the New Deal was not advocated by candidates for office from that of the Presidency down. What is really new about the New Deal of this administration is that it not only promised reforms in the interest of the people as a whole, it has actually been translating those promises into legislation. It has not been content to build up hopes for the future only to permit them to die away with the echoes of the campaign.

I venture the assertion that the man who insists that he will undo all that the New Deal has done; that he will tear from the statute books every act carrying out New Deal policies; that he will turn the clock back to the period antedating 1933, is either doing some dishonest thinking or he is making reckless promises that he would not even attempt to carry out if given the chance. I venture the further assertion that there is not a candidate who hopes to become President on January 20 of next year who would dare to turn back the clock. After all, the American section of the human race is going forward and not backward.

It is a fair question to ask of those men who so vigorously condemn the New Deal and who assure the people that if the present administration is defeated at the polls next November the first concern of those succeeding it will be to sink the New Deal with-concern of those succeeding it will be to sink the New Deal without a trace, what they propose to substitute for the New Deal. It might also be suggested to them that they state specifically what they object to in the New Deal.

When this administration came into power private charitable resources had been exhausted and cities, counties, and States in many parts of the land found themselves unequal to the task of providing food, clothing, and shelter for those who were out of work. Under the New Deal, Federal means have been used to supplement and to replenish inadequate local resources. Do the old dealers hold that the national administration should extend relef only to corporations, as was done under the preceding adminisonly to corporations, as was done under the preceding administration, leaving millions of American citizens to suffer hunger and

The New Deal attempted to save what was left of the banks of the country by putting them on a firmer footing so that people could deposit their savings in them with reasonable certainty that they would not lose those savings. Was this improper conduct on the part of the New Deal and do the critics propose the abandonment of this policy in similar emergencies in the future?

The New Deal has increased tremendously the income of the farmers and has struggled unceasingly to provide work for the unemployed at decent wages. It has interested itself in the just cause of the man who works with his hands. Are these policies offensive to the old dealers?

The New Deal conceives it to be sound and humans statements.

The New Deal conceives it to be sound and humane statesman-ship to institute a system of social insurance so that people coming into old age or thrown out of work through no fault of their own will not have to choose between unwelcome charity and actual starvation. It has sought to protect the victims of occupational accidents and diseases, to prevent those additional agonies of childbirth which a mother suffers when she lacks the means to pay for proper medical care and fears the loss of her job. Is it such acts of simple humanity to which the old dealers object?

After the crash in the markets in the fall of 1929 it was discovered that thimble-rigging manipulators had been enticing even fairly experienced people to buy securities that were worthless. The New Deal undertook to protect the innocent investor without injury to the legitimate business of the exchanges and the boards of trade. Do the old dealers advocate the dismantling of these defenses that have been erected for the protection of helpless victims of speculative greed?

The New Deal advocates the adoption of the pending constitutional amendment to prevent the continued exploitation of the immature bodies of little children who are kept at work for long hours at tasks beyond their strength for pitiful pay. Do the old dealers demand the defeat of this humane measure so that the children of the poor may continue to be chained to the oars of industrial galleys?

The New Deal has given a fresh start in life to thousands of young men whose bodies and souls were not having a fair chance. It has concentrated them in C. C. C. camps where they are doing useful work in soil conservation, in reforestation, in the correction of stream pollution, and in numerous other lines. At the same time they are developing sound minds and sound bodies. Would the old dealers demobilize this shining army of fine young citizens and sentence its recruits to enforced idleness in demoralizing surroundings?

The New Deal has undertaken the first serious and Nation-wide campaign against vicious city slums, wiping out many of these areas of social blight, and constructing in their stead decent, modern living quarters for citizens in the lowest income brackets. Do the old dealers insist that the United States abandon this enlightened policy and cling to its dubious distinction of being the only one of the enlightened governments of the world to close its

Under the Presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt not a single American soldier or marine has been landed on the shores of a foreign country, thus establishing a time record since the year 1892. Would the old dealers prefer to go back to the "good old dealers" to this representations.

1892. Would the old deale days" in this respect also?

I do not pretend to say that under the New Deal no mistakes have been made or that performance of all of the hopeful at-tempts that have been made to solve our perplexing problems has been 100 percent. Of course, we have made mistakes. But it must be remembered that no peace-time administration has ever carried such heavy burdens as has this one, and after all we are merely human beings. I do claim that we have honestly tried. Yet there are those who, vaunting their patriotism and pretending a sympathetic interest in the welfare of their fellow citizens, have attempted to block the march forward of this administration every step of the way since March 4, 1933. And this after the adminis-tration had pulled them out from under their beds or from their cyclone cellars where they were quaking with fear and had shaken some courage back into them.

I have said on several occasions that those who sweepingly con-demn the New Deal and glibly promise, if given power, to put an inglorious end to it are without an affirmative program. That was not quite a fair or accurate statement. They have a program, or at least they offer a cure-all nostrum. "Balance the Budget, balance the Budget", they parrot, "and prosperity will soar to greater heights than ever before." Are we to understand that these politicians advocate a general increase in taxation, or are we to believe that they propose to repudiate completely our obligation to care for those millions of Americans who without relief would be face to face with stark want? They do not explain why, if a balanced Budget is the only essential to prosperity, we ever came to be taken for the economic ride of which we were the victims in 1929.

But the old dealers, those who would force the return of the country to the principle of laissez faire, rise to their most impassioned heights when, through shuddering microphones, they attack the President as a dictator, accusing him of deliberate misgovernment, of attempting to destroy the liberty of the press, and of arrogating to himself the functions of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government. Students of American history know that the same charges have been made against every President who has sought to advance the welfare of the common man. As far back as 1907 those who in their unpatriotic selfishness resisted the social and economic reforms that were urged by the first great Roosevelt echoed the same hackneyed and threadbare accusations in their malicious attempt to calumniate a man who accusations in their malicious attempt to calumniate a man who was making a brave stand against entrenched greed. I quote from an article on Theodore Roosevelt by Frank Cobb, which appeared nearly 30 years ago in the New York World:

"Always more law, more law, like the daughters of the horse-leech crying, 'Give! Give!' When will the President's clamor for new legislation end? When will he give the legitimate business interests of the country a breathing spell?

"A The grave defect of Mr. Roosevelt's corporation policy is that he has no policy.

"More legislation has been passed in a single year than the courts can dispose of in the next 3 years.

"It is folly to invent new schemes of regulation and excite new unrest when acts already passed are yet to be worked out in the courts.

""

"Nothing is settled. Nothing is certain. The demand for new experimental legislation goes on before the older experimental legexperimental legislation goes on before the older experimental legislation has been tried and tested. Confidence is shaken, and confidence is the mother of credit. Credit is weakened, and without credit the business of the Nation cannot be carried on. This is a simple fact which is worth a pound of all the theories that even so versatile a genius as President Roosevelt can invent.

* * It is time to call a halt. It is time to give legitimate business a breathing spell and permit the restoration of confidence and credit

"The country needs a rest from agitation."

"The country needs a rest from agitation."

Where have we heard similar words? Paragraph by paragraph, line for line, they are paraphrased in editorial attacks against Franklin D. Roosevelt that are appearing day after day in the Tory press. You will not miss the point that it is only when a President has interested himself in the cause of the plain people, when he has a heart that pulses with sympathy for humanity, when he is determined to equalize economic opportunities so as to establish a better and a happier social order, when he bravely tilts his lance against special privilege and entrenched greed that the copperheads, their ancestors or their descendants, secrete an extra supply of venom with which to strike him down.

The critics and traducers of Theodore Roosevelt also trembled for the safety of our institutions. They would preserve the Congress and the courts from the aggression of the Executive. They would defeat the cunning intention of a dictator to destroy our liberties and set up on free American soil an absolute and irresponsible Government. There are many such "patriots" abroad in the land today.

Another complaint against the Administration is that it has put the Government into business, thereby destroying private initiative. Big business in all parts of the country is being exhorted to "gang up" on President Roosevelt and it is generously responding to the call, although small business men throughout the length and breadth of the land, as well they might, regard the President as a friend who would save them from further encroachments and possible annihilation.

Big business has chosen for itself in this campaign an interesting alias—The American Liberty League. This offspring of a notorious political miscegenation held a banquet in Washington a short time ago, a banquet at whose board there were seated persons representing $1,000,000,000 in wealth. The controllers of this great aggregation of capital flocked into Washington in private cars or on special trains because their hearts were bleeding for the under-privileged and the oppressed among their less forprivate cars or on special trains because their hearts were bleeding for the under-privileged and the oppressed among their less fortunate fellow citizens. Among those present were: Felix A. du Pont, Jr., A. V. du Pont, Mrs. A. V. du Pont, Emil F. du Pont, Eugene E. du Pont, Henry B. du Pont, Mrs. H. B. du Pont, Pierre S. du Pont, Mrs. Irénée du Pont, Mrs. Pierre S. du Pont, and Mrs. Pierre S. du Pont. What a document of human liberty our Federal Constitution would be if only it had been destroy by the province of the property of the property of the province of the pr du Pont, and Mrs. Pierre S. du Pont. What a document of human liberty our Federal Constitution would be if only it had been drafted by the liberty-loving du Ponts, assisted by Messrs. Raskob, Shouse, John W. Davis, Beck, and Talmadge!

Speaking of the Du Ponts and their self-sacrificing efforts to preserve the constitutional liberties of us humbler Americans reminds me of Mr. Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., former Du Pont employee, but now, by their grace, president of the General Motors Corporation, in which the Du Pont interests are paramount. As might be expected, Mr. Sloan is also a member of the Liberty League and, like others of his kind, he considers himself ipso facto qualified to speak with finality on any question, even though it is not remotely connected with the business of his corporation. He has even assumed the right to do the political thinking for his stockholders, and to instruct them from the Olympian heights on which he dwells how they should exercise their rights of citizenship. Repeatedly he has gone on record as being in favor of keeping politics out of business, but as a Liberty Leaguer, he sees no impropriety in mixing up his business with politics. Conformably with the injunction of Mr. Edward F. Hutton, to "gang up" on President Roosevelt, he uses the annual reports of his corporation to its stockholders as a medium of disseminating political propaganda. The stockholders foot the bill for this publicizing of Liberty Leaguer Sloan's political views. It is even to be doubted that their consent is asked, although he presumes to speak not only for himself but for them.

Mr. Sloan's latest literary effort along this line appears in the annual stockholders' report of his corporation recently issued.

that their consent is asked, although he presumes to speak hot only for himself but for them.

Mr. Sloan's latest literary effort along this line appears in the annual stockholders' report of his corporation recently issued. Taking his pen in hand, he writes:

"The corporation believes and has no hesitancy in taking the position that the present attitude of the Government and the results of its experiments in the realm of economics * * have definitely postponed recovery."

Now, a corporation is supposed to be made up of its stockholders, and it is not out of place to wonder how Mr. Sloan found out that the views he so pontifically enunciates are in fact those of the stockholders of the General Motors Corporation. I doubt whether he took a vote on the subject. My guess is that, with the natural arrogance of men of his lik, he was expressing, as the views of the corporation, the opinion that he personally shares with Mr. Shouse and the patriotic Du Ponts. The surpassing wisdom, the all-encompassing grasp on all subjects that one acquires merely by joining the Liberty League is the political marvel of the age.

But Mr. Sloan presents an Achilles heel in the form of the audited figures of the financial status of his corporation. The duly impressed reader of the language above quoted, if he delves further into Mr. Sloan's annual report, will discover facts and figures therein that do not seem to support Mr. Sloan's conclusions. It appears that the sales of General Motors last year showed a gain of 34 percent over 1934, which, in net profit per share, amounted to $3.69 as compared with $1.99 in the earlier year. It seems, also, that the pay rolls of the corporation increased 22.7 percent last year. As Mr. Raymond Clapper wrote in his column: "What does Sloan mean, postponed recovery?" All I can say is that if Mr. Roosevelt is responsible for this "postponed recovery" I hope he will do a little more "postponing."

The trouble with Mr. Sloan and other Liberty League oracles is that they try to mix their hymns of hate of the administration with their exultations about their business achievements. "First they solemnly denounce the New Deal. Then they brag about how much money they are making." Knowing their type as I do, I anticipate that we will see within the next few months many corporation reports written according to the Sloan formula.

Mr. Sloan wants Government to have less to do with business,

Mr. Sloan wants Government to have less to do with business, although he is perfectly willing as a side line to tell Government how it should conduct its affairs. On the other hand, it would appear from another recent report to stockholders of a great corappear from another recent report to stockholders of a great corporation that wise planning on the part of Government will help to bring about the economic recovery of the country. Mr. Clarence M. Woolley, chairman of the board of the American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation, whose principal office is the Bessemer Building in this very city of Pittsburgh, and the affairs of which, therefore, are of particular interest to the people of this area, in his current report to his stockholders said:

"The business of foreign affiliated companies continues satisfactory. There has been no depression in the building industry abroad. While there have been declines in building in certain countries, increases have taken place elsewhere. The older countries have appreciated the steadying influence on the entire economic structure of the wisely planned building programs to take up slack in times of unemployment. This understanding, coupled with an insistent demand for better housing conditions, has produced an extraordinary equilibrium in building conditions abroad over a long term of years. In our own country we have yet to realize the weight of these factors."

It appears that while Mr. Sloan views with alarm "the present It appears that while Mr. Sloan views with alarm "the present attitude of Government and the results of its experiments in the realm of economics" Mr. Woolley demands more of such experiments, at least so far as "wisely planned building programs to take up slack in times of unemployment" are concerned. I wonder if Mr. Woolley, when he wrote those words, did not have in mind the Public Works program of this administration, which includes well-formulated plans for better housing in all parts of the country.

I have referred to the contribution by Mr. Mellon of $1,000 to assist in making the people "tax conscious." Probably President Roosevelt is attacked more bitterly and less understandingly on the subject of taxes than with respect to any other phase of his administration. It is a subject of intense concern to every one of us, and a little discussion of the subject might not be out of place.

when I was an old-fashioned boy studying economics and history as taught by old-fashioned teachers I learned that there were two fundamental principles of taxation, and they seemed to me to be so obvious that until recently I have taken them for granted. The first of these was that citizens should pay toward the support of the Government in proportion to their ability to pay, and the second—if indeed it is not the first principle dressed in a different suit of clothes—was that payment should be in proportion to the benefits received from Government.

Now, to my utter distress and amazement, I read in certain newspapers that this is all wrong. Sitting humbly at the feet

We are now asked to believe that the verities underlying taxation that have been accepted for a thousand years are in fact fallacies. We must not expect the rich to pay in proportion to their ability to pay; we must not demand that citizens support the Government in the ratio in which they receive benefits from the Government. Such notions are old-fashioned, out-moded, passé. There is a new principle of taxation lately proclaimed by some of those in the highest income brackets. This new theory is "soak the poor"; make people pay in proportion to their financial disabilities; send the tax collector out among the underincomed and humbler citizens who expect the least from Government and get even less than their modest expectations; make these people pay and pay and pay for the Government which the rich and the prosperous have arrogantly come to regard as peculiarly their own. peculiarly their own.

Taxation is a beneficent institution when regarded through the eyes of the rich man, provided, of course, that its heavy hand is removed from him and laid upon those least able to pay. For is removed from him and laid upon those least able to pay. For that reason, at least some of our multimillionaires want the surtaxes on great incomes reduced or even abolished and sales taxes imposed in their stead. Testimony to this effect was given before the United States Senate committee investigating lobbying. The witness was one J. A. Arnold, who described himself as manager of the American Taxpayers' League. I read from the Baltimore Sun's account of the hearing:

"The clash grew out of Arnold's testimony about the annual income of his organization, which, he said, was endeavoring 'to make the country tax conscious.' He said the revenues, contributions, and annual membership dues of $10 each amounted to $45,927 in 1935 and 'were about the same' in 1934. In former years the league received from $150,000 to $200,000 from the same sources, he testified.

"Despite his suggestion that 'everybody's broke nowadays', Arnold was able to get several large contributions last year, he testified, including one of $1,000 from Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, and one of $1,500 from E. Parmalee Prentice, who was identified by the committee as a son-in-law of John D. Rockefeller."

I continue to read from the Sun:
"Arnold testified that the Taxpayers' League was interested in promoting State sales taxes as substitutes for other levies and admitted it also favored reduction of Federal income taxes on individuals and corporations and reduction of Federal taxes on gifts and estates."

Arnold also was questioned about the connection of Mr. Bain-

Arnold also was questioned about the connection of Mr. Bainbridge Colby with his league. He said Mr. Colby had "cooperated" with the league and had furnished "valuable advice." Arnold testified that Mr. Colby had helped the league get the use of radio stations controlled by William Randolph Hearst, the publisher, and also had participated in some negotiations to get Governor Talmadge of Georgia to speak at a meeting in New York.

Now, everyone who is capable of honest thinking knows that a sales tax is a graduated income tax in reverse. It bears most heavily upon those least able to pay. But when the sales tax is glorified by the man of large income and his little brothers of the rich it is not that sort of a fiscal instrumentality at all. The glorified by the man of large income and his little brothers of the rich it is not that sort of a fiscal instrumentality at all. The sales tax, according to these public-spirited gentlemen, is a bright sunbeam bursting through a heavy cloud; a welcome responsibility that every citizen ought gladly to assume. How wonderful it is, say they, for the cares and burdens of Government and its opportunities and responsibilities to be brought home to all. And what better method to accomplish this result than to require every citizen to pay taxes?

More self-serving and dishonest thinking! As if everyone does not pay taxes. As if, generally speaking, under our system, those least able to afford it do not pay taxes in inverse ratio to their least able to afford it do not pay taxes in inverse ratio to their ability to pay.

Just why shouldn't taxes be paid in proportion to ability to pay and to benefits received from Government? The man who buys more food or more clothing or builds a bigger house than his neighbor without question pays in proportion to what he buys. The same rule ought to apply to the purchase of public benefits. The great industrialist who has hundreds of millions of dollars invested in plants and the products of those plants requires police and fire protection to a greater extent than the humbler citizen who brings home his modest weekly wages to spend on the family that he is rearing in a mortgaged bungalow. Those individuals and business enterprises who have investments in forfamily that he is rearing in a mortgaged bungalow. Those individuals and business enterprises who have investments in foreign lands or are engaged in international commerce are the ones that particularly need for their protection a great navy and a highly trained and efficient army. Yet, according to the theory of those who have the effrontery to demand that income taxes be abolished entirely, or at least be drastically reduced, the cost of maintaining such services should, in a larger measure, be borne by those who make the least use of them by those who make the least use of them.

It is to be expected that every politician out of office is for economy and lower taxes. They are even for efficiency—when out of office. I do not believe that anyone has ever run for any office anywhere at any time who has not been for lower taxes. Yet our taxes continue to mount to meet the increasing cost of Government. taxes continue to mount to meet the increasing cost of Government year after year, and, except for certain emergency expenditures which even the office-hungry critics would not dare to cut off, and which this administration is as anxious as anyone could possibly be to do away with, the regular expenses of Government, in the aggregate, will not decrease very much so long as the people demand from Government the services that they are insisting upon in increasing measure as year follows year.

There are other issues interesting to you and to me as citizens that I should like to discuss if time permitted. I should like particularly to cast a little light upon the sayings and doings of certain gentlemen who are going about the land arousing fears. intain gentlemen who are going about the land arousing fears, instilling prejudices, making statements that cannot be supported by the facts and sounding taps to faith, hope, and charity. I have been especially intrigued lately by the interesting behavior of the man who is laboring with all his might to reestablish in the minds of the American people that state of apprehension in which he left them when President Roosevelt succeeded him in the White House. Three years ago Mr. Hoosevelt succeeded him in the white House. Three years ago Mr. Hoover's refrain was that "prosperity is just around the corner." Now he is just as certain that "collapse is just around the corner." It is permissible to doubt the essential statesmanship of any man who, considering what the country has passed through, would deliberately seek to build up a state of corroding and possibly catastrophic fear to serve a political

Not only Mr. Hoover, but others of lesser rank ought to measure Not only Mr. Hoover, but others of lesser rank dight to measure their words more carefully before they insist that this administration has retarded economic recovery; that if President Roosevelt had adopted the policy of his predecessor of taking to the cyclone cellar to sit trembling in fear and darkness while the economic winds howled overhead, we would have achieved a larger measure of recovery than we have. There is no warrant for such balderdash. We know what the state of the country was when President Roosevelt took it over and we know what it is now. Here are actual facts that cannot lightly be ignored. We know that under President Hoover the country took a header into the lowest economic depths; we know that under President Roosevelt a large degree of recovery has already been achieved, while hope is growing everywhere that we are definitely on our way back to pros-

Without any desire to tax your patience with figures I will point to the enviable position occupied by Pennsylvania in relation to the program of the Public Works Administration.

I do not know offhand the benefits in dollars and reemployment that this State has had from other agencies of the Federal Government, but I do know that from the Public Works Administration Pennsylvania has received for Federal projects and in loans and grants for useful local improvements a sum in excess of $200,000,000.

This total includes allocations for Federal projects; loans to railroads for steel rails and equipment and what we Failroads for steel rails and equipment and what we term non-federal allotments which are loans and grants to cities, towns, and other local public bodies for desirable public-works projects of their own selection. The local communities of this State are carrying to completion a non-Federal P. W. A. building program of close to $100,000,000. To encourage this useful construction P. W. A. made grants that amount to $30,405,064. The applicants themselves raised $36,895,194 in addition to $28,804,150 borrowed from P. W. A.

from P. W. A.

An interesting public works undertaking was the Pennsylvania Railroad project. Here was a straight loan of approximately $70,000,000 at 4 percent (be it noted in passing that the major portion of the securities taken by the Government for this loan was subsequently sold by us at a profit of more than $2,000,000). This project consisted of finishing the electrification of the line from New York to Washington and of certain other portions of the road; of building new electric locomotives and freight cars; and of changing old locomotives from passenger to freight. The project was completed in about 22 months. The direct employment numbered 15,000 men. The indirect employment probably ment numbered 15,000 men. The indirect employment probably ran to at least 30,000 men. The total employment, both direct and indirect, was scattered among 45 States.

and indirect, was scattered among 45 States.

Steel had to be fabricated, stone had to be quarried, concrete had to be manufactured, cars had to be built, trees had to be made into lumber, copper had to be meited into transmission lines, electric locomotives had to be built, and all of these materials and the final products into which they were transformed had to be moved from points of origin to final destinations.

Of the approximate $200,000,000 loaned by P. W. A. to the railroads of the country for steel rails, new rolling stock, and other equipment, nearly $82,000,000 have actually been expended within the boundaries of this State.

This is an instance of the vast indirect benefits that have

This is an instance of the vast indirect benefits that have accrued to Pennsylvania as a result of expenditures for public works. Such benefits percolate into many communities in widely separated States. That Pennsylvania leads all other States in this respect I have no doubt. Our own studies indicate this. A survey by the Construction League of the United States confirms it. Writing in the Engineering News Record, Mr. Lawrence Mehren, listed Pennsylvania as first with respect to indirect advantages in the construction industry, followed in order by Ohio, New York, and Illinois.

Figures given to me by P. W. A. statisticians show that approximately 37 percent of all the iron and steel in the United States is fabricated in Pennsylvania and that over 20 percent of all the cement and allied products are manufactured here. By virtue of its resources and its mines, mills, and factories your State stands first, with an index figure of 678, with 100 as the figure for an average State. These studies and calculations are based upon United States Census Bureau findings and on statistics covering 33 basic materials that go into general construction which, in a general way, would parallel the types of works financed by P. W. A. Statistics are dull at best, but this group will be interested in certain Federal Reserve Board figures for the Pittsburgh section. In tracing recovery in this area, let us translate into percentages the increase in business. For the purpose of making comparisons of unquestioned fairness, let us select the months of December in 1932 and 1935—not the best of months, but the most representative of the last days of the Hoover administration and of the present administration.

According to the record, the Pittsburgh district has fared well. Industrial production in the United States has increased 56 percent, according to the statistics of the Federal Reserve, while industrial production in the Pittsburgh area has improved 97 percent. This comparison is based upon figures gathered by the Pittsburgh Busicomparison is based upon figures gathered by the Pittsburgh Business Review of February 27, a source which is accepted by the Federal Reserve as being authoritative.

Based upon the rate of steel operations, business in this district had improved 202 percent in December of 1935 over the same month in 1932. Your polished-plate-glass production is better by 299 percent; while your pig-iron production increased 330 percent. Electric-power production for the Nation increased 36 percent; in Pittsburgh power sales increased 67 percent.

Factory pay rolls in the Nation increased 35 percent, but in the Pittsburgh district they increased 74 percent. Residential construction, based upon contracts awarded, went up 192 percent, while in 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains the increase was 246 percent. Your freight-car loadings are better off by 51 percent, your retail sales by 34 percent, your wholesale sales by 70 percent, your total bank clearings by 50 percent.

And Mr. Hoover's contribution to this indisputable and remarkable advance toward economic recovery is to insist that if he were still President, carrying out the policies that he inaugurated, business would be better still. On the face of the record this is a foolish claim that is not capable of substantiation. It is like the man who missed the boat telling the crew how much better he would have navigated than had the capitain who brought the ship safely through the hurricane.

All the cries of "wolf" to the contrary notwithstanding, as compared with the end of the Hoover era, tremendous and substantial business gains have already been made. And they have been made under the administration of President Roosevelt. "They say" that if Mr. Hoover had continued as our President since March 4. made under the administration of President Roosevelt. "They say" that if Mr. Hoover had continued as our President since March 4, 1933, we would have had a larger share of recovery. "They say" that if Mr. Hoover, or an alias Mr. Hoover, should be elected President next November, recovery would come more surely and with greater speed. "They say" all sorts of things that are neither justified by the facts nor capable of proof in the future even in the best of circumstances. Well, let them say. Attempted allibs for past failures and irresponsible claims for the future will not stand up in the face of concrete facts. And such facts there are in plenty for the careful pondering of intelligent citizens.

TOBACCO COMPACTS-LETTER OF JOHN W. HESTER

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by John W. Hester, dated Washington, D. C., February 27, 1936, pertaining to State compacts for the control of tobacco.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STILL BELIEVES IN STATE COMPACT IDEA

To the EDITOR:

As one who had pinned much faith to this method of production control and had given the subject much thought, I offered three ways to overcome the handicap inherent in the State compact system, which are as follows:

(1) That the Congress, as in the case of the oil compacting States, enact supplementary legislation forbidding the shipment in interstate commerce of tobacco in excess of the quota allowed the producing State.

That the compacting States be protected against the shipment therein of tobacco grown in free, or noncompact, territory, as was done in the case of dry territory under the Webb-Kenyon

(3) That the Congress change its bounty basis from that of the States to that of the commodity basis and make the bounty for tobacco available only to those growers who are within the compact-covered production area.

As to the first suggestion, I was forced by the North Carolina Governor to admit that I did not think Congress could extend much protection to the compact-covered area, for that Congress could not allot any quota nor could it exclude from the channels of interstate commerce tobacco produced in free, or noncompact-covered, areas. The oil limitation statute has not been challenged yet.

But I do have considerable faith in the second suggestion, and lenged yet.

But I do have considerable faith in the second suggestion, and so asserted at the conference. Later Governor Peery expressed considerable interest in this plan and intimated that I should follow it through in my thoughts and investigation.

Now, bright flue-cured tobacco is grown in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, with a little in Alabama; but the bulk of this type of tobacco is manufactured in North Carolina and Virginia. If Congress can do for North Carolina and Virginia as production-controlled areas what it did under the Webb-Kenyon statute for "dry" territory, there is a way of affording substantial protection to the grower in the compact-covered area. Of course, in our thinking of the way to obtain the desired protection we must remember that tobacco is not thought of as being quite in the class with intoxicating liquors, though it is a luxury and usually kicked and cuffed around by the taxing and police powers of the States about as are intoxicating liquors.

This question, however, may soon be cleared up by the United States Supreme Court. It now has under advisement, the case having been argued, the question of the validity of a Federal statute protecting States which have banned prison-made goods from their territory. In this instance, there is nothing inherently obnoxious about the quality of the commodity barred. The question is, What protection may be accorded the trade and commerce policies of the respective States? The child-labor case is not quite in point, though it has considerable persuasive force. In that case the commerce, not merely from certain States.

But the question is of tremendous import. The Court has

In that case the commodities made with child labor were barred from interstate commerce, not merely from certain States.

But the question is of tremendous import. The Court has thrown this agricultural-production-control problem squarely into the laps of the States, where, I think, under the Federal Constitution it belongs. Can the States control production as distinguished from the mere conditions of production? Without help from the General Government, as indicated, they cannot do it. and I would not like to be advised by the final authority that production control cannot be had. Surely, I would acquiesce therein, but I would be awfully sick.

Even though the second suggestion should be found defective from a constitutional point of view, I would not give up the problem as incapable of solution. In the third suggestion there is a way that would work itself out automatically. Put the bounty on the commodity basis and limit the availability of the bounty to the States within the compact, and they would get in all right. There is no constitutional objection to the bounty system. Hamilton advocated that system for industry instead of the protective system. But the protective system is not subject to such visibility as the bounty system and therefore less objectionable, though equally vicious in principle, I prefer the second suggestion to the third, because I am fundamentally opposed to taxing all the people for the benefit of the few or pressure-producing minorities. minorities.

all the people for the benefit of the few or pressure-producing minorities.

This further suggestion and I am through: Many farmers are clamoring for the limitation of production not only to the present production area, but to the producers therein. I am a farmer's son and have all my property in tobacco-producing land, but I am frank to say that the thoughtless selfishness of the farmer himself is likely to negative the efforts of his real friends. Leadership of the dependable kind does not consist in facing the followers and getting their wishes as to the course to be taken, but in looking ahead at the terrain to be traversed, at its ups and downs, its limitations and handicaps. When I was a boy it was said that the South had a natural monopoly on the production of cotton. Now half of the cotton produced is grown outside of the South. The United States Supreme Court sustained the New York milk-control statute. It later sustained a price differential, but when it came to limiting that protective feature to those producing milk on January 1, 1933, the Court balked, and properly so, on the ground that such was arbitrary and unreasonable. Let the tobacco grower take a hint and not try to freeze the production to any area or to any group of producers. Make the control plan flexible enough to take care of normal growth and expansion. Reasonable as opposed to complete protection is all that is possible. Anything else will discredit the whole control program. program

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1936.

STATE TOBACCO CONTROL COMPACTS

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yesterday afternoon, according to my information, by vote of 190 to 116, the House passed House bill 12037, relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced, providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes. I understand that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has favorably reported a similar bill, a sister bill, being Senate bill 4430.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am informed as to the bill to which the Senator is referring, and I anticipate that the Senator desires to ask for its immediate consideration. There is not time now to consider the bill. I wish to add to this statement that I am constantly being pressed by Senators to assist in arranging for the consideration of legislative business. I am doing the best that can be done, and will continue to do so, but I hope Senators will possess themselves in peace, in view of the fact that the Senate is proceeding under an order which requires practically all the time during our sessions for the consideration of the impeachment case.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, under the order prescribing the hours of the daily sessions, the Senate now resolves itself into a court for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. RANDOLPH PERKINS, of New Jersey. and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, accompanied by the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Elmore Whitehurst, and by Thomas M. Mulherin, special agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department sitting as a Court of Impeachment, for Wednesday, April 8, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Coolidge Copeland Couzens Keyes King La Follette Pittman Adams Ashurst Pope Radcliffe Austin Bachman Bailey Davis Donahey Lewis Logan Reynolds Robinson Barbour Duffy Lonergan Russell McGill Schwellenbach Fletcher McKellar Benson Frazier Sheppard Shipstead McNary George Shipst Black Maloney Bone Gibson Glass Metcalf Brown Steiwer Thomas, Okla. Thomas, Utah Minton Bulkley Bulow Guffey Moore Hale Harrison Townsend Truman Murphy Murray Byrnes Capper Caraway Hastings Neely Vandenberg Van Nuys Hayden Wagner Carey Nye O'Mahoney Walsh Clark Holt Overton White Connally Johnson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Do the managers on the part of the House desire to offer another witness?

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION OF JUDGE ALEXANDER AKERMAN

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If the President please, I should like to recall Judge Akerman for one or two other questions on cross-examination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness is available and has heretofore been sworn.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Judge Akerman, you testified in this case, did you not, in November 1933 at Miami?—A. Before the investigating committee
- Q. I will ask you whether or not at that time you offered to make a voluntary statement?—A. I did.
 - Q. Was it as follows-I am reading from the record?-

I did not know Judge Ritter at the time he was appointed judge, but I met him, my recollection is, on the 21st of February 1929. From that time up to the present time I have been rather closely associated with him. I have presided for him, and he has presided for me. We have occupied the same chambers, and I have heard Judge Ritter's reputation discussed by numerous people, and I think I am thoroughly familiar with his reputation for honesty and integrity, and I believe it to be the highest. I just wanted to make that statement, gentlemen.

Did you make that statement at that time?-A. I did.

Q. Is that still your opinion?—A. It is. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. The managers on the part of the House have no further questions to ask.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The managers on the part of the House may call their next witness.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF FRED H. DAVIS

Fred H. Davis, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Your name, please?-A. Fred H. Davis.

Q. Judge Davis, what position do you occupy in the State of Florida at the present time?—A. Justice of the supreme court.

Q. Are you or not chief justice of the Supreme Court of Florida?—A. I have just finished a term as chief justice.

Q. You are now justice, and you have just finished a term as chief justice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Judge Davis, are you familiar with the practice in the State of Florida in allowance of fees in mortgage foreclosure cases?—A. I am, sir; according to the State law.

Q. Judge Davis, I will ask you whether or not in foreclosure practice there is or is not any such thing as a conservation fee?—A. I have never heard of it.

Q. Judge Davis, in the event that the evidence showed that the attorney or attorneys filing a bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage knew that another attorney or citizen was soliciting a client or clients to enable them to have the requisite amount of bonds necessary to file their bill or the bill which they contemplated filing for the foreclosure of a mortgage, would, or not, in your opinion, any fee be properly allowable under the laws of Florida to an attorney filing a bill under those circumstances?—A. I will answer that in this way: That is a point that has never been directly adjudicated by any past decision of the Florida courts, but that is generally considered to be the law by the members of the profession, though, of course, it is an unsettled proposition so far as any adjudicated case is concerned.

Q. In other words, for the inception of any case of champertous character no fee would be allowable to any attorney who, with knowledge of the solicitation of a client, afterwards filed a bill?-A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you if in the foreclosure case of the Whitehall Hotel properties—this particular case—where the amount of the first mortgage bond issue was $2,500,000that was the issue on which the foreclosure was soughtwhere the services performed consisted of the routine handling of that case, where a fee of $15,000 was allowed and paid, where the total services rendered and the total time of the litigation was from the inception of the original bill on October 11, 1929, to the final decree on December 24, 1930, and where the upset price was fixed at $1,500,000, to be paid either by the surrender of the bonds, or in cash, what, in your opinion, would have been a reasonable, full and fair fee to be allowed the attorneys representing the petitioning creditors seeking foreclosure?-A. Of course, that involves a matter of judgment, and there would probably be a difference in the allowance in the Federal court and the State court. The maximum amount that I feel sure the State court sustains in a foreclosure of that kind would be not exceeding $50,000.

Q. That would be the outside limit, in your judgment?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you, or not, say in any court, Federal or State, that $75,000 would be a reasonable fee?—A. Well, it would seem to me to be unreasonable. I could only give my judgment about it. There have been fees allowed within the range of fifty or sixty thousand dollars in corresponding foreclosures.

Q. Would you or not say, in your opinion, in the Federal court of the southern district of Florida in this foreclosure case that the total allowance of $75,000 would be excessive?—

A. It would seem to me that it would be out of line.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Counsel may take the witness.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If there be no objection, I should like to have my colleague examine the witness on the Florida law, but first I should like to ask a few questions.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is perfectly agreeable to us if it is to the Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Austin in the chair). Counsel may proceed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge, a champertous proceeding, as I understand, is one where a stranger to the litigation goes into the litigation with an understanding to support it financially for an allowance or division of fruits of the litigation, whether in land, property, or money. Is not that true?—A. Generally so; yes.

Q. Is not that the textbook definition and the definition in all the decisions?—A. I should say so.

Q. If a champertous proceeding were brought, you stated that no fee should be allowed. Is that correct?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I agree with that. If a champertous proceeding were brought, you would go further, would you not, and say it ought not to be permitted to be maintained at all?—A. Absolutely, if it was known to the court.

Q. If an officer of the court—and by that I mean an officer in the ordinary sense or an attorney who is an officer of the court—had such knowledge, would it not be his duty to bring it up on an appropriate motion to the court and have the person removed and disciplined?—A. I should think it would.

sure of a mortgage knew that another attorney or citizen Q. You think that a reasonable fee, as explained to you, was soliciting a client or clients to enable them to have the in this case would be $50,000. Is that correct?—A. I would say, from the standpoint of our allowances in the State court |

O The State court allows fees in large cases approximately amounting to 5 percent, does it not, frequently?—A. I am speaking now from the standpoint of what would be sustained in the Supreme Court if somebody paid and they brought it up there.

Q. But they do make the allowance, and it is a matter, is it not, largely of judgment or entirely of judgment with the court in the first instance?-A. Absolutely, and sometimes influenced by agreements and stipulations, and so forth.

Q. Suppose we had a case where the laywers were men of repute, well known at the bar, and that all the lawyers agreed on the fee that should be paid; that it was proposed to be put in the order to be made by the judge, and the judge made inquiry to find out if every person, including the bondholders represented by attorneys of their own, were satisfied with that; would that not have an influence upon you as judge?-A. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May it please you, Mr. President, and gentlemen, Mr. Hoffman wishes to ask a question or two on the Florida law with which I am not as familiar as he is.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

Q. Judge Davis, do you know the law firm or members of the law firm of Loftin, Stokes & Calkins and of Shutts & Bowen?-A. I do.

Q. Do you know Attorney E. P. Donnell; Bert Winters; H. W. Johnson, of West Palm Beach; and H. C. Fisher, of West Palm Beach?—A. I do know them all.

Q. If a final decree of foreclosure were presented to the court, foreclosing a mortgage of principal of $2,500,000, with accumulated interest running the mortgage debt to approximately $3,000,000, providing for an upset price of $1,500,000 in the decree, and with this decree were presented the affidavits of such gentlemen as I have mentioned, and if the firms involved in the litigation, of the type and repute of the firms I have mentioned, stated that the decree was the result of an amicable adjustment and settlement of all matters in dispute, that the calculation had been agreed upon as accurate, that the decree and settlement were satisfactory to every party to the cause, that the bondholders' committee, who were not parties to the cause, had seen the decree and had been consulted and had agreed to and were satisfied with the decree, thus ending the litigation, and affidavits of men of the type I have spoken of were presented in support of the reasonableness of the fee of $75,000 to be allowed, would not all those circumstances have been considered by the judge in awarding the fee requested under those circumstances?-A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Would not the judge have been inclined to allow the fee agreed upon under those circumstances, even though he may not have allowed that particular amount had there been a contest or disagreement among the parties and not an amicable settlement?-A. That would depend on the individual judge.

Q. What would be your view of that?—A. Under our rule in the State court, it has been very definitely held that the question of attorney's fees is a matter of indemnity involving the actual output on the part of the complainant in a foreclosure case, and it is a responsibility of the judge to ascertain and investigate the reasonableness of that fee irrespective of what may have been agreed on by the parties. That was the effect of the holding in the First National Bank case, the case of Brett against First National Bank and

Q. If there was a cross bill in the case on behalf of the trustee under the bond issue providing for payment of counsel fees of the trustee for defense of the suit, or in a suit to foreclose that particular trust deed by the trustee. that counsel would also be entitled to compensation, would he not?-A. I did not follow the question all the way through.

Q. If, in the case in question, there was a cross bill on behalf of one of the defendants, the trustee, his counsel might be entitled to compensation dependent on the circumstances.

Q. Coming to the conservation fee--A. The idea under our rule is that the person who is collecting the money is to be able to collect his money through decree of the court without suffering any loss of his principal and interest, which means the attorney's fee is fixed as an indemnity proposition.

Q. Coming to the conservation fee, you recognize of course the principal of the allowance of a fee as a conservation fee to the attorney for the plaintiff who brings into court and subjects to the trust, in cases of trust, the subject matter of the trust as being entitled to a fee for conservation and preservation?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That principle is recognized and decided by the court of which you are a member in the case of Amos against Taylor and Railey, was it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that case the conservation fee was paid out of the assets brought into the court by the attorneys, even though your court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to appoint the receiver in that case. Is not that true?—A. Not altogether.

Q. Because they held it during the pendency of the appeal?-A. The situation in that case was that there were conflicting interests between the two parties, that both would be benefited by the banking department of the State, and the court held the complainant in that particular case, who invoked the jurisdiction of the court of equity, should have the right to administer its estate determined, and they performed services for the general trust estate, and we approved an allowance of $10,000 attorney's fee for bringing in the assets of half a million dollars, as I recall.

Q. The point is in that case and in another case growing out of the same suit that you recognized the principle of a conservation fee in a proper case?-A. In general trust matters, but not in foreclosure cases.

Q. But I do not understand you to say that where a bondholder brings a suit charging fraud, maladministration, and dereliction of duty on the part of a trustee under a bond issue, and waste a dissipation of the assets of the trust, and, urging those grounds, brings the subject matter of the trust into court and asks to foreclose the bond issue, it would not be proper to allow a conservation fee. As I understand, your testimony is that you never heard of that occurring?—A. I have never heard of a conservation fee, as such, allowed in a foreclosure case.

Q. You are speaking of a straight foreclosure case?—A. As a matter of foreclosure. Whatever conservation fee would be allowed in a foreclosure case would be a part of the general fee that went to the attorney who was doing the foreclosing; and, of course, he might split it up into its constituent elements, and call a part of that total for a conservation fee. I have never heard it done, but it might be done.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge, where the foreclosure final decree acquits the trustee under the bond issue of all fraud or chicanery, and specifically holds that that allegation in the original bill is not true, what, in your opinion, would be the right of the judge under the Florida law to allow any conservation fee in such a case?—A. Under this principle in the case which has just been referred to, this bank case, if there had been services rendered that were of value in fixing the status and legal rights with reference to that trust estate, it would be a matter of discretion with the court to allow a fee, even though there might be no fraud or breach of trust proven. It would all depend on whether or not the resulting litigation had fixed the status of the trust in such a way as to benefit the estate itself.

Q. But your testimony is that in a foreclosure suit you never heard of a conservation fee being allowed?-A. No, sir; as such.

Q. Where there was no agreement between the attorney or attorneys filing the bill and the client as to any fee whatwould be entitled to compensation, would he not?—A. He soever, is it or not competent and permissible, under Florida law, to allow a fee?-A. Under Florida law, if the mortgage provides for the payment of a reasonable attorney's fee or a fixed attorney's fee by foreclosure, before any attorney's fee can be allowed or recovered in the case, it must be both alleged and proved that the complaining party has incurred an obligation to his attorney for some fee. He may incur an obligation to pay whatever is a reasonable fee, in which case that would be an unliquidated amount until it was so ascertained by the court. But speculation in the matter of recovering the attorney's fee, without any understanding that if the case fails there will be no attorney's fee paid, is not considered the basis under Florida law for recovery of an attorney's fee in a foreclosure suit, because it is considered an indemnity for the mortgagee to recoup a loss that he is out of pocket in employing attorneys to get his money; and if he suffers no loss, either through incurring obligation or otherwise, then he is not entitled to an attorney's fee just as a sort of commission.

Q. Judge, is it or not a sufficient predicate for the allowance of a fee to an attorney in a foreclosure case that the law creates a mere presumption that a reasonable fee will be allowed; or, to the contrary, is the law of Florida such that there must be an agreement of some kind between attorney and client?—A. There must be an agreement, but it may be express or implied. The court has recently held that where a mortgagee takes a mortgage to a lawyer's office and says, "I want you to foreclose this for me", he knows that that lawyer is not doing business for his health, and that the law will raise the presumption that he intended to pay him for it, and therefore that it will be recoverable on that sort of an understanding as an implied contract to pay for services.

Q. You mean when the client voluntarily takes the mort-gage?—A. Yes.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute; I object to that as leading and suggestive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question has been answered. The Chair thinks the answer may stand.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. One other question, Judge. Where the trial judge, before fixing the fee of counsel in a foreclosure case, knew that there had been an agreement entered into between counsel in the case for a division of that fee, whereby some $40,000 of the fee allowed was to be distributed to other counsel in the case not representing the complainants but representing other parties, would or not that of itself evidence to your mind that the allowance was not for the services of counsel for the complainants, and therefore was, by the amount to be distributed and split, unreasonable?-A. Well, that would all depend on the circumstances under which such an arrangement as that was proposed. As I said awhile ago, the question of stipulations and agreements as to fees would enter into a proposition of that kind, and the judge does not concern himself with how the fee is going to be divided in a case of the character you have just mentioned, if nobody is there objecting to it, so far as the mere splitting of fees is concerned.

Q. But if the judge knew that there was to be a split of some $40,000 in the fee, and that that amount of a $90,000 allowance was to be distributed to other counsel, in your opinion would he be authorized to award a $90,000 total fee for the services of the attorney for the complainant?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that for the reason, first, that it is leading; second, it is argumentative; third, insofar as it has the quality of a hypothetical question, it is not based on the hypothesis of any testimony which has been introduced here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the law of Florida has been put in issue by both parties; and, as the present occupant of the chair understands the question, it is an appropriate question to understand what the law of Florida is upon the point involved. Therefore, the ruling is that the objection is overruled, and the question is admissible.

A. Do you mean, by the question, whether or not the judge would be authorized to enlarge the fee because there was going to be a split of the fee, so that each one would get a liberal allowance?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I will ask the reporter to read the question.

The Official Reporter read the question, as follows:

But if the judge knew that there was to be a split of some $40,000 in the fee, and that that amount of a $90,000 allowance was to be distributed to other counsel, in your opinion would he be authorized to award a $90,000 total fee for the services of the attorney for the complainant?

A. I do not think he would be authorized to allow $90,000 at all. That is my individual opinion.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I have no further questions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I desire to propound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the interrogatory propounded by the Senator from Utah.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Does the Florida law provide any sum or amount or percent to be paid upon foreclosure proceedings?

A. It is not fixed by statute. It is entirely a matter of contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Call your next witness, please.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Mr. Martin Sweeny.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF MARTIN SWEENY

Martin Sweeny, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. State your name, please, sir.—A. Martin Sweeny.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, were you connected with the Whitehall Hotel operation?—A. I was.

Q. What connection did you have with it?-A. Manager.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, please explain to the Members of this honorable Court how the bookings for that hotel are made, where, and by whom.—A. The bookings are made from the hotel in New York, at my office.

Q. Is that hotel, in its operation, dependent upon casual comers to the hotel?—A. No. There is a good deal of booking that we do, and publicity work involved, to get our clientele.

Q. Is it or not a fact that the clientele of that hotel has been worked up through the years and is definitely known and nursed?—A. That is true.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, you and Mr. Bemis and your brother bought that hotel originally, did you not?—A. We did.

Q. It was the Henry M. Flagler private home; and you bought it, with the land on which it was situated, and paid how much for it?—A. $437,000.

Q. Then, afterward, you were induced to build an addition to it in the form of a modern hotel at the rear, leaving the residence standing intact at the front?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, do you know Mr. Walter S. Richardson?— A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the two seasons during which he was receiver of this Whitehall Hotel property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What two seasons were they?—A. 1928 and 1929, I believe.

Q. I am not speaking of the seasons in which he operated it as trustee in bankruptcy.—A. When he operated it as receiver?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. 1929 and 1930.

Q. What are the seasons of that hotel?—A. We open about the 1st of January and close April 1.

Q. In other words, you have a total gross season of 3 months, beginning January 1?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the purpose of refreshing your recollection, Mr. Sweeny, I believe the bill for the appointment of a receiver in this case was filed October 11, 1929?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore, it would be the season of 1930 and 1931?—A. 1930 and 1931.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, please state to the members of this honorable Court what services Mr. Walter S. Richardson performed with reference to bookings or securing the people coming to that hotel as guests?—A. He did not perform any services.

Q. Who did that work?-A. I did.

- Q. Mr. Sweeny, please detail to the members of this honorable Court what services Mr. Richardson performed while he was receiver of this property.-A. Well, he had charge of the property under a court order.
 - Q. Who ran it?-A. Who ran the hotel?

Q. Yes.—A. I ran the hotel.

- Q. What did Mr. Richardson do? Just describe his daily activities .- A. Well, he would come to the hotel every morning, see if there was any mail for him, see what cash was in the bank, what deposits had been made, stay there for an hour or two.
- Q. What would he do after that?-A. That I could not tell you.
- Q. I mean, would he leave the hotel?—A. Yes; sometimes he came back in the afternoon about 4 or 5 o'clock for
- Q. Did he have anything to do with the handling of the cash?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did he have anything to do with the keeping of the rooms?-A. No. sir.
- Q. Did he have anything to do with the registrations or the running of the clerk's desk?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did he have anything to do with the keeping of the books?-A. No. sir.
- Q. Did he have anything to do with giving directions to
- you as to how to operate the hotel?—A. No, sir.
- Q. So his total services, then, according to your testimony, consisted of coming there once or twice a day for a short period of time and getting whatever mail might have come in for him and seeing what money had been deposited in the bank?-A. That is true.
- Q. And that is all the services he performed?—A. During the operating period.
- Q. What services did he perform after the operating period each year?-A. That I could not say. I left there each year after the close of operations.
- Q. The hotel was closed, was it not?—A. Yes; the hotel had to carry on.
- Q. I recognize that, and it carried on through whose management?-A. H. E. Bemis.
- Q. If I understand your testimony, you handled the New York and booking end during the closed season of 9 months, and Mr. Bemis supervised the keeping of the rooms aired and moth-prevention work down there?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Richardson did anything whatsoever during that 9 months?-A. I do not.
- Q. What is your best judgment as to whether there was anything for him to do?—A. I think, very little.
- Q. Mr. Sweeny, what was the scale of prices in vogue for the Whitehall Hotel to be paid for the naked rooms? I mean by that, without valet service, without meals, without anything but the occupancy of the rooms. What was your scale of prices for the rooms during the seasons 1930 and 1931?-A. Twenty-five and thirty dollars a day.
- Q. Were there any rooms there cheaper than that?-A. We had one room to a floor, a single room, that we rented for $10 or $12 a day.
- Q. But the suites were all $25 to $30 a day per room?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether Judge Halsted L. Ritter occupied any of those rooms during those two seasons?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did he occupy the $10 or $12 room, or what?-A. No; he occupied a suite.
 - Q. A suite of how many rooms?—A. I believe two rooms.
- Q. Two rooms; a sitting room?-A. A sitting room and bedroom.
- Q. And the price of those rooms which he occupied was $25 or $30 a day per room?—A. The two rooms were $50 a day.
- Q. Mr. Sweeny, do you know whether or not the room accommodation was paid for by Judge Ritter?-A. I believe not.
- Q. Do you remember how often he occupied rooms in that hotel?-A. To the best of my knowledge, I believe he was there twice.
 - Q. And for how long each time?-A. Overnight.

- Q. Mr. Sweeny, was he charged anything for the room accommodation or for the valet services and meals?-A. I do not believe so.
- Q. For the purpose of refreshing your recollection, I should like to show you this [handing witness paper]. Upon the occasion shown in account sheet 7700, for how long did he stay there?-A. Two days.
 - Q. Two days?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Mr. Sweeny, during the period of your connection with Whitehall, either before you built any annex to it or afterward, I will ask you to tell the Court, in a concise way, how your business ran and when it fell off .-- A. During each year?
- Q. Yes .- A. We would open up about the 1st of January each year, and we would become 100 percent filled by the 1st of February. By that 100 percent I mean around 90 to 95 percent we considered a hundred percent; and would continue that way until about the end of March.
- Q. I beg your pardon; I was not particularly asking that. What I am trying to get at is what you call your room account. In other words, I will ask you if the season of 1929, which began on January 1, 1929, and ran to April 1, was not your peak, your banner year?-A. It was one of our best years.
- Q. That was the height of the prosperity before the crash of the fall of 1929?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. Who did the booking for that year?-A. I did.
- Q. Did Mr. Walter S. Richardson have anything to do with it?-A. No, sir.
- Q. During the 1929 season—that is, beginning January 1, 1929, and ending April 1, 1929—he was trustee in bankruptcy, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did he have anything to do with the management of the hotel during that period except such as you have described?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did he give you any orders or directions about the running of the hotel, or anything of that sort?-A. No, sir.
- Q. The same class of service to which you have testified obtained with respect to Mr. Richardson during that period also?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. During the 1930 season and 1931 you continued to have fairly good business, though diminishing?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And the bottom did not drop out, so to speak, until 1932?—A. That is right.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Mrs. Ritter, the wife of the judge, stopped there at any time when she was not with the judge?-A. I do not recollect; no, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Mrs. Merle R. Walker stopped there?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute. I object to that unless some evidence is produced as to the knowledge of the judge with respect to the matter.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the
- The Official Reporter read the question, as follows:
- Do you know whether or not Mrs. Merle R. Walker stopped there?
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is admitted; the objection is overruled. The assumption is that counsel is leading up to something else by that question.
- Mr. Manager HOBBS. We hope to connect it, may it please the Court. If we should not do so, we are perfectly willing to have it go out.
 - By Mr. Manager HOBBS:
 - Q. Do you know?-A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you know the relationship between Mrs. Walker and Judge Ritter?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Hooks stopped there?
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President-
 - A. No.
 - By Mr. Manager HOBBS:
- Q. I will ask you to look at these sheets and to see if they are the sheets regularly and properly kept in the operation of that hotel business? [Several papers were handed to the witness.]-A. Yes; they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Mr. Hobbs, the present occupant of the chair thinks that when a question of that character is asked the sheets should be identified in some

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, we would like at this time to have the reporter mark separately and severally our exhibits which we have already identified. offer them severally and separately in evidence and ask that they be marked "Exhibits A, B, C, D", and so on, including the ones we are now offering.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, might we not look at those before they are admitted? A great many matters were referred to and offered which were given no exhibit numbers and we would like to go over them and recall, if we can, whether they were so offered-I know the gentlemen here intend to do that—and determine whether or not they are competent and relevant to the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair considers that there is nothing to rule upon at the present time and feels sure that the learned counsel on both sides would follow the general practice in that regard.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I will withdraw that question, if it be considered a question, and simply introduce these documents and ask that they be marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the manager on the part of the House please have the documents last handed to the witness given some identification?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes sir; that is what I am now asking. I am offering those documents in evidence and asking that they be marked "Seriatim Exhibits", we will say, "F, G, H", and so on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Have counsel for the respondent any objection to that procedure?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I ask a question? Do I understand that you have offered these documents, among others?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I have offered the documents referred to, without the others.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to all of these documents except those relating to Judge Ritter and Mrs. Ritter, because no connection has been shown with Judge Ritter as to the other documents and as being irrelevant and immaterial. As to the other documents, I decidedly do object to them unless we can go over them first, because I cannot comprehend, and doubt whether the Court can, what they are. I think some sort of identification should be given to them as they are offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there anything further on the part of the managers?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No, sir.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the part of the offer calling for marking the papers for identification is granted and that they should be marked.

With respect to the papers that are assented to on the part of the respondent, they are admitted. With respect to those which are objected to, they are excluded until they are connected either with the respondent or with the issue. There is nothing before the Court at the present moment which indicates that they are relevant,

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Sweeny, I now show you a telegram, which I ask you to look at and identify, if you can [handing telegram to witness]. Mr. Sweeny, did you see this telegram from Walter Richardson?-A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know?-A. It may have been received by Mr. Bemis, Q. Did you see it? It is addressed to you or your attorney.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you it with you?—A. I have not. All the papers I have here were taken out of my files.

Q. Did you receive or see this telegram; and the "Walter" by whom it is signed is who?—A. Walter Richardson.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer this telegram in evidence, and ask that it be marked by the appropriate letter. It is dated October 16, 1929, and, eliminating the hieroglyphics, is directed to H. E. Bemis or Martin Sweeny.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to see that, if you please [examining telegram]. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is admitted. Will the managers please have the paper marked?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I ask that it be marked in proper order according to our letters.

(The telegram was marked "Managers' Exhibit C.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS (reading):

Holland's refusal to permit application for receiver necessitates filing separate bill for interveners, which will be done Thursday, and motion for appointment receiver will probably be heard Saturday morning; otherwise everything apparently well set to go.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Sweeny, this letter of August 30, 1929, signed "Walter" and directed to you, I will ask you to look at and say if you received that, and identify it.

(The witness examined the letter.)

A. Yes.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer this letter in evidence, may it please the Court, and ask that it be marked "Exhibit D." This is the letter which was identified yesterday. I also ask that the sheets from the records of the hotel company be marked "Managers' Exhibits A and B."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may be done.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. And that the telegram I have just read immediately follow that. The letter I have just referred was marked "Exhibit D." It was, according to my recollection, the first exhibit to be identified by the witness Fordham.

(Statement of account dated Feb. 20, 1931, Whitehall, Palm Beach, to Mr. H. L. Ritter and Mrs. Ritter, was marked "Managers' Exhibit A.")

(Statement of account dated Mar. 3, 1931, Whitehall, Palm Beach, to Mr. H. L. Ritter and Mrs. M. R. Walker was marked "Managers' Exhibit B.")

(The telegram was marked "Managers' Exhibit C.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS. This letter has already been read. having been read yesterday; so I shall not read it again.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Let me see that letter. I do not recall it. [After examining letter.] We have no objec-

(The letter was marked "Managers' Exhibit D.")

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. In connection with this letter which you have seen, I ask you if you had any connection in Boston "that could reach Mr. Bert E. Holland, an attorney, whose address is Tremont Building, Boston? Mr. Holland is a cotrustee and, as such, is the holder of $50,000 of the first-mortgage bonds." I ask you if you had any connection that could get in touch with him and reach him and get him to put up his bonds, or authorize the employment of attorney to foreclose. Did you do so?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). One minute! I object to that. The letter is the best evidence. I do not recall that that is what it says in the letter. I do not say that it does not, Mr. Manager, but the letter is in evidence.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg your pardon. It says "Mr. Holland's full cooperation with us would solve our problem", after he had stated what he wanted with him.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. That is the reason I object to it.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I withdraw the question.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Sweeny, in this letter, I will ask you if, in response to his suggestion stated in this letter-

I am spending much time in working out a plan whereby the bondholders can take it away from them just as quickly as they get through with the bankruptcy proceedings; but, for the Lord's sake, don't breathe this, as I am again attempting to match wits with old man Moore, and I believe I have about solved his line of procedure.

Just as soon as my final report is approved and out of the way, I expect to go to New York, and go into the matter in detail, and formulate a definite plan of procedure. I have already gone into this matter very thoroughly with Mr. Bemis, and immediately upon his return I expect to take action and shoot as fast as a mechine gun in order to have things in shape for another season's machine gun in order to have things in shape for another season's operation.

I wish you would get in touch with as many first-mortgage bond-holders as possible in order that we may take up with them our plan and have their cooperation. Now, don't argue the question with me, for I have gone into the matter thoroughly and have been watching and planning for some 6 months, and the plan of procedure is the correct one, and you leave this part of it to me, as I am more anxious than ever to thoroughly demonstrate to Mr. Moore that he is not so wise, after all, and that this "fathead" that has down here is a "pluperfect boob."

Wonder if you have any connection in Boston that could reach Mr. Bert E. Holland, an attorney, whose address is Tremont Building, Boston? Mr. Holland is a cotrustee and, as such, is the holder of $50,000 of the first-mortgage bonds. Mr. Holland's full cooperaof $50,000 of the first-mortgage bonds. Mr. Holland's full cooperation with us would solve our problem.

In response to that, did you follow the suggestion made in this letter by Mr. Walter S. Richardson, then trustee in bankruptcy of the Whitehall Hotel, and contact Mr. Bert E. Holland?-A. I did.

Q. Did you, or not, have a conference with Mr. Holland in New York?-A. I did.

Q. Did you, or not, gain his consent that his name and bonds be used in the filing of this suit?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. At your instance and in your office letters were written by him to Mr. A. L. Rankin and Mr. Metcalf, his partner, authorizing them to proceed in his name, were they not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. One other question, Mr. Sweeny. I notice no. 7700 and 7540 and 7975, and so on, in the upper lefthand corner of these sheets [handing sheets to witness]. The question I wish to ask is what those numbers mean?—A. Those are the account numbers.

Q. There are the account numbers of what files?-A. They correspond to the registration cards.

Q. In what files?—A. That number there is the same number as is on the card of registration when entering the hotel.

Q. The Whitehall Hotel?-A. Yes.

Q. I thank you, sir. Now, Mr. Sweeny, I want to ask you about this letter which I now show you a copy of. [Handing letter to witness.] Is this the copy from your files of the letter you wrote to Judge A. L. Rankin?-A. (After examining letter.) Yes, sir.

Q. You signed this letter and mailed it to him?-A. Yes,

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We introduce this letter in evidence and ask that it be marked for identification. It is dated November 22, 1930, and is directed to Judge A. L. Rankin, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I know the manager is not noticing it, but I should like to look at anything that is offered on the part of the managers, if you please. I did not hear the manager's statement, but my colleague advises me that that was only offered for identification. We have no objection to it going in, but I do not think the record ought to be confused in that way. Are you offering the

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You are offering it in evidence?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document will be admitted and appropriately marked.

(The document was marked "Managers' Exhibit E.") Mr. Manager HOBBS. The letter reads:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT E

WHITEHALL Palm Beach, Fla., November 22, 1930.

Judge A. L. Rankin,
West Palm Beach, Fla.
Dear Judge Rankin: Mr. Bemis loaned me last night the copy of the final decree of which you so kindly sent him. From a layman's standpoint it looks as though you have covered every point.

I note that in the sale of this property you ask for a minimum price of $1,500,000, either in bonds or cash, and, as I understand this, it will be necessary for the bondholders' committee to put up two and a half million dollars in bonds of the old issue. In case they only control 92 persons of the bond. case they only control 93 percent of the bonds, for the balance, or 7 percent of the entire issue, they would put up 60 cents on the dollar.

Furthermore, I believe it was our understanding that the bonds held by W. J. Moore, which he bought in after he knew the property was bankrupt, could not be used. This would be another $300,000 of bonds, or the equivalent of 60 cents on the dollar in cash, would have to be put up.

In other words, whoever bought the property would have to deposit in round figures about $300,000. I am just reciting these facts to see if they are correct, in case someone does bid upon the property. For I believe it is your intention eventually to put this in the hands of three trustees, for, truthfully speaking between friends, I do not believe the property in the long run would pay out at this figure. out at this figure.

Naturally I am anxious to get to Palm Beach, so that you, Mr. Bemis, and I can go over all these various points brought up in the final decree, so as to be able, when the property is finally offered for sale, to be in a position to make a legitimate bid with a company that will have the backing of several Palm Beach men a company that will have the backing of several Palm Beach men on our board, that would guarantee the bonds at a fair price. I believe this can only be accomplished by the property being put in the hands of three competent trustees who would look at it for a long pull and not from one season's extraordinary earnings. It is not only so of Florida property but of all real-estate property throughout the United States today, that on bonds of going concerns that are earning money, would not carry the price that you have asked in this final decree. As an illustration, the first-mortgage bonds on the Berkshire, corner of Flity-second Street mortgage bonds on the Berkshire, corner of Fifty-second Street and Madison Avenue, the total issue of which was only $1,350,000, are today offered to us at 60. The property has been built and in operation for 5 years and each and every year has made more than its interest and amortization. In other words, the ground rent on this property is $75,000 a year, the interest and amortization is $120,000, making a total of $190,000. In the last fiscal year we made over $290,000.

As another illustration, the first-mortgage bonds on the Florida East Coast entire properties are today selling at 35.

I am just giving you these figures and facts so that you can see the future of Whitehall in the final accounting, instead of the earnings of 2 years ago.

We have a moral obligation to the first bondholders who invested their money in this property. Naturally we would like to see them get some of their capital with a guaranteed return of it. I believe we can earn as much on the property for the first-mortgage bondholders, if not more, than any other group.

I believe I am speaking for Mr. Bemis, as well as myself, when I say that I would hate to see this property get into some hands that in the final outcome would in any way reflect upon Judge Ritter's court.

I saw Judge Harris the other day, and I wish you would send me the letters that you had from the Governor of Alabama, as it is just possible before I leave for Palm Beach I might see the Honorable James Francis Burke, of Pittsburgh, and, as you know, he has a big influence at Washington. It is just possible I might get a word in to your advantage.

With kindest regards believe me I am

With kindest regards, believe me, I am,

Sincerely yours.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Then you testified you signed this letter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sent it to Mr. Rankin?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The letter which I now have, dated October 3, 1929, was shown to counsel for the respondent yesterday.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to look at it if you are going to offer it. I cannot carry it in my mind. Mr. Manager HOBBS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the manager on the part of the House, as well as counsel for the respondent will show to the other side documents which they offer it will probably make for the conservation of time.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Counsel was shown that letter yesterday, may it please the Court.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If I saw it, I am sure I do not remember it. I have no objection to it, however. Is it offered in evidence as an exhibit?

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Sweeny, did you write this letter of October 3, 1929, to Mr. Bert E. Holland?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer this letter in evidence and ask that it be given an appropriate letter of identifica-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be admitted and given an appropriate number as an exhibit. (The letter was marked "Managers' Exhibit F.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The letter reads:

WHITEHALL Palm Beach, Fla., October 3, 1929.

Mr. BERT E. HOLLAND,

73 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. Holland: Confirming our conversation this morning, we are planning to apply to the Federal court for a receivership under the first-mortgage bonds and ask the court to appoint the following committee as a self-constituted bondholders' committee representing the 7,000 bondholders of the first mortgage on Whitehall, Palm Beach, Fla.

The court will in return appoint Mr. Bemis and me as managers payments will be met. Furthermore, the committee after securing this property will work out a plan for the future, and as president of this company since it has been incorporated I can assure you that your bonds will become of real value.

Very truly yours, of the property, and as we have always made more than the interest on the first mortgage you can rest assured that your interest

MS:BT.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. You signed that and mailed it?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager HOBBS (reading):

Whitehall, Palm Beach, October 3, 1929-

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Is that another letter?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No, sir; it is a part of the same letter. WHITEHALL Palm Beach, Fla., October 3, 1929.

Mr. G. B. Romph, First National Bank of Miami, Fla.

Mr. Charles H. Gilman, president, Bank of Bay Biscayne. Mr. Frank A. Shaughnessy, president, First National Bank, of Palm Beach.

Mr. Franklin P. Smith, Lake Forrest, Ill. Mr. E. F. Hutton, chairman of the Board of General Foods Co.,

Mr. Bert E. Holland, attorney, 73 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, that is all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to know whether this letter of October 3. 1929, was not written from New York although it has a Palm Beach, Fla., letterhead. I ask that question of the manager.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg pardon.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I say is it a fact that that letter was written from New York although it has a Palm Beach letterhead?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I do not know, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Maybe the witness will know.

The WITNESS. It was written from New York.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That answers it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have a few questions I should like to ask the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Sweeny, you have been in the hotel business down on the Florida coast for 31 years?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What hotels have you been connected with?-A. From 1906 to 1920 I was connected with the Royal Poinciana Breakers Hotel.

Q. Who owned that hotel?-A. The Florida East Coast Hotel Co. From 1920 to 1925 I was connected with the Everglades Club in Palm Beach, Fla. From 1926 until the present day I have been connected with Whitehall.

Q. You have been connected with Whitehall ever since it was a hotel?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was Mr. Bemis' connection with those hotels?-A. With the Royal Poinciana Hotel; Mr. Bemis was vice president and general manager.

Q. Was that a part of this same hotel chain?-A. Well, the Royal Poinciana is part of the Florida East Coast Hotel chain.

Q. You stated that you were one of the persons who turned the Flagler residence into a hotel or club. That was when?-A. We bought it in the spring of 1924.

Q. You were asked whether or not you were induced to build a hotel behind the original residence, and you answered "yes." When was that?-A. We opened the hotel in the winter of 1926.

Q. Who induced you to build the hotel?-A. Well, W. J. Moore.

Q. Did W. J. Moore and the Moore interests finance that hotel?-A. I did not understand the question.

Q. Did W. J. Moore and the Moore interests finance that hotel?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. There were three mortgages on the hotel, were there not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was built by a building company owned and controlled by the Moore interests, was it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the estimated cost of that hotel when you concluded to build the addition to it that made it of the present size?-A. Do you mean what was our valuation?

Q. What was the estimated cost of building the hotel?-A. Oh, the estimated cost was $3,000,000.

Q. And it was a company of their own. How much did it cost, as a matter of fact, to build it?-A. Well, when we got through we were about seven or eight hundred thousand dollars short.

Q. Was a mortgage given for it?-A. No, sir.

Q. That shortage was to unsecured creditors?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequently these mortgages were put upon the hotel-two more?-A. No; one more.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we desire to suggest the apparent irrelevancy of the testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection on that ground?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes; we object.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We think it is not irrelevant. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the objection.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. But the building operation wound up with three mortgages on the hotel, and a large amount due to unsecured creditors? Is that true or not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You put some money in that hotel yourself, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much did you lose in it before the foreclosure proceeding was brought?—A. I think my brother and myself lost about $140,000 in it altogether.

Q. You were the manager of that hotel, were you not, from the time it started until the present day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are still the manager of it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call your attention to one other matter, because I am going to try to get through with you very quickly. After the receivership of 1929, was that the year that you had a big hurricane there?-A. We had a hurricane in the fall of 1929.

Q. Was that the one that required the extensive repairs to be made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who put up the money for that?-A. Well, the court allowed $100,000 worth of receivers' certificates to be sold; but when we got ready to sell the certificates of the receiver the banks would not take them, so Mr. H. E. Bemis, Ed Sweeny, and myself guaranteed $50,000 worth of those certificates.

Q. Ed Sweeny is your brother, I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. These letters that have been read to you, four or five of them, are letters out of an extensive correspondence, are they not, that you had with Mr. Bemis, with Mr. Richardson, and with other persons interested in the preservation of that hotel property?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you turned over your entire files to the House managers, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago was that?-A. Well, part of my files were taken over a year ago.

Q. Yes; and when were the last turned over to them?-A. Yesterday.

Q. And the part that was turned over a year ago, you took their receipt for, did you not?-A. I did not, but my caretaker did.

Q. Your caretaker did; and you asked for the return of them?-A. No; I never asked for the return of them.

Q. Did you get them back?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have not seen them since?-A. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I see them please? I really did not know; I thought we had them all.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I am afraid we did not understand the question.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The witness says that his caretaker turned over a number of letters, correspondence, to the committee over a year ago, and that they have not been returned. If you have them handily, I should like to see them.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I do not believe we have them at the moment; and Mr. Mulherin, the young man who is most familiar with the records, is out of the Chamber just |

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good. I wish to get through with this just as quickly as I can, and you can give them to me later, or let me look over them, anyway.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. The files you retained, after they were returned by the House managers, you allowed us to go over, did you not?-A. Yes. sir.

Q. That is, the counsel for Judge Ritter?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have you the files here now? Mr. MULHERIN. Here is everything except those intro-duced in evidence. The originals are not here of all of them, but I have copies of them.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If you are sure that the originals are all here, we accept the copies.

Mr. MULHERIN. I say the originals are not all there.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I say if you are sure these are copies of the originals-

Mr. MULHERIN. I am certain of that.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We will accept them.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I would like to have the record show at this point that the managers on the part of the House have complied with the request of counsel for the respondent with reference to the records just referred to.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Before I get to the main body of the correspondence, there was a letter introduced here yesterday-and I think you have testified about it this morning-which was written from your office by Mr. Holland, addressed to Mr. Rankin. Why did you recommend Mr. Rankin to Mr. Holland?-A. Mr. Bemis recommended him to me.
 - Q. Mr. Bemis was your associate?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And he has been your associate during all these years, has he not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You began life down there, I believe, as a bookkeeper at one of those East Coast Railway hotels?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was 30 years ago. Just another question or two. You were asked about Judge Ritter stopping at your hotel on these two occasions. Is it customary in first-class hotels for the manager to have a list or to make complimentary space at the hotel for individuals?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Explain the practice briefly, very briefly.-A. Well, it is in the discretion of the manager. If he wants to entertain any guests, friends, people he wants to take care of overnight, he generally gives them the privileges of the hotel.

- Q. There were two occasions during the years the judge had to do with this hotel that the records showed he stopped there; he stopped there with his wife. Did you give authority for that?-A. I believe Mr. Bemis asked me to take care of Judge Ritter.
 - Q. Was it in the way that it is usually done?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under those circumstances?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And one occasion was a sort of gala occasion, being Washington's Birthday, I notice by the date.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have other complimentary guests there at that time?-A. That I could not say.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). For the sake of saving time, we have these letters which have gotten into our possession, which have been given to us, and I suggest to the House managers that we have copies of this entire correspondence, a continuous list of them chronologically copied. We are going to ask you, if you will agree, that instead of reading these letters to Mr. Sweeny we be permitted to offer them all in evidence and give you copies of them.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House object to that procedure. These letters are incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and will only encumber the record.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I desire to say that these letters predate and antedate this transaction. They show the effort that was being made, and they throw a strong light upon the proposition that this was not a champertous proceeding, but that it was a proceeding started by these men who had in- Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

vested their money, and upon whose names and credit these bonds were sold. It is in answer to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the ruling of the Chair that the letters shall be exhibited to the managers on the part of the House, and that the managers on the part of the House may make specific objections to each document to which they wish to lodge objection. There can be no ruling with respect to a large number of documents without specific objection.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Will you take that suggestion of the Presiding Officer and go through these documents?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we understand that these letters are to be offered, and objection made as they are offered; or are we to examine the file and find out what documents we object to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair was that the letters shall be exhibited to the managers on the part of the House, and that specific objection shall be lodged to documents to which the managers wish to lodge objections.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we will examine them during the recess and be prepared to follow that procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. Are there any other questions?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; I have some very vital questions.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. During the time that this correspondence was going on, did you know Judge Halsted L. Ritter?-A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first get acquainted with him, if you ever did?-A. I met him for the first time when he came to Whitehall.

Q. Did you ever at any time have a conversation with him bearing upon the Whitehall situation?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever at any time hear anyone else having a conversation with him bearing on the Whitehall situation?—

Q. So far as you know, none of the negotiations that you had with Mr. Richardson or with your associate, Mr. Bemis, or any other person, was ever in any way brought to the attention of Judge Halsted L. Ritter?-A. No. sir.

Q. You have no information that he ever had any knowledge of any kind of any of these letters or any of these negotiations?-A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Rankin?-A. I first met

Mr. Rankin in New York in 1929. Q. And you were introduced by whom?-A. By Mr. Richardson. Q. Did Mr. Bemis have anything to do with the actual management of the hotel?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. With the Whitehall Hotel?-A. Yes. We talked the matters over always.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Let me look at that "Attaboy" letter; will you, please? [After examining letter.] I want to hand this letter, marked "Managers' Exhibit AA", to Mr. Sweeny and ask him whether or not he has the letter in his file which he wrote to W. J. Moore, referred to in this exhibit, and the Moore letter to him, that being the letter dated March 10. If you do not remember it, Mr. Sweeny, you can examine the letter.

(The witness examined the letter.)

The WITNESS. What is it you want to know, Mr. Walsh? By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I want to know if you have in your files the letter that you wrote to Mr. Moore, referred to in that letter .- A. I think I have a copy of it; something like that.

Q. And Mr. Moore's letter to you?-A. Yes; I probably have a copy.

Q. Will you please bring that in?-A. Now?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. I will get through with the witness in 1 minute. That is all I have to ask him.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1:30 having arrived, in accordance with the order heretofore entered, the Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess until 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., at which time it reassembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are the managers on the part of the House ready to proceed?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Counsel for the respondent was in charge of the witness at the time of the recess.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MARTIN SWEENY (CONTINUED)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Sweeny, are the two letters which I hand you the letters which I asked you before the luncheon recess to produce?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I ask that these two letters, one being a carbon copy dated September 15, 1929, with the initials at the bottom "MS-CS", and one dated September 24, being an original letter, written to Mr. Martin Sweeny by Mr. William J. Moore, be marked for identification.

(The letters were marked, respectively, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 15 and 16.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all, thank you, Mr. Sweeny.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further questions on the part of the managers?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No other questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness may stand aside.
Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The correspondence is still in the possession of the gentlemen upon the other side, and they have not had time to read it. Mr. Sweeny wishes to get away. If I may have a stipulation with the managers to the effect that those are letters that came from Mr. Sweeny's file, and they are authentic copies and original letters, we can let him go.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. You need not hold Mr. Sweeny here to prove the letters, but we object to them on the ground of their relevancy and materiality.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I understand, but that is not the question.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We will, at the proper time when you wish to offer them, admit. Many of them are not letters addressed to Mr. Sweeny. There are some 200 letters, and we have not had a chance to examine them since you offered them.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I understand that perfectly. I am afraid you will have to remain awhile, Mr. Sweeny.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Here is a letter dated December 18, 1928, addressed to Mr. Bemis, which has no signature. We cannot admit that.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Then I shall have to prove them. I am doing my best. That is all I can do. You had better wait awhile.

The VICE PRESIDENT (to the witness). Stand aside. [To the managers on the part of the House:] Call the next

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, under stipulation with counsel for the respondent I am about to offer two letters and a check in evidence, and I ask that they be marked as exhibits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will mark them as exhibits with the next numbers.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I stated at the time of this stipulation that the witness, Mr. Brodek, was to be called.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I did not understand that.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Oh, yes!

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will call Judge Ritter, then. and prove the letters by him. If you wish to admit them, I will read them. Otherwise I will prove them by Judge

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Let me see the letters, please. Meantime, do not excuse Mr. Brodek.

(The letters were exhibited to Mr. Walsh.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the letters and check are introduced, and will be marked "Exhibits H-1, H-2, and H-3."

(The documents were marked "Managers' Exhibits H-1, H-2, and H-3.")

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I desire to read the exhibits just

The first is as follows:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT H-1

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE'S CHAMBERS. SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, Miami, Fla., March 11, 1929.

Miami, Fla., March 11, 1929.

67 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Brodek: The Mulford Realty Co. foreclosure case on the Brazilian Court Hotel was decided in our favor in every particular. This case certainly has been long-drawn out and has been far more of a fight than anyone anticipated when my firm took it over. Of course, now that I am on the Federal bench, I cannot practice any further, and my partner, A. L. Rankin, will carry through the further proceedings in that case. I will, however, be consulted about matters by him until it is all closed up.

I enclose a statement of the account to date, showing a balance of $1,945.23 due on the agreed fee of $4,000, a check for which was given me by Mr. Mulford on the 9th. He asked me to notify Mr. Cooper of the drawing of this check. Will you please telephone him?

I think you will appreciate that we have done an enormous him?

I think you will appreciate that we have done an enormous amount of work in this case, which has been pending for considerable over a year. In the first place, we did not know of the foreclosure suit which D'Esterre had brought to foreclose his second mortgage prior to the bringing of our suit. This necessitated our entering that suit, and by demurrers and motions to dismiss, finally getting rid of it. In that case some of the law questions were decided which became available in our foreclosure. Every possible block was interposed by the defendant, D'Esterre, and by E. C. Hilker, Inc., which claimed a retention title contract on the plumbing. Also, I had continually on my hands the Paschals, advised the receiver, had three changes of receivers, as you know, and there were continual questions arising between the receivers and the Paschals in reference to the management and accounts of the hotel. the hotel.

I could send you a complete statement of the situation, but you will readily understand the amount of work involved. I am saying all this for the reason that I think $2,000 more by way of attorneys' fees should be allowed. The receiver now has on hand something over $16,000. We proved up attorneys' fees of $16,000. I think the court will allow us $10,000. This will be paid to us by order of court by the receiver, and, as I understand it, this money will be turned over to Mulford to reimburse him for expenses which he has paid and for the payment of attorneys. for expenses which he has paid and for the payment of attorneys' fees. This amount, of course, will more than do this. I talked with Mr. Mulford about this matter on last Saturday, and he said he realized we should have more money, but desired the matter taken up through you. I was glad he did so, because he will then

I do not know whether any appeal will be taken in the case or not; but if so, we hope to get Mr. Howard Paschal or some other person as receiver who will be amenable to our directions, and the hotel can be operated at a profit, of course, pending the appeal. We shall demand a very heavy supersedeas bond, which I doubt whether D'Esterre can give.

I will appreciate your communicating with me direct about this matter, as I had the matter up with Mr. Mulford, and am, of course, primarily interested in getting some money out of this case, as the shift from the practice to the bench shuts off my activity in collections from my old firm, and this matter is one among very few which I am assuming to continue my interest in until finally closed up.

Appreciating your consideration of this matter, I am, with best regards.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE'S CHAMBERS, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, Miami, Fla., April 1, 1929.

Mr. Charles A. Brodek,
72 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Brodek: Many thanks for yours of March 30, enclosing check for $2,000 additional fee in the Brazilian Court Hotel matter. I greatly appreciate your and Mr. Mulford's attitude in the matter, and assure you that I will keep in touch, in an advisory way, with the progress of the case. I feel sure my partner, Judge Rankin, will handle the matter very carefully and efficiently. Very truly yours,

Re: Brazilian Court Hotel. Hon. Halsted L. RITTER,

Hon. Halsted L. Ritter,

United States District Judge, Miami, Fla.

Dear Judge Ritter: Mr. Mulford came back last week, but his engagements and then my engagements prevented meeting on the subject of your recent letter until yesterday.

As I intimated in my March 13 letter, I encountered no difficulty on Mr. Mulford's part in accepting my suggestion that you were entitled to the additional fee, and I am therefore enclosing my firm's check for $2,000.

I told Mr. Mulford that insofar as your judicial duties would permit, you would, in the event of an appeal, give the benefit of your intimate knowledge of the facts and law of the case to Mr. Rankin. I also told Mr. Mulford that in the event of an appeal an additional fee would have to be paid, but that I felt certain that in fixing the amount of that fee, the payments in connection with the case to date would be taken into consideration.

Mr. Mulford wants me to express to you his deep appreciation of your interest in the case and his gratification at the satisfactory outcome of the excellent work you did.

With best regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. A. BRODEK.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF JEROME D. GEDNEY

Jerome D. Gedney, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, this witness is suffering from lameness and requests that he be permitted to sit as he testifies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be prepared to use his discretion. The witness may take the chair back of the desk.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Where do you live, Mr. Gedney?—A. I live in the small town of Manalpan, in Palm Beach County, Fla.

Q. What is your business?-A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter?-A.

Q. Did you or did you not represent a corporation in the matter of Francis?-A. I represented the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. Who was Mr. Francis?-A. Well, I do not know who he is, other than he was purchaser of land from the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. Did you meet Judge Ritter with reference to some law business in which he represented Mr. Francis?-A. I did not quite hear the question.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will ask the reporter to read the question.

The Official Reporter read the question.

A. I suppose you mean did I meet with Judge Ritter? I

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. What was your first connection with that matter?-A. My first connection with that matter was when a receipt for an amount of money that had been paid by Mr. Francis on account of the purchase of property was sent to me, together with some correspondence.

Q. Do you know Judge Ritter's signature?-A. I do not know that I could qualify as an expert. I believe I know his signature.

Q. I show you a letter bearing date February 3, 1930, addressed to Mr. C. H. Geist, Boca Raton, Fla., and ask if that is Judge Ritter's signature?—A. (After examination.) I believe it to be.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Will counsel admit this is the signature of Judge Ritter?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not seen the letter. Mr. Manager PERKINS. I will hand it to you.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel, after examining letter). That appears to be his signature. I will agree that it is.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I offer this letter in evidence and ask that it be marked "Managers' Exhibit I."

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT I

HALSTED L. RITTER, United States District Judge, Miami, Florida, February 3, 1930.

Mr. C. H. GEIST, Boca Raton, Florida.

Dear Mr. Geist: In March 1928, while I was practicing law in West Palm Beach, I had two or three conferences with you concerning the property which Mr. J. R. Francis, of Flint, Michigan, had purchased in Boca Raton prior to the bankruptcy proceedings. These lots were as follows:

Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, 42-A; lots 10 and 11, block 126, plat 4, designated as the Cloister Inn golf course addition of Boca Raton.

On the purchase price of $83,500.00, Mr. Francis paid $59,850.00 on these lots on these lots

on these lots.

Paid $54,200 on a/c principal.

You told me at the time that you would have to clear up the title to the lands through foreclosure and arrange your plans, after which you intended to adjust with creditable people their purchase contract agreements, and for me to take the matter up with you again after you had progressed farther in your matters. I take it that by this time you are ready to consider the proposition.

Mr. Francis is a man of the highest standing in the manufacturing world. He has a beautiful home on the ocean front in Miami Beach, where he spends a little time now and then. He is a man ing world. He has a beautiful home on the ocean front in Miami Beach, where he spends a little time now and then. He is a man of considerable wealth and, I am sure, is the type of man you would want interested in your plans. He desires to acquire the property which he contracted for and, I am sure, would cooperate with you in the improvement of the same satisfactorily. He has asked me to take the matter up with you again. He intended to be down here at this time but is delayed, but will be here, I think, in a week or ten days. Mr. Francis is more than a mere client of mine; he is one of my intimate friends, and naturally I would like very much to get the situation adjusted to the satisfaction of you both. both.

Would you please let me know what your ideas about this matter are?

I hear a great many laudatory things about your Boca Raton Club. Yours very truly, HALSTED L. RITTER.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Gedney, did you receive this letter from Mr. Geist?-A. Yes.

Q. What, if anything, did you do with reference to the matter referred to in the letter?-A. Well, I prepared the necessary deeds that were to be given. I arranged to have the title guaranteed. I procured a title search and made the tax certificate. I mean I prepared the tax certificate; I did not sign it. Then there was a certificate of the engineer required as to a certain portion of the title. That certificate was made by the engineer of the land company.

Q. Did you communicate with anyone representing Mr. Francis?—A. I communicated with Judge Ritter.

Q. What did you do with reference to that?—A. When I procured the title certificate from the title company, which was to insure the title. I sent those preliminary certificates to Judge Ritter with a letter, registered, in the fall of 1930.

Q. I show you what purports to be copy of a letter dated November 19, 1930, and ask if this is a copy of the letter you sent to Judge Ritter.-A. (After examining letter.) That is the carbon copy of the original from my file.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I offer that in evidence.

Q. Mr. Gedney, when did you go to Judge Ritter's office about the transfer of this property from the Spanish River Land Co. to J. R. Francis?—A. I cannot hear your question.

Q. When did you go to see Judge Ritter with reference to the transfer of the property from the Spanish River Land Co.

to Francis?-A. When? Q. Yes; to Judge Ritter's office.—A. I saw Judge Ritter regarding this matter twice; once at his chambers early in 1931, and again when the matter was closed. I looked up the date from the memorandum in my file, and know that the first occasion was on Thursday, the 19th of February. I do not recall it, but I looked it up from a memorandum in my files.

Q. What year was that?-A. 1931.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. At his chambers.

Q. What did you discuss with him?-A. This closure. I do not remember it specifically, but probably it was in relation to the statement of his in a letter that Mr. Francis was to get a warranty deed, and my belief is that that was the real occasion of my calling upon him.

Q. Did you discuss with him the transfer of this property from the Spanish River Land Co. to Francis?-A. Yes. That was the reason I went to see him.

Q. When did you see him the second time?—A. I saw him the second time at Boca Raton.

Q. Did you meet him first at Miami and go to Boca Raton from Miami?-A. On the second occasion?

Q. Yes .- A. No.

Q. Where at Boca Raton did you see him?—A. Where is it?

Q. Where at that place did you see Judge Ritter and Mr. Francis?-A. At the clubhouse.

Q. What was the purpose of your meeting with Judge Ritter?-A. Well, I was asked to come down to attend the closing of the Francis matter, and I brought my file.

Q. Whom were you representing?-A. I was representing the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. Who was representing Francis?-A. Well, Judge Ritter was there with Mr. Francis.

Q. Did he participate in the discussion of the matter?-A. My recollection is that when I got there at the Boca Raton clubhouse that I was told that they were not prepared to pay the balance of $14,000, which was due in cash, and I was asked what could be done about it.

Q. Who were present at that meeting?—A. Well, we were all there, quite a crowd.

Q. Name the persons, please.—A. Mr. Geist, Mr. Anderson, Judge Ritter, Mr. Francis, and myself. Q. State generally to this honorable Court what transpired there.—A. Well, I have already told that when I first went there I was told that they were not prepared to pay the balance in cash, but wanted to pay half in cash and the balance in note, and I was asked what could be done about it.

Q. What was arranged there with reference to that situation?-A. I then suggested that we could close the matter-it had been dragging a long time, and I thought it would be a great deal better to make a delivery of the deeds in escrow, take the $7,000 and the note and deposit the deeds subject to be delivered to Mr. Francis if he paid the note, and to us if he did not pay it at maturity.

Q. Who participated in that conversation?-A. It was participated in by all. I was then asked to prepare such an escrow agreement, and the escrow agreement was prepared.

Q. Signed by whom?-A. Signed by Mr. Geist, I believe, president of the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. And delivered to whom?—A. Either to Mr. Francis or to Judge Ritter; I cannot say which.

Q. Was the matter subsequently closed entirely by payment?—A. The matter was closed that day, and I took the deed and delivered it to the Atlantic Title Co., and took their receipt in accordance with the terms of the escrow agreement, and at a later date the note was sent to me, and I deposited that note in the Central Farmers' Trust Co. At a still later date, after the due date of the note had arrived, I received a letter from a lawyer in Miami asking about the delivery of the deed, and I replied to him that instead of having it delivered to me and then redelivered to him, I would instruct the Atlantic Title Co. to send it direct.

Q. What relation did Mr. Geist bear to the Spanish River Land Co.?-A. Mr. Geist was the president of the company.

Q. Is he an attorney at law?-A. Mr. Geist?

Q. Yes.-A. No.

Q. Is Mr. Anderson?-A. No.

Q. Through this transaction, did Mr. Francis receive more land in the final deed than was originally designed in the first deed?—A. In order to give you an understanding of that, you will have to know that the Boca Raton Club was formed out of the wreck, so to speak, of the Mizner Development Corporation. The Mizner Development Corporation was a company which had considerable success for a time in the development of Boca Raton. It built a hotel and built two golf courses, and what not. After selling $31,000,-000 worth of property on contracts, on which they collected $11,000,000, they sold 5,000,000 of stock. With the collapse of the boom, they collapsed and went into bankruptcy, and afterward it was sold, in the late summer or early fall of 1927.

Q. Mr. Gedney, make it brief. What I want to know is whether, through the transaction, Mr. Francis at this time received more land than the original contract called for?-A. I wanted to explain how that was. I will make it as brief as possible. He had arranged to buy certain lands which are described in various letters and in the deeds, which were finally given to him from the Mizner Development Corporation, and had paid the full amount, and the lands were foreclosed, and he was out so far as his property was concerned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I send three questions to the desk and ask that they be put to the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the interrogatories submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

At the Boca Raton conference who told you that Mr. Francis was unable to pay the balance at that time?

A. I do not recall exactly who told me. I believe it was Mr. Anderson.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

Who instructed you to draw the deed?

A. Well, I was the attorney of the company, and I presume that I did it as a matter of course.

The legislative clerk read the third question propounded by Mr. O'MAHONEY, as follows:

What part, if any, did Judge Ritter take in this conference?

A. Judge Ritter was present with Mr. Francis when this matter was discussed, and I believe was present when the receipt, the escrow receipt, was signed and delivered to Mr. Francis. I also believe he discussed the propriety of carrying out the matter in the way that I had suggested.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. On whose behalf did he discuss the propriety?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as calling for a conclusion of the witness. Anything that was said there that the witness can recall will be all right,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the witness may recite the conversation if he remembers it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I produce, having exhibited it to counsel for the respondent, a certified copy of deeds from the Spanish River Land Co. to J. R. Francis, one dated the 31st of March 1931, the other dated the 16th of February 1931. I desire to offer these in evidence and have them marked as exhibits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the documents will be received and appropriately marked.

(The documents were marked, respectively, "Managers' Exhibit R" and "Managers' Exhibit S.")

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Gedney, had it not been for the conference and the arrangements at the time they were made, would Mr. Francis ever have received any land from the Boca Raton Co.?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as calling for an improper conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do the managers on the part of the House insist upon the question?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. No; I will put the question a little differently.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. At the time of the bankruptcy was or was not Mr. Francis' interest in the Boca Raton property entirely separate?—A. I understand the question to be at the time of the bankruptcy.

Q. At the time of the bankruptcy or by reason of any other legal proceeding.—A. That is what I was about to explain. The property of the Mizner Development Corporation was all heavily mortgaged, and this very property which Mizner had sold to Mr. Francis under a contract of sale was foreclosed at a later day and had nothing to do with the bankruptcy.

Q. At the inception of the transaction with reference to the title that you described to this honorable Court, did Mr. Francis have any legal title to any of that land which he afterward received under the deed?-A. None whatever.

Q. Did he have any equity or interest in that property whatever?—A. No.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I desire to show counsel for respondent a check. I understand that the check has been submitted, and I offer it in evidence and ask that it be marked as an exhibit.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does this witness know anything about it?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I am not asking the witness anything about it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We object to its introduction at this point because of the purpose in offering it at this time. If this witness knows nothing about it, the examination of the witness should proceed before the check is offered.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Will you let me have the check back?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; you can have it back; it has been through the bank, so I will let it go back to you.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Counsel for the respondent may take the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further interroga-CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

Q. Mr. Gedney, it is true, is it not, that Mr. Francis, prior to the collapse of the Mizner Development Co. at Boca Raton, was a purchaser under a land contract of some property in the original development of the Boca Raton?-A. I have explained that he had a contract at the time of the collapse of Mizner Development Co. to purchase from the Mizner Co. some property which he afterward received by deed from the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. The story is, in fact, that what you did was a conclusion of an arrangement made by Judge Ritter with your client with respect to that old Francis purchase made by Judge Ritter before he went on the bench?-A. No; it had nothing to do with anything that happened before the incorporation of the Spanish River Land Co.

Q. I understand that, but Mr. Francis was trying, was he not, to have your company sell to him property in the Mizner Development Co. area owned by your client at the time, in view of the fact that he was formerly a purchaser, and that that was mentioned?—A. I do not know what Mr. Francis' purchase was, but I know it is a fact that he bought from the Spanish River Land Co. the same property that he had been under contract to buy from the Mizner Co., with the exception that the Spanish River Land Co. conveyed additional deeds.

Q. Your client took into consideration or you knew at the time he had formerly been one of the original buyers in Boca Raton and then had no interest in it because of the crisis?-A. I say again, that is true.

Q. He then became a purchaser by purchasing from the new owners that you represented land in the same area. Did he also become a member of the Boca Raton Club?—A. I believe he did.

Q. On that occasion at Boca Raton do you recall seeing Mrs. Francis and Mrs. Ritter there also?—A. No; I do not. I do not think I have ever met Mrs. Ritter.

Q. Were they not there at dinner in the club on that occasion?—A. They may have been: I do not recall it.

Q. You did not see them?—A. I remember that we had luncheon together; a crowd of us were there. Other than those I talked to in the business conference, I do not recall who were there when we had luncheon and were socially engaged.

Q. All the papers in this matter were drawn by you, were they not? I mean the escrow agreement and the deed?—A.

All the papers were not drawn by me; no.

Q. Let us say that the conveyances, to get them singled out, were drawn by you?—A. Yes; they were. There were two deeds.

Q. Those are the two we just had here?—A. That is right.

Q. The escrow agreement that deposited the deeds subject to the balance being paid was drawn by you?—A. That is right; yes.

Q. Judge Ritter did not draw any of the title papers, did he, that you know of?—A. No; he did not draw any of them.

Q. Do I understand that, so far as you know, Judge Ritter was gratuitously serving Francis in the matter?—A. I know nothing about Judge Ritter's relations with Mr. Francis except what is contained in his own letter.

Q. That original letter mentions an understanding or, rather, a discussion with your client prior to the time of this first letter, does it not?-A. Yes.

Q. You do not know when that discussion was had, how long prior to the first letter of this series of letters?—A. I cannot hear you when you speak directly behind the microphone. I am doing my best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state that the microphones are so arranged that we can hear less at this point in the Chamber than any place else. I have called the attention of the Sergeant at Arms to that fact.

The WITNESS. If you will speak a little to one side of the microphone perhaps I can hear you.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

Q. You cannot tell us how long prior to the first communication introduced here, from the standpoint of the dates, it was that Judge Ritter discussed with your client this matter?—A. Show me the first communication and I will tell you. If you will tell me what you mean by the communication, perhaps I can answer.

Q. The first one, from the standpoint of date, that first came to your attention. I am trying to find out if you know how long before that it was discussed with your client.—A. I want to see the first receipt that came from my files.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the witness to sit a little closer to the microphone, so we can hear him a little better, perhaps.

The WITNESS. I am glad to do so.

By Mr. HOFFMAN (of counsel):

Q. Perhaps we can save a little time. Judge Ritter talked this matter over with your client, Mr. Geist, long before he went on the bench, did he not?—A. I don't know. He said so in the letter that was introduced. I believe he did.

Q. That is what I wanted the letter for—A. Yes; certainly. Q. All that happened was the closing up of that transaction?—A. No; it was decidedly not. It was an entirely new transaction because in between the time the title had been foreclosed out of the old Mizner Development Co. and the Francis sale was made, the title was in the land company.

Q. Originally, one company owned it, and Mr. Francis contracted and your clients thereafter became the owner, and Mr. Geist was interested in the Spanish Land Co. The discussion that Mr. Geist mentioned in the first letter we have here——A. Now you are talking something about why a letter was written.

Q. No; there was only one transaction, the Francis transaction. It is the same matter, is it not?—A. No; there were two transactions, one the purchase under a contract with Mizner, which was absolutely settled by the foreclosure of the mortgage.

Q. You had nothing to do with that in this transaction?—
A. What do you mean?

Q. This was just one transaction of Francis with the Spanish River Land Co.?—A. One transaction with the Spanish River Land Co.; yes.

Q. There is no misunderstanding about that. This first letter is dated February 3, 1930, addressed to Mr. Geist and commences:

In March 1928 while I was practicing law in Palm Beach, I had two or three conferences with you concerning the property which Mr. J. R. Francis, of Flint, Mich., had purchased in Boca Raton prior to the bankruptcy proceedings.

That is where he first comes to your attention, is it not, as a result of this first letter?—A. No; it was not.

Q. That is, Mr. Geist sent this letter to you?—A. That was not the first. The first thing I got was a copy of a receipt given by the Spanish River Land Co. to Mr. Francis for payment of $15,000, and afterward I got that letter.

Q. The culmination and finality of it was the delivery of these deeds we have in evidence?—A. They were to be delivered afterward, yes, April 1, in escrow. They were delivered on the 2d of April 1931; and they were delivered on payment of the notes I described on my direct examination.

Q. That final thing was the delivery of the two deeds we have in evidence?—A. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You sent the deeds described to Judge Ritter, did you?—A. I never sent the deeds to Judge Ritter. They were present in the meeting of April 1 at Boca Raton, which I have testified about.

Q. Do you know whether in the final closing of the matter Mr. Francis received credit for any of the money he had paid to the Mizner people that he had lost by reason of the fore-closure?—A. I think the purchase price was arrived at by giving him credit for all that he paid to the Mizner Co. and deducting that sum from the amount that he had agreed to pay the Mizner Co. In other words, he paid the Spanish River Land Co. $29,000 for all these lots, and they as a matter of fact represented the difference between what he had paid and what he had agreed to pay to the Mizners.

Q. I show you a memorandum on the back of the letter of February 3, 1930, and ask you if that refreshes your memory as to the amount of the payment?—A. No; it does not, because the amount of the difference here is shown to be $29,300. The receipt which is in my file and which was sent to me fixed the amount at $29,000.

Q. Did I offer that receipt to you?-A. No; you did not.

Q. Will you please examine your file which appears to be before you and see if you can find that receipt?—A. (After examining papers.) Yes; I find it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I did not hear what the witness said.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. He said he found the receipt.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Have we seen the receipt?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May we see it before it is offered in evidence?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. You may [handing paper to Mr. Walsh (of counsel) 1.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Gedney, I show you the paper just referred to and just submitted to counsel for the respondent and ask if this is a copy of the receipt to which you referred in your testimony?-A. This is the original paper which I received from the Spanish River Land Co. as the basis for proceeding with the matter and it purports to be a copy of the receipt issued to Mr. Francis.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I offer it in evidence and ask that it be marked as an exhibit.

(The receipt was marked "Managers' Exhibit T.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I see that again when you are through with it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I be permitted to inquire whether counsel desire or intend to have printed in the RECORD of today's proceeding these deeds respecting the Spanish River transaction? It seems to me that the mere identification, and the fact that they are presented, would preclude the necessity of having them printed in the RECORD.

The Record is already getting voluminous.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, in response to the honorable Senator, the managers on the part of the House will say that they expect to do just what the Senator has suggested-merely to offer them and give them exhibit numbers, but not to print them.

The receipt just offered in evidence is as follows:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT T

FEBRUARY 15, 1930. Received of J. Richard Francis, $15,000.00 to apply on the purchase of lots nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, block no. 42-A, and lots nos. 10 and 11, block no. 126, plat no. 4, designated as "The Cloister Inn Golf Course Addition of Boca Raton."

Mr. J. Richard Francis agrees to pay $14,000.00 more when deed is delivered, with guarantee title insuring title to these lots.

Mr. Francis also agrees to having inserted in the deed the regular restrictions of the Spanish River Land Company to lot purchasers. SPANISH RIVER LAND COMPANY, -. President.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Gedney, what was the total purchase price of those lots?-A. $29,000.

Q. Do you know how much Mr. Francis had previously paid to the Meizner interest?-A. He had paid something around $53.000.

Q. So that the total amount that he had disbursed altogether was something like $83,000?—A. That is mathematical.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all. Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I now desire to offer in evidence a check which has been exhibited to counsel for respondent, and which is admitted to be genuine, and ask that it be given an exhibit number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered. (The document was marked "Managers' Exhibit U.")

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The exhibit just offered reads as follows:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT U

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS BANK-MAIN OFFICE

FLINT, Mich., April 18, 1929. No. 20 $7,500.00/xx

Pay to the order of H. L. Ritter Seven thousand five hundred 00/100 dollars.

(Signed) J. R. FRANCIS.

(Chg. Savings a/c.)

Endorsed "H. L. Ritter" and cleared through the banks shown by the endorsement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is the date of the

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, in response to the inquiry, I will state that the date of the check is April 18, 1929.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Call Judge Chillingworth, please. DIRECT EXAMINATION OF C. E. CHILLINGWORTH

C. E. Chillingworth, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. State your name, please .- A. C. E. Chillingworth.

Q. What office do you occupy, if any, Judge?-A. I am a judge of the Circuit Court of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit of Florida.

Q. How long have you been so?-A. I have been a circuit judge for something over 12 years.

Q. Judge, you were the presiding judge in the case of Trust Co. of Georgia, Robert G. Stephens, as trustee, against Brazilian Court Building & Operating Co., were you?-A. I Was.

Q. Do you remember the number of that case?—A. I do not. The records are here. I think it is 5704. I am not certain.

Q. That is right. That case was pending regularly in your court—that is, of the fifteenth judicial circuit of Florida?-A. Yes. sir.

Q. Judge, I will ask you if that was the case in which Mulford Realty Co. was the owner of the bonds?—A. Yes.

Q. During the pendency of that case, who was counsel for the complainant and who for the defendant, if you remember?-A. The firm of Ritter & Rankin represented the plaintiff trustees. The firm of Winters & Foskett-perhaps it was then Winters, Foskett & Wilcox-represented some of the defendants. I think Mr. Salisbury represented one of the defendants, and there were perhaps some other lawyers representing some lienors.

Q. Was a man by the name of D'Esteree one of the interveners?-A. He was a party in the suit. I am not certain now just how he came in the suit.

Q. All right, Judge. Now we have the suit identified. As judge of that court, do you, for your own private information, keep a record book in which you yourself enter engagements?-A. I do.

Q. Have you your book for 1929?-A. I have it.

Q. I will ask you, Judge, to turn to the page which indicates the date of May 3, 1929. Did you yourself make that entry?-A. All the entries on that page in writing are made in my own handwriting.

Q. What entries do you make when an attorney or anyone else makes an engagement with you as judge of that court?-A. My practice with reference to engagements is to make a notation of the lawyer who seeks the engagement and the approximate amount of time that he feels he needs.

Q. You mean his name?-A. His name.

Q. When a lawyer gives you a citation of authority, do you note that?-A. Quite often.

Q. I will ask you to look at May 3 and see if you have a notation there of an engagement with Rankin.-A. I do.

Q. Read that notation, if you please, Judge.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to see that, please-any document that goes in.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I shall be so glad to have you see

(The document was exhibited to Mr. Walsh, of counsel.)

Mr. Manager HOBBS. With the Court's permission and the kind attention of opposing counsel, I should like to suggest that counsel also look at May 4, because I am going to examine him on that in a moment.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Will you please read that, Judge?-A. On Friday, May 3, in my own writing, there appears the following:

3 00 Rankin.

Q. Turn over, please, to May 4, 1929, Judge. Do you see an entry there of an engagement made by Judge Ritter?-A. There is this in my own handwriting.

Q. Please read it.—A. (Reading:)

111 So. 626 Ritter supersedeas bond.

Q. Judge, that "111 So. 626" refers to the Southern Reporter, does it not?-A. It does.

Q. Is that or not the common and accepted way that lawyers in our part of the country refer to the West Publishing Co.'s national reporter system Southern Reporter?-A. It is.

Q. And you say that that engagement is noted by you in your own handwriting?-A. These words appear here in my own handwriting.

Q. I will ask you, Judge, if at that time you had notified counsel in that case of the rendition or mind of the court with respect to the final decree in the Brazilian Court case?-A. On March 2, 1929, I wrote counsel a letter advising them of the way that I intended to dispose of that case and sent them a copy of the findings that I desired incorformal decree and present it to me on notice.

Q. So, then, from March 2 on there was only pending the question of the value of the bonds?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that, may it please the President, as leading. Let him say what it was.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. All right; I beg your pardon. I was trying to save time.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge, I shall appreciate it if you would tell us what remained to be done in that case.—A. I should like to have a copy of that letter, which I do not have. I did not keep any copy of it. I was furnished a copy of it last week. I do not have it now. Mr. Rankin exhibited to me a copy over my signature that I sent out to the lawyers in the case. Now, if I had that copy that he exhibited to me, I could probably tell you the matters undisposed of. My recollection is that the precise amount to be included in the final decree had not yet been settled by the proof, nor had the amount of attorneys' fees and perhaps some costs. The equities had been established; at least I told them what I would do.

Q. Judge, I will ask you if the matter of the requirement of a supersedeas bond, and fixing the amount thereof, was one of the questions which would probably come up immediately after the final decree was rendered.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I wish to object to that question for the reason that the record in the case and the papers in the case are the best evidence. I should like to have them here. I should like to have them identified, so that, if we thought it necessary, we could interrogate the witness on cross-examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer thinks, if the witness knows matters that he himself attended to, the original documents not being in question, he has a right to answer the question.

A. I have no independent recollection of the matter at all. The official court records or this memorandum would have to control

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Your decree was not rendered until June 8, was it?-A. The decree was not rendered until June 1929.

Q. I am not asking whether or not there was in fact filed a motion for a supersedeas bond to be given, or whether or not the aggrieved party, or the party feeling himself aggrieved, had taken an appeal and given in aid thereof a supersedeas bond, but I am asking you, as the judge of that court, if there was to be an appeal taken, that would be one of the steps in the perfection of that appeal, would it not? A. Yes, sir; it might be a step, and it was a step in this suit. A supersedeas bond is not essential to the appeal.

Q. Of course not; but it frequently is?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was a supersedeas bond in this case?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you fixed the amount thereof at $7,500, did you not?-A. I did.

Q. Judge, there was an appeal taken and prosecuted to termination, was there not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who gave the supersedeas bond in this case?-A. D'Esterre, I think.

Q. I will ask you if that notation which you have in your docket, your engagement docket there, under date of May 4, 1929, referred when you wrote it, and now refers, to this book which I now show you [exhibiting book to witness]?-A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you if you read this decision?-A. I read part of it.

Q. It deals with supersedeas bonds, does it not?-A. I read that headnote, in connection with the supersedeas bond in this case.

Q. I will ask you to read this fourth headnote, which you say you read.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It seems to me that it is not material, Mr. President, and I therefore object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to tell whether it is material or not at the present time. They are dealing with the situation at the time of the original trial, and the judge's remembrance of it and certain notes he made at the time, I think can be shown and that he can porated in the decree, with the request that they prepare the | read the notes. There can be no harm to respondent from his reading them.

The WITNESS. This is a proceeding in the Supreme Court of the State of Florida, [Reading:]

Where a foreclosure decree is for $108,656.25 and $6,000 solicitor's fees, an order of the circuit judge fixing the amount of a supersedeas bond at $25,000 is not an abuse of discretion.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is all. Thank you, Judge. CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge, will you be kind enough to let me look at your memorandum book or diary?-A. Yes. I am not sure you can read all of it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will do my best.

(The book was handed to Mr. Walsh.)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge, you have many other memoranda here which do not refer to engagements with lawyers or others, have you not?-A. That is correct.

Q. You make memoranda of various kinds, I notice.—A. Personal and official both.

Q. Have you the letter to which you were referring here, which you wrote to Judge Rankin, in which you gave the substance of your findings of fact?-A. I have not. Mr. Rankin exhibited to me an original duplicate which I

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am going to ask the managers whether they have this letter to which the witness referred.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We never saw it or heard of it. He says he was furnished with it by Judge Rankin. would be so glad to have it exhibited.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I would like to see this letter, Mr. President, if I can get it readily. I understand Mr. Rankin is still in attendance here. I would also like to have the original bill of complaint in this case.

(Several packages of papers were handed to Mr. Walsh.)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Is that the record in this case [indicating]?-A. Not that I know of. This is some suit in the Federal court.

Q. I am going to send up these boxes of records which you have introduced here, Judge, and ask you to be good enough to pick out the bill of complaint, the intervention of d'Esterre, and the answers filed in the case.—A. If you would state all you want, and let me retire, I could probably save the time of the court and find those documents.

Q. I just want those pleadings I have mentioned, the original bill of complaint, the interposition of d'Esterre, and the answers filed in the case, the answers of all the defendants.

(The papers referred to were handed to the witness.)

A. (After examining papers.) I have delivered to counsel the papers requested so far as I could find them from this casual examination. Parts of those answers might have been stricken before the case went to final hearing. I would have to examine all of these orders to state accurately what was left.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offer in evidence at this point, without reading them, the bill of complaint in case no. 5704, Trust Co. of Georgia, and another against Brazilian Court Building Corporation, and others, and ask that it be marked an exhibit with the next number of the respondent's exhibits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received and marked as an exhibit.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 14.")

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge, I do not see here the interposing complaint of D'Esterre. Perhaps one of those answers contains it. I do not know.—A. This answer of D'Esterre, filed February 11, 1928, apparently presents his claim.

Q. His intervention?—A. His answer. I do not think there was any intervention as such.

Q. He was made a party defendant?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer in evidence the following papers and ask that they be given the proper number as respondent's exhibits:

Answer of the defendant, Joseph D'Esterre, filed February 11, 1928.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. The date of the filing, Judge, I believe, of the original complaint is some time in 1927. Have you the original complaint there?-A. I think that is correct.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Also the answer of E. C. Hilker, Inc., and other defendants, filed December 5, 1927.

Also, answer of Brazilian Court Building Corporation, September 27, 1927.

Also, amended answer of E. C. Hilker, filed March 5, 1928. Also, plea in abatement of the defendant, Joseph D'Esterre, filed December 5, 1927.

Also, amendment to answer of the defendant, Joseph D'Esterre, filed April 10, 1928.

Also, amendment to the answer of the defendant, Joseph D'Esterre, filed June 4, 1928.

Also, second amended answer of E. C. Hilker, Inc., June 9, 1928

And the final decree, filed the 8th day of June 1928.

I ask that they be given their appropriate numbers as respondent's exhibits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I request the Presiding Officer to inquire of counsel whether it is his desire to have all the exhibits just identified printed in the RECORD, or merely offered and marked for identification and left with the clerk.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I desire to have them regularly put into the evidence. For the purpose of conserving time and space, I think they might be put together with a band, as they often are, and given one exhibit number. I do not ask that they be printed in full, but merely that memoranda be made just as I have dictated them here.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, with the consent of counsel for the respondent in this connection, to save time, suppose the entire record be offered-we join in offering the rest of it at this time-merely for the purpose of making the papers available for examination or argument, as may be required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that stipulation agreeable to counsel for respondent?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not see any objection to it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, and it is

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to have an agreement with the managers, if they wish to do so, to the effect that we may get the letter referred to, which contained the judge's findings of fact, and have the judge approve it or O. K. it after we get it this evening, or some other time, and therefore not keep him over just for that purpose.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all right. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). With that understanding, that is all we have to ask you, Judge Chillingworth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the stipulation in the record in this case, the entire record or file in the case just enumerated will be admitted in evidence and receive one identification number.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; the papers will go under one identification number.

(The documents were marked "Respondent's Exhibit 15.") The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Call the next witness.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I have submitted to counsel for respondent three letters which they have agreed may go in evidence; and I now offer a letter written by A. L. Rankin, dated May 29, 1929, to Charles A. Brodek. and ask that it be given an exhibit number.

(The document was marked "Managers' Exhibit V.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not had a chance to see that. Judge.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. Hoffman read all these letters. I submitted all of them to him.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to look at it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. While counsel is reading that letter, I have two other letters written by Mr. A. L. Rankin, dated October 31, 1929, and August 26, 1931, which, under an agreement with counsel, after being admitted in evidence, I ask to have marked as exhibits.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not object to those, but I should like to read them beforehand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be admitted and marked.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I am merely trying to conserve

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am trying to do that, but I cannot do it at the expense of not reading what you are

(The two documents were marked, respectively, "Managers' Exhibit W" and "Managers' Exhibit X.")

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, the exhibits which have just been offered in evidence, and which have been shown to counsel for the respondent, are as follows:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT V

A. L. RANKIN, ATTORNEY AT LAW, COMEAU BUILDING, West Palm Beach, Florida, May 29th, 1929.

In re Brazilian court foreclosure. Mr. CHARLES A. BRODEK, c/o Brodek, Raphael & Eisner,

67 Wall Street, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR MR. BRODEK: Upon returning to the office this morning from a ten days' business trip to Alabama I found your letter of May 20th, and also your night letter of the 28th, pertaining to the above matter. I wherewith enclosing. I wired you today, confirmation of which I am

We have had the matter of entering the final decree up with the court on several occasions, trying to arrange to have him enter the final decree without reopening the case for the taking of further testimony as to the amount Mr. Mulford has invested in the bonds, interest, and other carrying charges or expenses. The position that the court has taken in this matter in refusing to enter a final decree for the full amount of the bonds was so unexpected and unresexpueble that I have been at a loss as to how the court bonds, interest, and other carrying charges or expenses. The position that the court has taken in this matter in refusing to enter a final decree for the full amount of the bonds was so unexpected and unreasonable that I have been at a loss as to how the court could arrive at fixing the proper amount, there being no evidence before the court as to the amount paid for a number of the bonds and as to the interest and expenses of Mr. Mulford pertaining to the holding of the bonds since his purchase. The court has finally agreed that if the lawyers would stipulate and file the stipulation in the cause, consenting to the various items outlined in your telegram to me sometime back, that he would enter the final decree according to the stipulation. The attorneys have finally agreed to stipulate. The stipulation has been drafted, has been signed by myself, and is in their hands for signature. Mr. Foskett, of Winters, Foskett & Wilcox, attorneys for D'Esterre, promised to sign the stipulation more than ten days ago, but he left the city before doing so, and will not return until June 1st. The court is ready to enter the final decree immediately upon the stipulation being signed and filed.

The court has set the amount of the supersedeas bond at $7,500.00, which the defendant, D'Esterre, will have to execute upon his appeal, which they say will be taken as soon as the final decree is entered. I think the court should have fixed this bond at not less than $35,000.00, and so insisted, but he says that he thinks the bondholders would be fully protected with a $7,500 bond. Under separate cover I am mailing you my memorandum brief submitted to the court on the question of the amount of the bond at $7,500.00 in an also sending a copy of the letter received from the judge, indicating that he would fix the amount of the bond at $7,500.00 in as soon as you have looked it over, as it is my office copy.

If D'Esterre appeals from the final decree, we will file crossassignments of error and feel that we will have no trouble in rever of sale fixed. Yours very truly.

A. L. RANKIN.

The next exhibit marked in evidence is a letter from A. L. Rankin to Mr. Charles A. Brodek, dated August 26, 1931, as follows:

Re: Brazilian Court foreclosure.

Dear Mr. Brodek: I have heard nothing further from the supreme court as to when the appeal of D'Esterre in the above case will be heard. I have no doubt that it will go over into the fall or winter.

The plan of Winters & Foskett, attorneys for D'Esterre, is to hold this case in court until they can build up a very large fund in the hands of the receiver, hoping by that to prevail upon the court to allot them a substantial sum upon a final order distributing the funds held by the receiver.

If the appeal is affirmed by the supreme court, their plan is to file a motion or petition praying the court to order the funds in the hands of the receiver paid over to them in satisfaction of their claim, and in the event this motion or petition is denied, to again appeal to the supreme court from the court's order. There is nothing in the Florida law that would prevent them from taking this second appeal.

this second appeal.

They are very hopeful of persuading the supreme court on the present appeal to reverse the judgment of the lower court on the authority principally of Houston vs. Forman ((Fla.), 109 Southern Reporter, p. 297); Houston vs. Adams ((Fla.), 95 Southern Reporter, p. 859); Coram vs. Palmer ((Fla.), 58 Southern Reporter, p. 721); and Hogan vs. Ellis ((Fla.), 22 Southern Reporter, p. 727). In the case of Houston vs. Forman above cited, the question of equitable estoppel was involved, and they rely principally upon this case on their appeal. I feel and contend that the facts in our case are entirely different from the facts set forth in the case of Houston vs. Forman. They have, however, a very fine talking point in the fact that D'Esterre owned the property and only received a small proportion of the original price, and that they have lost title to the property by virtue of scheming and manipulation on the part of the Paschals and G. L. Miller, the trustee, at the time the deed was delivered out of escrow. This argument might appeal to some of the judges of the supreme court, notwithstanding the doctrine of equitable estoppel and ratification of delivery out of escrow upon which we won the decision in the lower court.

In view of the prospect of long drawn out and continued litigation, it extrices the time that it would be advantageous in the lower.

In view of the prospect of long drawn out and continued litigation, it strikes me that it would be advantageous in the long run for Mr. Mulford to offer D'Esterre a substantial amount of the present moneys in the hands of the receiver in settlement of the D'Esterre claim in consideration of the withdrawal of their ap-the D'Esterre claim in consideration of the withdrawal of their appeal and permitting us to proceed to sale under foreclosure decree.

As Judge Ritter assisted in handling this case and is very familiar with all the details, I talked this settlement over with him a few days ago before he left for New York. He agrees with me that under the circumstances a settlement is advisable. Judge Ritter is at present in New York stopping with his son-in-law, Merle R. Walker, at No. 6 River Road, Scarsdale, New York. After September first he will be holding court during the month of September for Judge Mack in New York. I suggest you get in touch with Judge Ritter and talk this matter over with him and with Mr. Mulford. If you should want me to come to New York and discuss a plan of settlement, I could run up there for a day or two during September.

With kindest regards and best wishes,

With kindest regards and best wishes,

In re Brazilian Court Hotel. Mr. Charles A. Brodek,

In re Brazilian Court Hotel.

Mr. Charles A. Brodek,

c/o Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, 67 Wall Street,

New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Brodek: Mr. Foskett, of Winters, Foskett & Wilcox, attorneys for D'Esterre, has approached me on several occasions lately with reference to a settlement of the Brazilian Court matter and the D'Esterre claim. I have refused to discuss settlement with him seriously, but while Judge Ritter was in the office here Saturday, Mr. Foskett came in and again brought up the subject of settlement, suggesting that they would take 50 cents on the dollar for their claim, including principal and interest, which would approximate the sum of $45,000. We merely smiled and gave him no satisfaction whatever. However, after he left, Mr. Paschal came in and talked over a proposition of settlement which we might submit to Foskett, subject to the approval of you and Mr. Mulford. This proposition is as follows:

That we pay him $15,000.00 out of the monies now in the hands of the receiver, $15,000.00 in April 1930 out of next season's income and $10,000.00 out of the income of the following season, which would total $40,000.00, if we cannot settle with him for any less amount.

Judge Ritter and I recommend that if a settlement on approximately this basis can be worked out, and the receiver dismissed, and the property turned over to us for operation, that it would no doubt be beneficial in the long run, even though we have no fear of the final result in the Supreme Court.

On account of the congested docket in the Supreme Court it is probably that unless settlement is made that we will be unable to get a decision before the season of 1930-31, and it might be that the property would have to be operated under a receivership the coming season and the next. We might, however, be able by staying close in behind the appeal to get it out of the Supreme Court by next fall.

We do not know that this proposition will be acceptable to Court by next fall.

We do not know that this proposition will be acceptable to D'Esterre, but we are inclined to think that we will be able to effect a settlement with them on the basis outlined above.

You will find enclosed a letter from Mr. Paschal to Mr. Mulford, explaining his views on the situation. You will please get in touch with Mr. Mulford, deliver the enclosed letter to him, and advise me what you think of the proposition outlined.

Yours very truly,

A. L. RANKIN.

MRS. BLANCHE BROOKS Mr. HOBBS. Call Mrs. Blanche Brooks, please. Mrs. Blanche Brooks entered the Chamber.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I understand that we can stipulate about Mrs. Brooks' testimony. My colleague inquired of the young lady what she was doing here and, in view of her statement to him, we may avoid putting her on the stand.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, we welcome that suggestion. Mrs. Brooks was secretary to the late Judge Lake Jones, judge of the southern district of Florida, with headquarters in Jacksonville, and the purpose of this witness's testimony is only to show that Judge Lake Jones was at his office in Jacksonville attending to business during the months of September and October 1929.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We know nothing about that. If the young lady says he was there we will agree that he was there.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Well, she so says.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very well, we will not have to go through that.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Then it is stipulated that that is the fact.

That is all, thank you, Mrs. Brooks. You are not excused from attendance, but you are to be excused from the stand.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Would you be kind enough to give me that letter that you read from that contained the statement of Mr. Rankin that it presented a certain brief to Judge Chillingworth?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. It is now in the possession of the clerk, I believe.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am going to recall Judge Chillingworth, and just ask him a couple of questions,

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION OF C. E. CHILLINGWORTH

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Judge Chillingworth, have you any independent recollection of seeing Judge Halsted L. Ritter in your court or in your chambers after he went on the bench as a Federal judge?-A. I have no independent recollection. My book will have to speak for itself.

Q. So unless it is in the book you have no recollection of it?-A. I have no independent recollection of the appearance of any particular lawyer before me at that time.

Q. I am not asking you about any other lawyer; I am asking you about Judge Ritter.—A. Or of him. My book will have to speak for itself.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, the checks about which we have examined the witness and which I now hold in my hand and have just shown to opposing counsel are to be introduced in evidence. I understand it is agreed they may be introduced in evidence seriatim according to their date and given appropriate exhibit numbers.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I offer them in evidence in accordance with that understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The checks will be received in evidence and appropriately numbered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON. These checks, I assume, are those to which testimony has been directed in the past couple of days and relate to transactions concerning which the evidence has referred. These, I hope, will be printed in the RECORD rather than merely designated in such fashion as has been heretofore indicated concerning certain of the files of various sorts?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I ask that these checks be introduced in evidence, given appropriate numbers, and that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The checks will be received in evidence, appropriately marked, and will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The income-tax card, certified as being an original as entered on the records of the income-tax office in Jacksonville, Fla., is now offered in evidence, and we ask that it be given its appropriate exhibit number. May we, in order to save the time of calling the income-tax witness, who is outside the Chamber, agree that the initials "N. I." in both instances where they are used mean "nontaxable individual."

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If the managers have a statement from the witness to that effect and that is the fact, it

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. So it is stipulated that the initials "N. I." on this card for 1929 and 1930 mean "nontaxable individual." We ask that it be given an appropriate number and that it be printed in the RECORD with the stipulation that the letters "N. I." mean a nontaxable individual incometax return on which no income tax was paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The card will be received in evidence appropriately marked and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Opposing counsel have seen the income-tax return of 1930 of Judge Ritter?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think we have.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer in evidence a certified copy of Judge Ritter's income-tax return for 1930, and ask that it be given an appropriate number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received in evidence and numbered as an exhibit.

(The certified copy of income-tax return for 1930 was marked "Managers" Exhibit A-8.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, we offer in evidence a certified copy of the income-tax return of A. L. Rankin for the calendar year 1930, filed the 13th of March 1931, and ask that it be received in evidence and given an exhibit number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received and identified with the appropriate number.

(The certified copy of income-tax return was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-9.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I believe the House managers are about through. We should like a few moments recess to confer about the exhibits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Court and counsel for the respective parties to inquire if the check, one of the exhibits, dated March 20, 1930, "Pay to the order of H. L. Ritter, $2,590.90. Signed A. L. Rankin"-

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is one of the checks for a division of fees collected on the partnership business after the dissolution.

Mr. KING. I inquire whether it is contended that that is a part of the $5,000 alleged to have been paid for the purchase of the business.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No. sir. That was a distribution of an earned fee in another case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, am I correct in assuming that the income-tax returns for the years indicated will be printed in the RECORD? They should be so printed.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We ask that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer was not aware that such a request had been submitted. However, it is now submitted and the income returns just offered in evidence will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Mr. President, we ask for a few minutes' recess to check up on our exhibits to be sure that we have introduced them all in evidence.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Court stand in recess until called to order by the Presiding Officer.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

At 4 o'clock and 42 minutes, having been called to order by the Vice President, the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, reassembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the managers on the part of the House, as well as the counsel for the respondent, that they are ready to proceed.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, we have a stipulation. Counsel have entered into a stipulation to the effect that by an order of the Department of Internal Revenue the income-tax returns up to 1929 and including the year 1929 have been destroyed and are not available in this case.

We offer in evidence the telegram of October 10 to Bert E. Holland from A. L. Rankin, and ask that it be given the appropriate exhibit number.

(The telegram was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-10" and is as follows:)

Telegram received last night. Foreclosure bill mailed clerk court Miami yesterday afternoon. Richardson had advised imperative that we proceed at once, this necessary to preserve profits this season operation for first-mortgage bondholders, otherwise antagonistic interests would procure lease and possession of mortgaged property and this season income. Bill seeks foreclosure appointment of receiver instanter, injunction against leasing, and any disposition of property pending proceedings. When you familiar facts and conditions confident you approve our quick action this regard. Mortgagor, by its president, Martin Sweeny, New York, filing answer admitting allegations of bill and consent to appointment of receiver. Outstanding men of national reputation, including yourself, have been selected and consented to act as bondholders' committee. Will apply for receiver Tuesday. Should we be delayed adverse interests would proceed with foreclosure and thereby control litigation and operation of hotel.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer in evidence letter from Halsted L. Ritter under date of July 2, 1930, to Hon. Alexander Akerman.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I propound an inquiry as to whether or not counsel desire that those of the exhibits which have just been offered for the RECORD, and which have heretofore been read into the RECORD, be reprinted in the proceedings of the day? It seems to me that there is no necessity of having reprinted those which have been read into the RECORD.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No, sir; we desire no duplication whatever. We appreciate the suggestion.

The letter was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-20", and is as follows:

> United States District Judge's Chambers, Southern District of Florida, Miami, Florida, July 2, 1930.

Miami, Florida, July 2, 1930.

Honorable Alexander Akerman.

United States District Judge, Tampa, Florida.

My Dear Judge: In the case of Holland et al. vs. Whitehall Building & Operating Company, No. 678—M—Eq., pending in my division, my former law partner, Judge A. L. Rankin, of West Palm Beach, has filed a petition for an order allowing compensation for his services on behalf of the plaintiff.

I do not feel that I should pass, under the circumstances, upon the total allowance to be made Judge Rankin in this matter. I did issue an order, which Judge Rankin will exhibit to you, approving an advance of $2,500.00 on his claim, which was approved by all attorneys.

You will appreciate my position in the matter, and I request you to pass upon the total allowance which should be made Judge Rankin in the premises, as an accommodation to me. This will relieve me from any embarrassment hereafter, if the question should arise as to my favoring Judge Rankin in this matter by an exorbitant allowance.

Appreciating very much your kindness in this matter, I am,

Yours sincerely.

HALSTED L. RITTER.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We would like to recall Mr. A. L. Rankin to the witness stand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the Sergeant at Arms that the witness is in conference with members of the House managers.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Do I understand it is all right to introduce this check which I have shown you?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We have no objection.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer in evidence a check under date of March 9, 1929, drawn on the Park Bank of New York, payable to H. L. Ritter, for the sum of $1,945.23. signed by the Mulford Realty Co., by V. L. or V. S. Mulford, president, and ask that it be given an appropriate number.

(The check was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-21", and is as follows:)

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., March 9, 1929. Park Bank N. Y.

Pay to the order of H. L. Ritter $1,945.23, Nineteen hundred forty-five & 23/100 Dollars.

(Signed) MULFORD REALTY Co., V. S. MULFORD, Prest.

[Endorsed "H. L. Ritter" and cleared through the banks named the endorsement.]

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION OF A. L. RANKIN

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness is before the Senate. Do the managers on the part of the House desire to ask any questions?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I desire to have Mr. Manager Hobbs ask one question, and then I shall proceed.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Judge Rankin, I show you a copy of the letter signed "Charles H. Brodek" under date of August 28, 1931, and ask you to look at it and see if you received the original. If you have the original we would be glad to have you produce it .- A. Yes.

Q. You received the original signed by Mr. Brodek?-A. Yes.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer this letter in evidence.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We have no objection.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We offer this in evidence and ask that it be given an appropriate exhibit number.

(The letter was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-22.")

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I am informed the letter has not been read. I wish now to read it.

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT A-22

AUGUST 28TH. 1931.

Re: Brazilian Court foreclosure.

Re: Brazilian Court foreclosure.

Mr. A. L. Rankin,

Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Dear Mr. Rankin: I have your letter of August 26th, which I have read with the deepest interest.

It happens that Mr. Mulford was compelled to take a rest by order of his physician. He left for a ranch in Wyoming about ten days ago, and I do not expect him back until the end of September.

I do not like to interrupt his rest with matters apt to disturb him, and I should like to hold this question of settlement in abeyance until his return. In the meantime, I shall see Judge Ritter and go into the situation thoroughly with him.

I may consider it advisable for you to come to New York to discuss this matter after Mr. Mulford returns. I do not think it necessary for you to come here in his absence.

Before I see Judge Ritter I will familiarize myself with the authorities cited in your letter so as to be posted as to the strength of D'Esterres' legal position.

With best regards, sincerely yours,

With best regards, sincerely yours,

CHAS. A. BRODEK.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Mr. Rankin, I believe the interveners in the Whitehall case were A. W. Kirkland, of New Hampshire; Eugenia J. Schopps, of Milwaukee; and A. H. Hill, of Alabama. Are you acquainted with either of those parties personally?— A. A. W. Kirkland and A. H. Hill.

Q. Yes; either one of those persons?-A. Yes; I am acquainted with Mr. Hill personally.

Q. Is Mr. Hill related to you?-A. Yes; he is my brother-

Q. You filed for $3,800 of bonds in the name of Mr. Hill?-A. Repeat the question.

in your intervention suit?-A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact did he own those bonds?-A. No. Those bonds were turned over to him by Mr. Bemis.

Q. How did Mr. Bemis happen to turn the bonds over to him?—A. Why did he?

Q. Yes .- A. He turned them over to him so he might intervene in the suit in order to protect the first-mortgage bondholders.

Q. Is that the Mr. Bemis who has been mentioned frequently in this testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it necessary to turn them over to Mr. Hill? Why was it necessary for Mr. Bemis to turn them over to Mr. Hill?—A. Why was it necessary?

Q. Yes. Why did not Mr. Bemis intervene in his own behalf?—A. He was not a nonresident.

Q. Mr. Bemis lived in Florida, did he?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Hill lived in Alabama?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in order to be certain you would be able to retain jurisdiction in the event Holland went out of the suit you wanted another nonresident with $3,000 of bonds?-A. Yes,

Q. Just how was that arranged?-A. I did not catch the question.

Q. How was it arranged for the suit to be brought in the name of Mr. Hill, when as a matter of fact Mr. Bemis owned the bonds?-A. It was arranged in this way. They were trying to dismiss the suit and he thought it was very essential and necessary to have an intervener in there in order to protect the first-mortgage bonds, and he consulted with me and asked me about it, and asked me if I could get someone to take the bonds and use them, and I suggested Mr. Hill.

Q. Mr. Hill never paid anything for the bonds, did he?-A. No; he never paid anything.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is excused. Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, as I understand the entire file in the case of Holland against Whitehall Building & Operating Co. has been by stipulation put in evidence, and counsel for either side may use any statements therefrom.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. As I understand, the entire file in the Highland Glades Drainage case is similarly in evidence subject to the use of either side. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Neither is to be included in the printing of the RECORD?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The same applies to the Trust Co. of Florida and Stephens, trustee, against Brazilian Court? Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Not to be printed, but to be available?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is correct.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The House managers rest their

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Just a moment! Before the case is rested we have some further cross-examination, as the gentlemen know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel for the respondent may proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offered in evidence the statement headed "List of clients of firm of Ritter & Rankin at the time of dissolution of partnership February 15, 1929", and attached thereto an inventory of library and other distributable assets of the former firm. That was objected to on the ground that the amounts under "fees collected" could not be proven by the witness Rankin.

Proof can be made of all the rest of the data on the exhibit, and, of course, this is a vital part of it. I understand that many of these accounts are within the knowledge of the investigators of the honorable House managers.

I might say that these were gathered together by an accountant who resorted to any source from which he could prepared by somebody else.

Q. You filed for $3,800 of bonds in the name of Mr. Hill get the information. Part of it, of course, would be hearsay. For instance, he would call upon a certain client and find out a certain amount had been paid, as explained by the witness Rankin, he having kept no books. We will, of course, produce the accountant, a registered accountant, for cross-examination, and let him be subjected to cross-examination. If he should not be truthful about it he would be subject to the ordinary punishment for any departure there-

> I desire to see if I cannot get a stipulation from the managers on this subject.

> Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, that list, as I understand, differs from two other lists which have been furnished by Mr. Rankin to the managers. The investigator for the House of Representatives has not had an opportunity to go over the list or the accounts or the statement. however counsel for the respondent may designate the document and, of course, we are not in a position to agree

> Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Of course, it has been presented to the honorable managers heretofore; and I believe it is conceded that Mr. Mulherin has some of these items which he has already investigated.

> The reason this statement is here, I may say, Mr. President, and to the honorable Court, is that testimony heretofore has been given from hearsay or from incomplete records; and therefore we think it is of vital importance in proving the contract to show just what the subject matter of it was, so far as the cases on hand were concerned. Unless we can do this, of course, we shall have to ask for subpenas and subpenas duces tecum for the people who paid the money. There are quite a number of them.

> Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I should like to avoid that, and my associates would; but we have this difficulty:

> Mr. Rankin has furnished, on two different occasions, statements of the assets of the firm at the time of dissolution and the collections to be made out of pending business. This is a statement not prepared by Mr. Rankin, as I understand. It is not one for which he is willing to vouch. It is not a statement based upon the books of the firm, but a statement based upon the explorations of somebody who has gone about over the country interviewing various clients. and, from the best information he can get, making up a statement which counsel now offers to present. Naturally, as much as we should like to oblige counsel for the respondent, we cannot agree that that sort of a statement shall be admitted in evidence as showing the facts of which it purports to be evidence.

> Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I concede, of course, that a part of this statement is based on hearsay testimony.

> The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Balley in the chair). And would not be admissible.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). And would not ordinarily be admissible, without an agreement or stipulation. Therefore, if that is the determination, we shall have to ask, as we shall, for a subpena duces tecum on all of the items that we cannot agree upon with Mr. Mulherin, and produce the witnesses.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We should be perfectly willing to accept either of the statements which Mr. Rankin, the surviving partner of the business, has made with regard to the assets of the concern at the time of dissolution, and the fees received from business that was pending at the time of dissolution. Our objection is that the statement now offered, as I understand, was prepared by someone else, and does not agree with the statements which have been made by the parner himself who was conducting the business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that counsel for respondent does not insist that the evidence proposed to be introduced is admissible in its present condition. The Chair understands from the manager on the part of the House that no objection will be taken to testimony from the surviving partner.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Not a bit. We should not like. of course, to have him refresh his memory from a statement

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes it that the managers for the House and the counsel for the respondent may get together and devise some plan whereby time may be saved. The evidence is material, but it is not admissible in its present condition.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I suggest, Mr. President, that Mr. Mulherin, on behalf of the managers on the part of the House, and the gentleman who prepared the statement for the respondent ought to be able to make very definite progress toward agreement. There may be some items in regard to which they cannot agree. The difficulty about admitting a thing of this sort is, naturally, that there is nobody to cross-examine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is satisfied that the evidence is not admissible in its present shape; but the Chair thinks it may be put in proper condition, and he is hoping to avoid the necessity for issuing the subpenas and the further delay which would result.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We shall be glad to cooperate with counsel for the respondent in that regard.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We shall cooperate with the managers on the part of the House; but, to be perfectly frank about the matter, the difficulty is that Mr. Rankin has been unable to give all the items from memory or from any data that he has. When he sees them put down here now, there are items to which he cannot positively swear; so the person you would have to cross-examine, the safeguard you would have, would be the accountant who pursued these matters. He can be aided a good deal by Mr. Salisbury, who was in the office at the time.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Would it not be better to let the matter go over? We cannot agree for the moment anyhow

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). No; I see that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Since the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent cannot agree, and the evidence in its present condition is inadmissible, let us move on to something else by way of crossexamination.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask the managers on the part of the House first if they have agreed that we may put in, without reading them at the present time, the account of expenditures of the moneys received by Mr. Rankin which he turned over to Mr. Mulherin?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is in already. Mr. Manager Sum-NERS agreed with me on that.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). My colleague's recollection is that you have agreed on that. Is there in the RECORD a stipulation to that effect?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I do not know, sir, whether there is or not; but we may make a stipulation now, if you desire. The statement went in. We have agreed that that statement shall go in, subject to any objections that may be raised on either side to any of the items in the statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are you referring now to the statement of account just offered?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No, sir; the statement of expenditures by Mr. Rankin. How would you identify the statement?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The statements are in the printed document of the House investigation, and each statement has been given an exhibit numeral or letter. When I handed them to you I pointed that out, and I think it is in the RECORD.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. What I am asking is, how is it designated, so that we may be sure that we are discussing a stipulation with regard to identically the same thing?

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I see the printed record of exhibits before the subcommittee?

Mr. Managers SUMNERS. I think there is no difficulty about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that a statement by stipulation is to be made and entered in the RECORD. All we wish to do is to identify the statement.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, to save time, I think-perhaps it is a little indefinite-the stipulation we have with counsel for the respondent is that the items in this statement may be admitted as evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In what statement?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is what I am trying to clear up. I am sorry. How do you designate it?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Here is the way they are designated. I think, if I may make a suggestion, it would be well to have the last number of the respondent's exhibits given to me, and I will mark the exhibits here, and strike out the alphabetical designations given in the record of the testimony of the investigating committee. Do you understand that, Mr. Manager Hobes? Here it says "Exhibit E, A. L. Rankin, receipts and disursements of fees", and so forth. Instead of that, if they will give me the number, I will offer them now, and they will be original exhibits in this case. Is that satisfactory, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; if that is the stipulation, let the statement be entered in accordance with the terms of the stipulation.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We offer in evidence the exhibit marked "Exhibit E", appearing on page 843 of the exhibits presented at the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, pursuant to House Resolution 163. We offer this exhibit and ask that it be marked "Respondent's Exhibit 16." It is entitled "Receipts and disbursements of fees from Whitehall Building & Operating Co."

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We have the correspondence from the Sweeny files. As I understand, we can stipulate this far, that the correspondence is the correspondence from the Sweeny files, that there will be no necessity for identifying it as such, and the direction of the letter and the signature may be taken as true. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What do the managers say to that? What is the designation of the correspondence?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The Sweeny correspondence. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be admitted.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg Your Honor's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I made inquiry, and I understood the managers agreed. What do the managers say?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We agree that no proof need be made as to the identity of these letters, that copies may be exhibited from that file just as though they were the originals, and that we will raise no point as to the identity; but we do not agree to the introduction of any one of the letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You reserve your right to object to the admission of any particular letter?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of counsel for the respondent?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. The managers have not had a chance to look at them, and I will be glad to sit up with any of the gentlemen tonight and check over the correspondence, and I am hopeful that then we can agree on the full stipulation which we offered earlier in the day; namely, that they go in the record without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the order is made according to the statement just made by one of the managers and also by counsel for the respondent.

Is there further evidence?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We have only 10 minutes left. Mr. ROBINSON. I assume that counsel for the respondent would not desire to proceed this evening, and the managers have closed their case, so, unless there is objection, I shall move that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would it be agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas for me to ask leave to have an article printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should prefer that the Senator wait until we have a legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

ADJOURNMENT OF IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment stand in adjournment until the hour fixed in the order heretofore entered.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes, p. m.) the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, adjourned, the adjournment being under the order heretofore entered until tomorrow, Friday, April 10, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, to meet for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter tomorrow, Friday, April 10, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord our God is clothed with majesty and power! Heavenly Father, take from us that which hinders the full disclosure of the sweetness, the sacrifice, and symmetry of the Lord of glory. Have mercy on our unworthiness and let us look through the darkness and behold the Light of the coming morning. We would follow in His path with muffled tread and with sad and solemn thought. Teach us what it is that defeats our higher attainment; help us to break through the barriers, where we shall see Thee no more through a glass darkly. Bestow blessings of rest and comfort upon our President, the Speaker, and the entire Congress. Grant that the lowly life of the humble Galilean may inspire us and lift us out of our own. As we approach the tomb in the garden, we pray that more and more abundant Thy Holy Spirit may guide us in the ways of all truth. In the name of our glorified Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 9997. An act granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1936; and

H. R. 11968. An act relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to provide for participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 1362) entitled "An act for the relief of Ramey Bros., of El Paso, Tex., disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Bailey, Mr. Logan, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3806) entitled "An act to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1824. An act for the relief of Abraham Green;

S. 2042. An act for the relief of Grace Park;

S. 2524. An act amending section 112 of the United States Code, Annotated (title 28, subtitle "Civil suits; where to be brought");

S. 2697. An act for the relief of the United Pocahontas Coal Co., Crumpler, W. Va.;

S. 3777. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine; and

S. 4232. An act to create a commission and to extend further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACT

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 2389), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 484

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11687, a bill to amend the Federal Highway Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

COOSA RIVER. GA.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, H. R. 11617, to authorize a preliminary examination of the Coosa River, Ga., and its tributaries with a view to the control of their floods.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this bill been reported regularly out of the committee?

Mr. TARVER. It was favorably reported by the committee, favorably recommended by the Department, and is on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the reason for taking it up out of order?

Mr. TARVER. Very serious flood conditions now exist on the Coosa River, particularly in my district in Georgia, and it is very necessary that this survey be expedited as much as possible.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It provides just a preliminary survey by the War Department?

Mr. TARVER. That is right; by the Board of Engineers. Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill provide for a preliminary survey or a preliminary examination?

Mr. TARVER. It provides for a preliminary examination; that is the language used.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. TARVER. I am not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman would not know how many of these bills are coming along?

Mr. TARVER. No; I have no information on the subject. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby author-Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Coosa River and its tributaries in the State of Georgia, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors. cies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE NATIONAL RESOURCES BOARD BILL

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio speech which I shall make tonight over the Columbia Broadcasting System at 8:45 o'clock on the subject of natural

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I will deliver over the Columbia Broadcasting System, station WJSV, Washington, D. C.:

PRESERVATION OF OUR NATIONAL RESOURCES MOST IMPORTANT SUBJECT FACING AMERICA

Fellow Americans, tonight I am going to talk to you about something that does not concern partisan politics, but concerns your very life. You know of the great floods lately and the teryour very life. You know of the great floods lately and the terrific damage to life and property; you know of the great dust storms; you know about the loss of our land, our trees, and our water. This is very serious—these losses have been caused by us—and can be checked by us. Now, I have introduced a bill before Congress known as the national resources board bill, which, if adopted, will lead to the saving of our resources, protect our lands and forests, give us jobs to the extent of 3,000,000 men, increase property values, and permanently benefit commerce, agriculture, and industry. I repeat, there is no politics in this; this is a question of fundamental economics—or, to use a plain word, of common sense, good business, and grave necessity. And I'm talking to urge your cooperation, and likewise that we all work together to save what we have.

Now, the destruction of national resources—our capital assets—has been going on in many forms and on all sides at an appalling rate. The need of action is urgent, for we are progressively becoming poorer, and the specter of national disaster appears on the horizon. As the land and other resources are ravished, national bankruptcy becomes more threatening.

FIGHT FOR NATIONAL RESOURCES BOARD NONPARTISAN

So I'm talking to you tonight about our natural resources—that is, yours and mine—our rivers, forests, land, water in the air, on the surface of the earth, and in the ground. And I am talking in the interest of this National Resources Board bill, which will in the interest of this National Resources Board bill, which will provide a permanent Government policy to coordinate efforts to promote conservation—wise use—of the resources of the United States. I want no personal credit for it; neither does my party. We want it to be a bill of the people of the United States. I want all of you to join in insisting on a policy—and action—for conservation of natural resources. Write your Congressman about it—not to put pressure on him, for whoever he is, he is a pretty good fellow and resents things like pressure—tell him what you think about the problem of conservation of resources and ask him to vote for the Maverick bill for the establishment of a National Resources Board.

to vote for the Maverick bill for the establishment of a National Resources Board.

But let me try to convince you.

A particular natural resource may belong to a particular individual, but all the resources put together belong to all of us. Our existence depends on them. Their conservation is a concern of every one of us—of you industrial workers and employers, of you merchants and bankers, as well as of you who live upon the land. The basic reality is that Nature's gifts are the foundation of all economic activity and individual incomes. No matter if you live in the finest apartment on earth and have all that money can buy, everything comes out of the ground or the air; we are absorbered. buy, everything comes out of the ground or the air; we are absolutely dependent on our natural resources.

Natural resources are quite the most important things in our lives. As you listen to me, realize that although my thoughts and lives. As you listen to me, realize that although my thoughts and voice are human resources everything that serves to bring my voice to you is made possible by a natural resource. This transmitter and your receiving set are made chiefly of wood and minerals; the electricity that transmits the vibrations comes from coal being burned underneath a boiler, or water rushing through a turbine. The house in which you live, the plaster, wallpaper, and trim in the room in which you sit, come from natural resources—from the ground, directly or by way of trees and vegetables. Everything you wear, from the soles of your shoes to the clothes on your back, everything you eat, comes from a natural resource. Cities, and, of course, our whole Nation, will be destroyed unless we preserve what we have.

EARLY ECONOMIC WRITINGS PROPHETIC

Seventy years ago a writer named Marsh, raising the question of whether the United States would be a permanent country, said that most countries of hilly or rolling surface and seasonal rains gradually lost their fertile soils and in the course of time became nonproductive and like deserts. No one in the United States paid any attention to his question. We went on cutting down our for-ests, turning under our sods, letting rains wash topsoils into the rivers and oceans, letting crops and erosion sap the fertility of our soils. Seventy years later we awaken to the fact that Marsh was a prophet, and that destruction of resources has gone so far that if we are to save ourselves we must act promptly and vigorously.

NATURAL ASSETS HAVE BEEN WASTED

Thinking that there would be plenty of new land for everybody, we have robbed instead of conserved the fertility of our soils. Now there is no more free land; we must preserve what is left and restore what we can. We have cut the best accessible timber, and have carelessly permitted fires and overgrazing to destroy the seedlings that would have reestablished it in Nature's way. By cutting the forests and turning under the sods we have exposed and abused our soils, and have permitted waters to rush more quickly to the seas unused. In their course they have washed the fertile top soils out of reach and use by man, and have increased the horrors and destruction of floods. We have rushed them to the sea so fast that they have not had time to soak into the ground. In that way in some areas the store of water in the ground has been depleted, so that now there is a shortage for farm, factory, and household use.

LARGE FARM AREAS ECCOMING BARREN WASTES

LARGE FARM AREAS BECOMING BARREN WASTES

Let us consider just a few of the high spots of the loss from erosion. The Soil Conservation Service in the Department of Agriculture tells us that 100,000,000 acres of fertile land have already been destroyed for profitable farming—that is an area equivalent to the whole States of Illinois, Ohio, Maryland, and North Carolina combined. They tell us that another 125,000,000 acres are on their way to destruction; and still another 100,000,000 acres are threatened.

WIND AND WATER EROSION-A CONSPIRACY OF RUIN

In 1 year the Mississippi River washes away 400,000,000 tons of soil into the Gulf of Mexico because we do not conserve and protect our lands. A great dust storm in 1 day sweeps 300,000,000 tons of our lands. A great dust storm in 1 day sweeps 300,000,000 tons or rich topsoil off the great wheat plains, again because our lands have not been protected. Wind and water erosion together each year remove 3,000,000,000 tons of soil beyond use, equivalent to the entire average topsoil of the 37,000 farms of the highest type and of 80 acres each. There are gigantic dust bowls over the Nation, and we are now threatened with the creation of great deserts. The money loss of farmers from erosion is estimated at from $400,000,000 a year to $500,000,000 a year. This is all dead loss forever, not like the loss of a bookkeeper's profit, but a permanent loss of life, property, human and natural resources.

EXPENSIVE FLOODS

From the point of view of the destruction caused by floods it is estimated that the loss from the recent floods in the eastern part of the United States is in the neighborhood of $300,000,000.

Let us turn from soils to other resources. Practically half of our forest area has been cleared. I'm told by authorities that it will take only 40 years at the present rate of use to exhaust the high-grade iron ore remaining, that in 20 years it will be hard to find lead and zinc. Our method of exploiting oil and gas is such that gigantic proportions are going to waste. In one field in the United States a billion and a half cubic feet of natural gas is being blown into the air each day just to get a few by-products. Just think, that is about 60 percent more than the average domestic and commercial consumption of natural gas in the United States.

LITTLE WATERS-A LARGE FACTOR

These problems are discussed fully in three of the most important and interesting reports ever published by the Government. In the order of their appearance they are the report of the Mississippi Valley Committee, the report of the National Resources Board, and a recent fascinating report entitled "Little Waters" gotten out by the Soil Conservation Service, Resettlement Administration, and Rural Electrification Administration. Every citizen should read these reports, beginning perhaps with Little Waters, which is short and as interesting as a novel.

THE SOLUTION-PLANNED ECONOMY

What shall we do about the problem indicated by the appalling

What shall we do about the problem indicated by the appalling figures which I gave you a moment ago?

The bill to which I have referred—for the establishment of a national resources board—is one answer to the question. Such a board of five competent full-time men, with a small staff, would devote all its time and ability, first, to gathering all the essential facts from the various scientific departments of the Federal and State governments, from professional groups like the civil and mining engineers, and from the agricultural colleges and experiment stations. These facts it would bring together to get an accurate picture of the situation in perspective. Second, this board would make annual reports to the administration and to the Congress—yes; also to the public—which would include specific recommendations for a program of action with respect to every conservation problem and to every natural area. In these ways legislation by the Congress and execution by the various departments of the administration would be coordinated. The plans and activities of Federal, State, and local governments—units in which you have direct part and influence—could be brought into voluntary interrelation, and the efforts of each would reenforce the efforts of the others. Even individual owners of resources could be shown how to bring their efforts into the program. By such means, and such means only, can a policy of conservation be defined, a program of action carried through, and all be done with maximum results at a minimum expense. results at a minimum expense.

GREAT BENEFITS FROM CONSERVATION PROGRAM

What would be the benefits of a program of conservation? The possibility is so great that it defies calculation in figures. But it does not require much imagination to foresee what kinds of benefits would result and that they would be great.

In the first place, there would be great gain from the prevention of losses and waste, such as those caused by floods and erosion, and by letting oil and gas escape unused. This would amount to billions annually—that much in addition to the national income.

DIRECT BENEFITS OF CONSERVATION

In the second place, there would be direct benefits: The addition of other billions of social income from the use of the assets that now go to waste, the use of the rich soils for agricultural production, the use of the waters for generating hydroelectric power and other services, the use of oil and gas in the numerous profitable ways in which we know how to use them.

Agriculture would benefit; industry would benefit; transporta-tion would benefit; commerce and business would benefit.

These would be progressive benefits as time passes, for each increase in national income would make easier other increases in national income. The results would be widely diffused and affect every one of us favorably. Those who possess properties now declining in value would find them increasing and on the way to restoration, for nothing makes capital values so much as an active, prosperous people on good, safe, fertile land.

New values, incidental to a conservation program would be

New values, incidental to a conservation program, would be created; restoration of streams for recreation, as well as other use; restoration of fish and fowl and other wildlife.

SOLUTION-A NATIONAL RESOURCES BOARD

The first step is to attack the problem firmly with programs that reflect understanding. The best way to take that step is the creation of a national resources board. Fellow Americans, if you are concerned, write a nice letter to your Congressman telling him what you think about the need of such a resources board. Talk it over with your friends and discuss soil erosion, waste of lands and waters, and our forests. Think of it in terms of I ment, prosperity, and the future of our children. Of fight to save our natural resources which God gave us. Think of it in terms of life, employ-Organize and

NATIONAL RESOURCES

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES BOARD IS IMPORTANT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, the conservation of our natural resources is the most important subject before the American people. This is now being recognized all over the United States of America, and the national resource board bill, which I introduced January 16 of this year, H. R. 10303, is receiving widespread support all over the Nation. The President, in a personal letter to me, but which was intended to be given to the public, stated that he-

Entirely approved of the establishment of a National Resources

And said that-

Definite legislation would provide for the continuance of the effective work already done by the present National Resources Committee and its predecessors.

Besides that, the bill has been approved by hundreds of organizations representing, I believe, the interests of practically the whole of America. Let me name a few: The American Society of Planning Officials; Conference on City, Regional, State, and National Planning; American Library Association; American Farm Bureau Federation; American Forestry Association; American Institute of Architects-and dozens of other organizations of all the various professions. I specifically refer you to the hearings before the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives.

In connection with this character of work, the story "Little Waters" is receiving a great deal of favorable comment all over the United States. Among those favorably commenting on it is the San Antonio Evening News, a newspaper printed in my district. The editor of the paper, Hon. M. M. Harris, has written an editorial, which is as follows:

EDITORIAL FROM SAN ANTONIO EVENING NEWS, APRIL 2, 1936, ENTITLED "PROBLEM OF SOIL CONSERVATION"

Basic problem facing the American farmer today is, How cultivate the soil and keep it, too? Toward the solution of that prob-lem, the Federal Government's new agricultural program—em-bodied in the Soil Conservation Act—mainly is directed. To be sure, the landowner must work out his own solution for the most part; about the best the Government can expect to do is to stimulate him to put forth the necessary effort.

Heretofore—as explained in the official publication, "Little Waters"—the average farmer has been robbing the land. He will cultivate a virgin tract until the soil is no longer productive—washed away, rather than exhausted—and then will abandon the old field, or even the entire farm, for a new one.

That process has been going on in Texas for a hundred years and in the older States for two or three times as long. As the Government's experts point out, the people cannot continue indefinitely living on their capital: "We have 125,000,000 consumers definitely fiving on their capital: We have 125,000,000 consumers to feed and clothe. We have been doing the job by using up the sources of materials. Next generation of consumers—possibly 15,000,000 more than we are—must look to this same soil for food and clothing."

Apparently that thought never occurred to the old-fashioned

American farmer. By contrast, the European farmer consistently builds up the soil so that his children may receive it from him as productive as it was when he had it from his father. The Old World farm remains in the family; heretofore the second-generation Americans have moved somewhere else. The trouble now is that there are not enough new places to go.

AMERICAN PEOPLE MUST PLAN CONSERVATION OF RESOURCES

I have talked to you about the national resources board bill and about the book Little Waters, and my purpose in mentioning this is that the American people must and shall have a coordinated plan for the conservation of our resources. If we do not, as has been said over and over again-and as I say again and will continue to say until we do something about it-vast areas will be blown and washed away and our standard of living will sink to that of China. Already, because of soil erosion, in many parts of the United States farm tenantry and share-cropping has been reduced to a much lower standard of living than the peasants of even Central Europe. Some persons who have lived for long periods of time in Japan and China say that there are even now certain sections of our country who have as low a standard as in those countries already. I do not believe this, but the mere statement is alarming. Certainly, it should at least be a warning.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that consideration be given to the establishment of a national resources board at once.

IMMIGRATION

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to discuss one of the most important questions that confronts the American people today—the proper solution of our immigra-

Mr. Speaker, I realize that during the past month or so Members of Congress have received numerous inquiries with reference to the status of certain immigration bills now pending in the House or in the Senate.

Particular reference is had, of course, to the two bills presenting the two schools of thought with reference to immigration in this country. Those two bills are the Kerr-Coolidge bill, so-called, and the Starnes-Reynolds bill, so-called. The Members of the House will recall that in the closing days of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress a resolution was passed, which, in effect, attempted to condone an open violation of the law by certain administrative officers of this country with reference to the lack of enforcement of the immigration laws of this Nation. The resolution requested the Secretary of Labor to furnish to the Congress on or before January 15, 1936, a list of the names, together with the full and complete file of each name and case and all facts pertaining to the same, with reference to the so-called hardship cases to be cared for or provided for under the Kerr-Coolidge bill if that bill should become a law.

The House has taken no action in reference to the socalled Kerr-Coolidge bill. It is being considered at the present time in the Senate. Your attention is invited to the remarks made by Senator REYNOLDS in the Senate on last Friday and Saturday with reference to the so-called hardship cases. The Kerr bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], who is an upright, conscientious, able, and hard-working legislator and one of the most highly respected men in this body. None of the remarks which I shall make today in criticism of the provisions of that bill are in anywise directed in a personal vein toward that very fine gentleman, whom I love and respect very much. My objections are going to be confined to the merits of the bill, and my discussion this morning will be confined to the merits of the bill and also to a discussion of a few of the so-called hardship cases which have been presented to us for study for the purpose of enacting whatever legislation we may deem necessary to remedy the situation.

The Secretary of Labor, under date of January 15, in a letter to the Speaker of the House, said:

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: In accordance with the resolution of the House of Representatives on August 23, 1935, I have the honor to submit:

(a) A list of all cases by number and name in which deporta-tion has been stayed up to and including December 31, 1935; (b) Complete file in each case; (c) Summary of file and report on each case; (d) Report of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Very truly yours,

FRANCES PERKINS Secretary of Labor.

Then follows a 10-page brief by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization urging the Congress to enact the Kerr-Coolidge bill in order to take care of the so-called hardship cases. This bill has been presented to the country as one which will strengthen our deportation laws, provide relief for hardship cases, and provide against the separation of families.

To the contrary, this bill does not strengthen the deportation laws and is objectionable because it attempts to place in the hands of a departmental committee the right and authority to nullify an act of Congress and the plain mandatory provisions of the law with reference to deportation of criminal aliens and undesirable aliens in this country. Instead of strengthening the law and providing for the removal of 20,000 aliens in this country, as the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization said in his remarks before the Senate Immigration Committee during the past month, it expressly provides for keeping in this country the 2,862 cases which are now mandatorily deportable and which he has refused to deport over a period of almost 3 years.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I prefer to conclude my statement; then I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Speaker, the Kerr-Coolidge bill would legalize illegal entries. It would permit aliens who are not now eligible for citizenship to become eligible for citizenship. It would condone the violation of our immigration laws and reward that violation by conferring the right of American citizenship upon aliens who are not now entitled to that consideration. It is my view that the immigration question is one that should be solved primarily for the benefit of the country at large; and such laws should be enacted to protect the working standards, the social and living conditions, the economic life, and the political structure of the country passing the law. That is my conception of an immigration law and the purpose for which it should be enacted. It should not be enacted for the benefit of a criminal class, nor the benefit of an alien group, nor the benefit of alien thought, nor those who are alien in character and alien in life to our standards of moral and economic life.

Mrs. O'DAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. In just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I want it expressly understood that in my remarks I make no reflection upon any Member of this House. I cast no reflection upon any immigrant coming to our shores for the purpose of becoming an American citizen. I take this view of the question: That so long as we are able to restrict immigration and select the proper seed for immigration, we shall always have room in this country, at least for the next century, for the right type and class of immigration. I want that clearly understood. I want it understood also that I am not an alien baiter. But I do stand first, last, and always for the protection of American life, American institutions, and American working conditions. [Applause.]

The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization told the members of a committee in the House and the members of a committee in the Senate that not one single one of these so-called hardship cases involved any crime or involved moral turpitude. He said they have been gone over time and time again in his department with a fine-tooth comb and that there was not a taint in a single case. I want to make the statement here that not one single solitary file has been sent to the House committee nor to the House of Representatives. as was ordered by the O'Day resolution which was passed in the closing days of the first session.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES. I would prefer to finish my statement, and then I shall be happy to yield.

A brief summary of each case has been sent to us, but the actual files are physically in the Department of Labor, where they have been since the beginning, and I make the statement here that these summaries do not contain the whole truth with reference to these cases. They do not set out the entire facts.

I make the further statement, after a personal examination during the past 2 days of the files of the cases in the Department of Labor, that the files I examined down there do not contain all the papers or all the facts pertaining to these particular cases.

Let me cite just a few of these cases, because the time I have is very brief and I think you are entitled to the information. You are entitled to see whether the social life of America is affected, whether the moral conditions of living in America are affected, whether or not the wage earner and the relief burden are affected by any of these so-called hardship cases.

I shall not call the names. I shall not embarrass the people involved by calling any names, but I have here a brief summary of each of the cases I shall discuss. This summary was filed with the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization for the use of the committee as requested by the O'Day resolution.

In this particular case I will consider the two parties involved together, because they have been going sweetly along the primrose way through the years, and let you decide for yourselves in this particular case whether or not the summary speaks decisively on this question:

Date of entry: December 28, 1926.

Whether previously in the United States: No.

Total period in United States to December 1935: Approximately 10 years.

The address is given and the names of the dependent relatives in this country are given.

Is there any public charge: No.

Self-supporting: Supported by paramour.

Period on relief: Never on relief.

Grounds for deportation: Not in possession of unexpired immigration visa at time of entry into the United States.

Unfavorable factors of reports: Living out of wedlock with paramour; * * * father of her three illegitimate children.

Now, what do we find when we go to the Department of Labor and look into the files on Gabriel and Romana? It was almost a Romeo and Juliet affair, and as we go into it I want to show you the philosophy of this so-called hardship case, their philosophy of life, their living conditions and social conditions, and see whether you agree with Mr. MacCormack when he states that no crime involving moral turpitude is involved and that it would be to the benefit of America and her citizenship to admit for permanent entry and citizenship in this country this Romeo and Juliet.

Here are the additional facts I found in the Department of Labor.

These aliens entered the United States of America illegally. They were not in possession of an unexpired immigration visa and were not inspected.

The male in the case, Gabriel, claims to have lived in the United States from 1921 to 1923, when he returned to Mexico. He again entered the United States in 1926.

Now listen to this—this is in the record:

He entered the United States for an immoral purpose and admits he has been guilty of perjury.

He brought with him his Romana, who also entered the country illegally for an immoral purpose.

When asked why he had not married Romana, listen to this—I do not know whether the Commissioner wants him in here because he wants this philosophy of social living to predominate in this country or not, but I want you to listen to this philosophy of Gabriel:

When two people who are not married live together, it is because they like to do so. When they are married, it is because they have to do so. If they are not married and do not like each other, then they can quit.

Two illegitimate children have been born to Romana and Gabriel down where the cactus grow and where the winds sweep over the deserts from the high places. This is one of the so-called hardship cases.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES. I shall be happy to yield.

Mrs. O'DAY. May I ask where this poetical quotation comes from?

Mr. STARNES. It is in the Department of Labor.

Mrs. O'DAY. Is it the Secretary's record or is it the record that comes with the case?

Mr. STARNES. It is the record that comes with the case in the file in the Secretary's office.

Mrs. O'DAY. All the records that come with a case have to be filed. The gentleman is not holding Miss Perkins or Mr. MacCormack responsible for this bit of poetry?

Mr. STARNES. May I say to the gentlewoman from New York that I asked the Assistant Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization for information as to how these cases were apprehended, and he stated that we do not have all the papers in the cases, because for certain reasons of state some of the matters would likely lead to drastic action or illegal action on the part of the alien affected. We are trying to protect the citizens who gave us the reports on the cases.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the good people of the United States owe the distinguished and able gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes] a debt of gratitude for the splendid work he has done and is doing on immigration problems. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that if we had in the Immigration Service a Commissioner, or in the Department of Labor a Secretary, who was not in favor of deportation, that under the Kerr-Coolidge bill they could keep from deporting almost anyone?

Mr. STARNES. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. They would be the ones to decide the cases, would they not?

Mr. STARNES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And is it not a fact that for the last 2 or 3 years the number of cases deported have materially decreased every year?

Mr. STARNES. Certainly.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Is it not a fact that of these 2,860 cases the gentleman speaks of most of them are now on relief?

Mr. STARNES. There is a certain percentage of them receiving relief. According to the report filed by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, there are now 13 percent, or 360 cases, on relief.

Mr. CURLEY. Is it not a fact that the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled War Veterans of the World War, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America, and 110 other patriotic American organizations are opposed to the Kerr-Coolidge bill?

Mr. STARNES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. STARNES. For just one more question.

Mr. BLANTON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that some of these aliens are supported by their paramour and some are on relief?

Mr. STARNES. Some of them are. Now, let me read from two other cases.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?
Mr. STARNES. Not just now. I will yield later. Here is another case. I want the House to see whether these facts furnished by the Immigration Commissioner warrant the retention of this particular person and whether it would add to the moral life of the American Nation.

This woman entered the United States from Mexico in 1915 and lived in the United States until August 1931, when she returned to Mexico. On her attempted return to the United States some time later she was excluded because she admitted commission of a crime involving moral turpitude. She admitted having lived with a man not her husband in an open, notorious, and illicit relationship in 1930. She was excluded from entering the United States in 1932 and 1933. The father of this woman, at the time of his alleged marriage to her mother, was the husband of another woman. Her mother is an alien. She is an illegitimate. At the present time she is at large on her own recognizance.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter upon which the gentleman is speaking, and I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want to know whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes] will answer a question from some one other than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]?

Mr. STARNES. I shall yield to the gentleman from New York in a moment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, this woman admits that she has been guilty of open, notorious, and illegal cohabitation prior to her entry. The grounds of deportation in her case were given correctly in the report sent to us. She has been convicted of bootlegging, and has three children, two legitimate and one illegitimate, and here is where certain details from the files are missing. She was questioned on examination, on her hearing before the immigration authorities at the border. She was confronted with certain affidavits made by people who knew her, who accused her of running a disorderly house, and of having illicit relationship with negroes and Chinese. The Members of Congress are entitled to the facts in this case, and the country is entitled to the facts, before we pass upon it.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I am sure that my friend wants the record to be correct with reference to the American Federation of Labor. I read those hearings on the Coolidge bill. The American Federation of Labor turned this question of the Coolidge bill over to a committee of the federation, and that committee reported back, and Mr. Hushing told the Coolidge committee just what the position of the federation They are in favor of the bill with the exception of one section, which I think is section 4.

Mr. STARNES. When Mr. Hushing and others appeared before the House committee they were absolutely opposed to the bill. Mr. MacCormack has lobbied consistently and persistently with the American Federation of Labor for a period of a year or a year and a half.

Mr. CONNERY. In reference to this particular bill?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the words be taken down.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STARNES. Yes. Mr. CONNERY. The American Federation of Labor, as the gentleman states, appeared before the House committee and opposed the bill. We have had the Coolidge hearing since that time. The American Federation of Labor turned it over to a committee of the Federation to look into the bill, and then Mr. Hushing gave the report of the Federation before the Coolidge committee.

Mr. STARNES. The committee was appointed at Miami, Fla., I understand, and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization last summer went to Atlantic City to lobby for this bill with the American Federation of Labor. He performed the same function at Miami, Fla. Not only that, but he has been all over the United States of America making speeches for the Kerr-Coolidge bill. He has refused to deport aliens from this country who are mandatorily deportable under the present law, saying to the people of this country and to the Congress that the present laws are cruel, harsh, barbarous, inhumane, and unworthy of American civilization.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SISSON. I ask the gentleman whether he objects to either or any of sections 1, 3, 4, and 5 of the Kerr bill; and if so, with what, if anything, he would replace it?

Mr. STARNES. The minority views which I prepared for the members of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee of the House in opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill set out specifically my objections to those sections, and I refer the gentleman to those, and if he will read the Reynolds-Starnes bill, he will find how I would treat that very

Mr. SISSON. I have read them both and fail to find what the gentleman says. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. STARNES. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. We all appreciate, I think, that there must be cases where there ought to be deportation, but does the gentleman take the position that all of the so-called twothousand-six-hundred-and-odd cases are to be mandatorily deported, and does the gentleman suspect or fail to trust the good faith, patriotism, and good judgment of the heads of the Department of Labor, the Department of State, and the Department of Justice, who would create an interdepartmental commission under which this act, as a comprehensive act, would be administered?

Mr. STARNES. In reply to that, I have never taken the position that we should mandatorily deport innocent children or cases where there is a genuine hardship involved, on the floor of the House, in the committee, or elsewhere. I do not question the patriotism and the sound judgment of the heads of those various departments, but I do question the wisdom and the judgment of a policy that will substitute personal and indefinite administration and personal government for positive, written law, with guaranties provided by the Constitution and by the acts of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STARNES. Now, I have answered a half a dozen questions for the gentleman. Let me give you two more

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one more question, and I shall not bother him any further? Mr. STARNES. Very well.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman not appreciate the great difficulty of legislating by means of what would affect the private files of thousands and thousands of cases? Does not the gentleman make a distinction between legislative functions and administrative functions? Has not our party consistently recognized that distinction in other legislation as well as this? Does not the gentleman appreciate the enormous difficulty that would devolve upon either a committee of the Congress or upon Congress if every individual case had to be taken up in the manner which the gentleman's legislation would require?

Mr. STARNES. I think if these files had been brought here where they could have been handled by a subcommittee of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of this Congress, they could possibly have reviewed every one of those cases, and could have separated the wheat from the chaff and we could have had remedial legislation.

Now, I do not wish to yield further.

There has been an air of secrecy surrounding these cases. That is unfortunate. It is unfortunate for the alien, it is unfortunate for the Department, and unfortunate for the country. Now, let me give you two more cases.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman refuses to yield further?

Mr. STARNES. The gentleman has asked me to yield for two questions. I have answered half a dozen for him. I cannot give the gentleman all of my time. Now, I want to give you a mental case.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. My time is so limited—
Mr. CONNERY. I just want to suggest to the gentleman that he get a statement from President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, giving the position of the American Federation of Labor on this matter.

Mr. STARNES. May I say to the gentleman that the representatives of that group have appeared both before the House and the Senate Immigration Committee. I am satisfied to take their statements. If they are making a change, that is their prerogative; but when they appeared before the House committee they appeared in opposition to this bill, and I have their written statements to that effect.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has not yet expired.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then I ask unanimous consent that when the gentleman's time does expire that it may be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, we want to get along with another bill here today. We cannot take too much time on this matter. I shall have to object for the present.

Mr. STARNES. Now, I want to give you a case of one who entered this country last on August 12, 1929. She had never been previously in the United States; never on relief; no public charge. The grounds for deportation were that she was a person likely to become a public charge at the time of entry, and she had one or more attacks of insanity prior to her entry. The records of the case disclose that in less than 2 years after she entered this country she was in one of the institutions for treatment of the insane in the State of California. Evidently the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization thinks it would improve the mental status of the citizens of California to permit this alien to remain in the country.

What are some of the facts as disclosed by the files in the Department of Labor upon examination there? This woman has an alien husband. He has attempted to become an American citizen and has taken out his first papers since deportation proceedings were started against her, in order to hold her in this country. The superintendent of the hospital where she has been confined has this to say about her, and I quote:

Her mental upset was the form of insanity known as manic depressive. She had one attack in Germany prior to her coming to this country. She will undoubtedly continue to have attacks from time to time throughout her life. As she grows older these attacks will be more frequent, and the usual result is that eventually they become cases that require continuous hospitalization.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] has expired.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 477.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 477

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3483, an act to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute amendment and any other amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ransley].

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule, providing 2 hours of general debate for the consideration of the rural electrification bill, a subject with which all Members are familiar, and a matter which has been considered during the past 2 years.

As I understand, the bill provides for a 10-year program for bringing electricity to the rural communities of America. Of the 6,800,000 farms, only about 800,000 have electrical facilities. This bill would provide for loans to furnish those facilities to at least a million farmers. It would put a great number of people to work and increase business and industry in the materials used.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Miller].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the enactment of this bill will probably do more to raise the standard of living and to abolish the difference in the standards of life between urban and rural people in this Nation than any other legislation that can be enacted.

We are facing a situation in this Nation in which the condition of life in our rural communities has been neglected. The public utilities, particularly the electric utilities of this Nation, have been allowed to take the cream of the resources at the expense of the American people, at the expense of the people to whom these public resources belong.

The bill which is made in order by the rule now under consideration does nothing except to provide a means whereby rural electrification may be made possible. We still have the question of rates to deal with, we still have the question of the public interest in the communities to deal with. The thing I am most interested in is seeing money provided whereby these rural communities through cooperative effort, through cooperative organizations, or municipalities through cooperative organizations may have an opportunity to obtain the money to furnish electricity to these communities and people. That is all the bill does. There is no grant or subsidy in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is it necessary to have a 10-year program? Why carry it over such a long period of time?

Mr. MILLER. I am rather of the opinion, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that any program dealing with a question as great as this particular question cannot be tested under 10 years. I concede, of course, that this is a matter of opinion, and I say to the gentlemen very frankly that if these facilities are made available, and the people of this Nation do not utilize them, do not take advantage of them, there is no reason why the law should not be amended. As I have stated, we are not offering anybody a grant, we are not offering anybody a subsidy; by this bill we are simply offering the people who live on farms, who live in rural communities, a chance to obtain this service. [Applause.]

The plan incorporated in this bill is its cornerstone. Other nations have provided for the electrification of their farm homes largely because those nations adopted and followed a plan. There is no reason why the farm homes of our Nation cannot be electrified the same as has been done in Holland, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and other foreign countries. Ninety percent of the farm homes of Japan are electrified and France will have 90 to 95 percent of her farm homes electrified by 1940. This has only been possible because those governments had the courage to adopt a plan.

Heretofore our Government has given very little attention to the promotion of the welfare of the rank and file of our people. We have been content to sit idly by and permit our public resources to be exploited by individuals with the result that the cream of those resources have been developed at the expense of the American people in general.

There is no reason why the farmers of America should not have the conveniences, accommodations, and comforts which are a part of the modern electrified home. The present administration's power program has done more to reduce electric light and power rates than has ever been done by any administration in the history of our Nation. The average citizen is entitled to enjoy a more liberal use of electricity, and the wives and children on our farms are entitled to the use of electrical appliances in order that drudgery may be lifted from their lives.

Our people are demanding a further and fuller development of the power program of this administration. A yardstick has been established by the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority to measure the cost of electric service in the farm homes. This cost is within the reach of all.

Gentlemen who are opposing this bill argue that the Government should not engage in business. No one wants to place the Government in business in opposition to the citizen, and I am just as much opposed to the Government being in business as is anyone, but there are certain kinds of business in which the Government must engage in order that the general welfare of our people may be promoted.

A most important business is that of the production and sale of electric energy. Individuals have formed great corporations during the last few years and have exploited the natural resources which belong to all our people in such a way that the average citizen is being denied the ordinary comforts of living insofar as being able to enjoy the use of electricity in his home is concerned. The citizens of my own State are paying a yearly tribute to the Power Trust of $4,157,000 a year in excess of what they should be required to pay for the same service.

On January 1, 1935, there were 253,013 farms in Arkansas. Only 2,943 were using electric energy. Thus, a percentage of 1.2 percent of the farms in Arkansas were supplied with electric energy, notwithstanding the fact that the State is the home of the Arkansas Power & Light Co., and notwithstanding the further fact that that corporation and corporations connected with it have built dams on the streams in Arkansas and are producing electric energy at a cost to it which would enable it to sell the power to our people at such rates as would enable them to enjoy these comforts of life.

Over 5,000,000 farms in our Nation are entirely without electric service. Less than 6 percent of the farms in the Mississippi Valley have electricity, and unless the Federal Government assumes active leadership, assisted by State and local agencies, the situation cannot, and will not, be remedied.

White River flows through the district which I have the honor of representing. The Mississippi Valley committee, in discussing the development of the White River Basin, says:

Power development is highly important on White River. There are numerous valuable hydroelectric sites in the mountains which could be developed to meet future demands. It has been estimated approximately three-quarters of a million horsepower can ultimately be developed.

In the report of the Secretary of War, House Document 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session, it is said:

Investigation of the water-power possibilities of the White River and tributaries shows that a total of 249,622 kilowatts (332,743 horsepower), of which 226,100 kilowatts (303,200 horsepower) is available 90 percent of the time, can be economically developed on a basis of a sale value of 8 mills for 90 percent time power, and 2 mills for 60 percent of a secondary power, providing a market, which is not at present available, can be obtained.

The reason why a market for electric energy is not available is because of the prohibitive rates charged by private corporations. The Mississippi Valley Committee, in discussing this very question, said:

Several reasons might be advanced to explain why only 10 percent of the Nation's farms (less than 6 percent in the Mississippi Valley) purchase electricity. These are the lack of interest by operating or the Nation's farms (less than 6 percent in the Mississippi variety) purchase electricity. These are the lack of interest by operating companies in rural electrification, high cost of line construction because of the unnecessarily expensive type of line used, onerous restrictions governing rural line extensions, and high rates.

The investigation already made by the Rural Electrification Administration shows that rural distribution lines may be built at an average of $1,000 per mile, and to amortize this cost in 20 years involves a cost to each of three consumers on a mile of line of about $1 per month.

I know the people of my district. I know that they are industrious and progressive. I know that they are anxious to improve their living conditions and that they want to use electric energy in their homes, but they are not able to use it under conditions that exist at present. I do not want my people to continue to pay a tribute to the Power Trust of this Nation. I want to see our Government enter this field and give to our people an opportunity to buy electric energy at rates which they can afford to pay. If the operating companies will not voluntarily reduce their rates in accordance with the T. V. A. yardstick, then the Government has no other alternative except to build plants for the creation of electric energy. This can be done in my district, and enough energy can be produced there to supply not only the State of Arkansas but portions of Missouri and Oklahoma.

It seems to me that this is the only feasible way for our Government to free our people of the monthly tribute that we are paying to the Power Trust. If this policy is carried out, instead of 1 farm out of every 100 being served with electricity, we will soon have at least 90 percent of the farms in Arkansas electrified.

This bill is one that should have the support of everyone who is interested in the preservation to our people of the natural resources of our Nation and in the development of those resources for the benefit of the people.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Knurson] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under permission, very graciously given me by the House, I herewith insert an address delivered by me before the John Ericsson Club of Elgin, Ill., on the evening of April 1:

JOHN ERICSSON

Mr. Chairman and fellow Americans, to me it is a very great indeed, to have received, as I have, an invitation to be you and to say a few words upon this happy occasion when we have assembled to pay a deserved tribute to one of Svea's greatest sons, John Ericsson, inventor, patriot, and one of the savers of our American Union.

I am particularly pleased over the fact that I am in the district of my good friend Chauncy Reed, who so ably represents you in Congress. In the comparatively short time that Mr. Reed has been a Member of the Nation's lawmaking body he has, by zeal and industry, gained for himself substantial and well-earned recognition from the leaders in the House of Representatives in Wash-tion from the leaders in the House of Representatives in Washington.

There is another reason, and a personal one, why I am happy to be here this evening: My father's people settled in the Fox River Valley in the early days, and while it so happens that he was born in a foreign land, he had the honor and privilege of casting his first vote for Gen. U. S. Grant, as the Republican candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Since my early boyhood days I have heard my father tell how, back in the period following the Civil War, he hauled wood into Aurora. It is my recollection that the family post office was Naperville.

But let us pay a word of tribute to the great man in honor of whose memory we are assembled here this evening. Sweden, the birthplace of John Ericsson, has produced many men and women who rank high in the sciences, the arts, in industry, and agriculture. Sons of Svea have written their names in letters that are imperishable, but of all the sons of the northland I know of none ture. Sons of Svea have written their names in letters that are imperishable, but of all the sons of the northland I know of none who has contributed more to the cause of human progress than did John Ericsson, that modest genius whom we honor today. I think we are aware of the fact that every great emergency brings forth its own leader. Gustavus Adolphus, Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Logan were such men, and among that great galaxy the name of John Ericsson stands out in letters of living light. So long as the American heart beats true to the rhythm of patriotism, the name of this great inventor and patriot shall never be forgotten. It has been so in our lifetime, and it will so continue in the future. It was my privilege and pleasure a few years ago to attend the dedication ceremonies of the beautiful statute erected in Washington to the memory of John Ericsson.

years ago to attend the dedication ceremonies of the beautiful statute erected in Washington to the memory of John Ericsson. The speakers on that impressive occasion were President Coolidge and Crown Prince Gustaf Adolph, who had come to our country as the representative of King Gustaf and the Swedish Government. The chairman of the occasion was my good friend, former Congressman Carl R. Chindblom, of Chicago. I shall never forget the memorable address of President Coolidge and his marvelous tribute to Americans of Swedish ancestry, and especially to the memory of that distinguished citizen whom we have gathered memory of that distinguished citizen whom we have gathered here this evening to honor.

It was John Ericsson's inventive feat that saved the Union. This great Swedish-American stands out as one of the foremost engineers and inventors of all time. At the age of 26, while the engineers and inventors of all time. At the age of 26, while in England, he constructed a steam locomotive which attained the speed of 28 miles an hour in successful competition with Stevenson's Rocket. There Ericsson also invented the screw propeller, which was destined to revolutionize commerce by sea. It has been well said that this invention drew the four corners of the earth closer together. Through the use of the screw propeller, journeys that had taken weeks were reduced to days.

that had taken weeks were reduced to days.

But it was in his new home, America, when the clouds of civil strife had settled over the land, and the very Union seemed in danger of dissolution, that John Ericsson was to perform his greatest inventive feat, one which brought needed assistance and new hope to the Nation in one of its darkest hours.

It was in the winter of 1861-62 that the Confederates had captured the navy yard at Norfolk and the frigate Merrimac, whose sides and deck they covered with iron to make her the first armored cruiser in history.

Early in the spring of 1862, the Merrimac attacked the Union fleet of wooden vessels, in Hampton Roads, sank the Cumberland, and compelled the Congress to strike its flag in surrender.

The North was appalled. The harbor of New York, and even the Capital city of Washington, it seemed, were at the mercy of this new iron monster. The Union blockade of Confederate ports, so essential to ultimate victory, was threatened by this new dreadnaught, and the situation was rendered less comfortable because the Union armies had met with serious reverses on land.

It was in this dark hour that John Ericsson came forward with his Monitor, that doughty little vessel which changed the trend his Monitor, that doughty little vessel which changed the trend of the war and made new naval history. Sometime previously, Mr. Ericsson had written to President Lincoln, offering to construct "a vessel for the destruction of the hostile fleet at Norfolk, and for scouring southern rivers and inlets protected by southern and for scouring southern rivers and inlets protected by southern batteries." He declared further, in his letter, that "attachment to the Union alone impels me to offer my services at this frightful crisis—my life if need be—in the great cause which Providence has caused you to defend. It is not for me, sir, to remind you of the immense moral effect that will result. Nor need I allude to the effect in Europe, if you demonstrate that you can effectively drive hostile fleets away from our shores."

Captain Ericsson was commissioned to build the Monitor, a turreted iron-clad that should carry one gun of great caliber. She sat low in the water. Her hull was arched at the top and pointed at each end, while the turret rose in the center and rotated on ball bearings. The one gun could thus be brought to bear on any object.

While guns were roaring around Norfolk and the Union fleet seemed doomed, Lt. John L. Worden sailed in the tiny Monitor for the scene of action. When the vessel reached Hampton Roads and was sighted by the Confederates they greeted her with jeers, and called her "A Yankee cheese box on a raft." The Merrimac sailed proudly forth to complete her work of destruction. But the Confederate Goliath was met by a new David. The Monitor proved more than a match for the towering Merrimac which fled for cover and was finally run sehors and destroyed. Shouts of proved more than a match for the towering Merrimac which fied for cover, and was finally run ashore and destroyed. Shouts of exultation rose in the North, for the ports and shipping of the Union were saved. From this small but all important beginning began the modern American Navy. It is John Ericsson and his Monitor to whom the people of the United States owe a lasting debt of gratitude, and they have not forgotten it. Indeed, if the perpetuity of American institutions and of constitutional government remains the greatest achievement in the history of civilization, then no one can properly estimate the debt we owe to that tion, then no one can properly estimate the debt we owe to that great man.

And for the moment let us note that Capt. John Ericsson's modesty and unselfishness were as great as his genius and his patriotism. In his later years he wrote to one of our United States Senators: "Nothing could induce me to accept any remuneration from the United States for the Monitor, once presented by me as my contribution to the glorious Union cause, the triumph of which freed 4,000,000 bondsmen."

of which freed 4,000,000 bondsmen."

In order to suitably commemorate the outstanding services of John Ericsson to his adopted country, I introduced a bill in Congress to name the bridge over the Potomac which connects the Lincoln Memorial, erected to perpetuate the memory of that great son of Illinois, Abraham Lincoln, and the Arlington National Cemetery where are interred the remains of our Nation's heroes, the John Ericsson Memorial Bridge. While I did not succeed in my attempt, I at least had the satisfaction of reminding the American people of the great debt that they owe to that outstanding character, John Ericsson, whose memory will live on so long as the human race endures.

standing character, John Ericsson, whose memory will live on so long as the human race endures.

Let me pause for a moment to tell you that it would not be fair to say that Sweden's claim upon this country began and ended with John Ericsson, great as his achievements turned out to be. There are the services of other sturdy men and women of the European northland, to America; their contribution to its development and growth date from the beginning of our history. It was back in 1638 that the Swedish colony of Delaware was established, and an early historian tells us that the colonists of this settlement built America's first flour mill, its first brick-yard, its first ships, and our first roads. History records that the sons of Delaware did their full part in the War of Independence, and in the establishment of the Union. One of the signers of the Declaration of Independence was John Morton, or Mortonson, nor should it be forgotten that the first President of the United States, when Congress assembled in 1781, was John Hanson, who afterward installed George Washington as first President to be chosen under the Constitution. under the Constitution.

When restriction on emigration was removed by Sweden in

When restriction on emigration was removed by Sweden in 1843, a tidal wave of immigrants from that country set in, and it is estimated that the Swedish people and their descendents in our country now exceed 2,000,000. They are numbered among our finest and sturdiest citizens. Moving over the eastern mountains they penetrated our Northern and Central States, cleared the forests and cultivated the land until it blossomed as the rose. With an implicit faith in the Almighty, with dauntless courage, and a determination that knew neither fear nor questioning, they conquered an inland wilderness and made of it the bread-and-butter basket of the world.

I could go on and on naming outstanding men and women who

I could go on and on naming outstanding men and women who participated in this great work of making midland America what it is today, but time will not permit my doing so. I may say in passing, however, that these citizens from the European northland ever been true and loyal to America, and have occupied with credit and distinction places in both Houses of Congress, and the executive chairs in some of our finest States. They have attained outstanding success in agriculture, in business, the sciences, and in the arts. Wherever these fair-naired sons and daughters have gathered, they have founded communities of faith, of loyalty, of industry, and of honor. With them the church, the home, and the school have been tenets of their supreme faith in God and in humanity.

But times have changed, my friends. No longer, as in Ericsson's day, is this great Union of ours in danger of dissolution. The North and the South, the East and the West have become one great

We are confronted, however, with new problems. The question no longer one of union or disunion, but whether there shall be is no longer one of union or disunion, but whether there shall be perpetuated in Washington a giant bureaucracy, whose tentacles shall reach beyond State lines, drawing all enterprise and all wealth under the control of a huge Federal autocracy. Is regimentation to take the place of initial enterprise? Are thrift and native ability to be succeeded by a vast paternalism, the like of which has never been known on this continent?

As I look into your faces tonight, I am convinced that the answer is going to be a thunderous "No" that can be heard even to the banks of the Potomac, where there is no longer a host of the defenders of our liberty but an army of officeholders which seeks to give us paternalism in the place of liberty.

Let me add that a great number of our Swedish immigrants came here during and immediately after the great Civil War. Believing, as they did, in the sacred cause of freedom, it was only natural that they should affiliate themselves with the Republican Party. Their love for liberty was inherent. Even today, while the mother country is in theory a monarchy, its government is in every meaning of the word a democracy where the people still enjoy all the blessings of constitutional government.

Since this is true, it is but natural that our citizens of Swedish birth and ancestry view with misgivings the present trend toward autocratic government. They yet believe in the blessed privileges of a balanced constitutional government, which, in the short space of a century and a half, has brought America from a fringe of 13 struggling colonies on the Atlantic coast to the richest and potentially the most powerful nation on the globe. They realize that the Constitution is the greatest bill of rights ever contrived by the mind of man. They appreciate the broad principles on which it was founded and, while admitting, as we all do, that it is a growing document which may be modified from time to time to suit the growth and needs of the Nation, they will be the first to denounce as an infamous falsehood any suggestion that it has served its purpose and outlived its usefulness.

It is true, my friends, that our Government is not perfect—nothing human ever is But our present deville are due not to

It is true, my friends, that our Government is not perfect—nothing human ever is. But our present-day ills are due, not to the Constitution, which has served us long and well, but rather to human imperfections. It is true also that we are in the midst of a depression, that we have been in one since 1929, one so great that the expenditure of eight or nine billions of the taxpayers money each year has not shown us the way out.

This depression, however, came not from constitutional government, but from the false expansions and dislocations caused by the World War—the very war which the Democrats promised to keep us out of in 1916. Thus depression fell on all nations alike, on autocracy as well as democracy.

In the days of feverich prosperity, during and following the autocracy as well as democracy.

In the days of feverish prosperity during and following the World War too many of us foolishly thought that there would be no end to the prosperity we then enjoyed. Wages of a dollar or a dollar and a half an hour were not uncommon. Nor was it a rarity to hear a workingman boast that he had paid $20 for a silk shirt. We forgot the lessons of thrift, of self-abstinence handed down to us by the fathers who made America great. We failed to put aside for a rainy day and when the storm broke it found far too many of us unprepared.

It is only human that man refuse to shoulder the blame for his own folly but rather cry out against someone else. Many his own folly but rather cry out against someone else. Many of those who were caught in the storm now blame the Constitution and the capitalistic system for their misfortunes. But let us assure you, my friends, that the remedy lies not in quack med-icines and crackpot theories, but in the application of time-tried principles of sound judgment.

We have heard of late the slogans "America is at the crossroads" and "America must choose." But let us not be influenced or impressed with these catch phrases. Let us not submerge our inde-pendent judgment in a wave of mob psychology calculated to put over another 4-year plan of the New Deal.

Some of the professorial philosophers tell us that the "old rder" is to blame for our economic ills, and that we must deorder" is to blame for our economic ills, and that we must destroy that old order and build anew some sort of socialistic state so that the "forgotten man" may enter into the more "abundant life." They neglect to state that this great country of ours was built under the old order, the order of constitutional government; they fail to say that as Americans we have more comforts for the average man, a wider distribution of wealth than any other nation on earth has had at any time in the world's history. But to enjoy these comforts, these privileges of being an American, we must earn them. They cannot be given to us free of effort by a paternalistic government, controlled by semisocialistic university professors or demagogic politicians.

We hear much said too, about the necessity for destroying the

We hear much said, too, about the necessity for destroying the capitalistic system. But what is capital? It is crystalized human perspiration; it embraces the right to work for profit; to own perspiration; it embraces the right to work for profit; to own property, to work one's way from employee to boss. Show me a better way, my friends, and I will embrace it, but I can assure you that the road to progress does not lead to Moscow.

We are at the beginning of another important political campaign. As I said a few moments ago we are faced with the choice of continuing our balanced system of constitutional government, with its individual initiative or choosing a Federal bureaucracy which shall cover the whole Nation with its blighting hand.

In 1932, suffering the keen pangs of the greatest depression of the century, the American voters elected Franklin D. Roosevelt on a Democratic platform. This platform, reinforced by the words of the candidate. promised to the American people retrenchment of the candidate, promised to the American people retrenchment in the interest of a returning prosperity. Governmental boards and commissions were to be abolished until the cry of bureaucracy and commissions were to be abolished until the cry of bureaucracy was to be heard no more in the land. A new era of economy was to be ushered in. Federal employees were to be decreased in number, the Federal Budget was to be balanced, and a sound fiscal program was to restore prosperity because of its appeal to the business interests of the country. The gold standard was to remain sacred and untouched. And last, but by no means least in importance, the farmer was to be carefully guarded by a wall of protection, to be raised rather than lowered, in order that there might be no flood of agricultural imports raised on alien farms. might be no flood of agricultural imports raised on alien farms, with peon labor.

My friends, it is hardly necessary for me to tell you that every one of those pledges has been violated. And yet Mr. Roosevelt with his New Deal, unheard of until after his election to office, with his New Deal, unheard of until after his election to office, goes smilingly on, showing his generosity by spending other people's money with a lavish hand never equaled in all history. Turning its official back squarely on every platform pledge and verbal promise made in the campaign of 1932 the New Deal program, as carried out, has been a mass of contradictions that have succeeded only in plunging us further into debt, without compensating gains in employment, only in regimenting business and agriculture in America. The consummation of which would substitute old world paternalism for American democracy, had it not been for the fine sense of intelligence and devotion to duty of the Supreme Court of the United States. Thank God for those nine patriots at Washington and for the balanced Government which brought them into being to protect the rights of the individual against the encroachment of autocracy.

To conceive the mass of cross purposes which the New Deal has against the encroachment of autocracy.

To conceive the mass of cross purposes which the New Deal has given us we have only to remember that the "brain trust" sought to restore business confidence by extravagance, unbalanced budgets, and the threat of higher taxes and currency inflation; it sought to stimulate long-term planning in private industry by debasing the currency to the point where no man knows what the dollar will be worth this year or the next; it sought to restrict production through payments for crop reductions on the one hand and the spending of millions of dollars for irrigation projects on the other, projects that will bring millions of new acres into production; it sought to encourage private industry by spending millions of your money to put the Government further into business; it sought and is still seeking through tariff treaties to find a foreign market for American farm produce, and ther into business; it sought and is still seeking through tarin treaties to find a foreign market for American farm produce, and at the same time doing everything possible to see that there is no surplus of farm commodities to export.

You good people within the sound of my voice have been bred to thrift and industry for generations. I know that you strongly disapprove of the spending of the taxpayers' money in a vain hope to prime the number of preservity.

disapprove of the spending of the taxpayers' money in a vain hope to prime the pump of prosperity.

Let us look at the record. According to a recent Treasury statement at a date in the middle of March, the total expenditures of the Federal Government since the beginning of the fiscal year July 1, last, had mounted to $5,082,000,000. We have entered into the spending of our sixth billion since last Independence Day. Furthermore, on this same date the deficit for the fiscal year was given as $2,285,000,000, which was $21,000,000 more than the deficit on the same date the year before. But that is not all. In spite of bland smiles and soft statements, the crisis is not over. is not over.

According to a recent estimate of the conservative and accurate Associated Press the recasting of the Government's figures indicates an expenditure for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1936, of $9,000,000,000. And it is estimated that the expenditures for the present fiscal year will be around $7,645,000,000. Next year will be worse.

for the present fiscal year will be around $7,645,000,000. Next year will be worse.

It is estimated further that the borrowing for the next fiscal year will be something like three and a half billion dollars, so that the total gross national debt bids fair to grow to something like $35,000,000,000,000. Yet Mr. Roosevelt promised economy and balanced budgets, and the end is not yet.

The next question which naturally arises is how is the money being spent? It is hardly necessary for me to answer this question for you here and now. Boondoggling has become one of the principal outdoor and indoor sports of the day. From Maine to California and from Key West to Puget Sound, so-called Government projects are under way which passeth all human understanding. No phase of human activity has been neglected. Fan dancing, Federal circuses, taking tree census, beautifying bridle paths, building bird houses, and comfort stations for dogs, selecting reading matter for the public, improving race tracks, making maps showing the movements of the Mediterranean peoples in the second millenium—nothing has been neglected in the effort to spend your money and mine. Truly, the taxpayer has now become the forgotten man.

Perhaps, bad as it is, we might find some consolation if this vast orey of expenditure was really restoring prosperity and ushering in the "abundant life" for our people. But despite the wasting of money, the New Deal has made no appreciable progress in ending unemployment. This is evidenced by the fact that the American Federation of Labor reports that in January we had 12,626,000 idle men and women in the United States and that the number had increased 1,229,000 from December to January. While it is true that unemployment always increases in January, the increase this year was twice what it was a year ago. There are 20,000,000 on relief.

The "brain trust" sensing the failure of its spending program and the need for even greater appropriations next year, cries out that private industry is making no determined effort

The "brain trust" sensing the failure of its spending program and the need for even greater appropriations next year, cries out that private industry is making no determined effort to put the unemployed to work. I ask you, my friends, what incentive is there for industry to expand its operations when the tax gatherer takes away from it practically all it earns, when, because of mounting Federal indebtedness, and the threat of inflation, it knows not what lies ahead of it in the way of new barriers and new restrictions. new restrictions.

new restrictions.

If the administration would cut out needless expenditures, give private business some faith in the future, and the assurance that it would not be burdened with new taxes, if President Roosevelt would keep the pledge he made in his speech at Pittsburgh in 1932, to balance the Budget, cut needless Federal employment and expenditures, then there would indeed be some inducement for private business to look ahead.

I recognize there is a certain fixed relief load the Government must carry at this time. But it must be remembered that while must carry at this time. But it must be remembered that while we cannot and will not let our people starve, we do protest most we cannot and will not let our people starte, we do protest incommended the protest incommendation of the people starte, we do protest incommendation of the people starte, we do protest incommendation of the people starte, we do protest incommendation of the people started in the people started country. The time has come to lay aside partisanship and to think of the future unborn generations who will have to carry the crushing tax load which must result from the New Deal program.

American industry is now in pretty much the same situation as are the sons and daughters of a family who work all week and bring their earnings home on Saturday night, only to have the money taken by the father who goes up town and spends it in a glorious spree. Uncle Sam is now on a spending spree. He is spending our income much faster than we can earn it. He is throwing it away in boondoggling, in unnecessary projects, many of which will cost millions of dollars and will never liquidate a single penny. It may be pertinent to remind you that the exsingle penny. It may be pertinent to remind you that the expenditures of the Federal Government exceed the total income of our farms by more than a billion dollars annually. Yet unemployment does not decrease, and bigger relief budgets loom for the Federal extravagance, with its threat of higher taxes and ultimate inflation, threatens the welfare of every citizen of the United States. I would be lax in my duty if I were not to call your attention to some of the mistakes of the New Deal administration which have a direct effect upon every man and woman within the sound of my voice. I refer to the reciprocal-tariff program of the President as administered by Secretary of State Hull, a program through which the Secretary tells us that he hopes, by lowering protection on the products of the American worker in the shop and in the field, to widen the foreign market for the surplus of the American farmer, a surplus which does not exist. Let us consider for a moment the effect of this program which violates some of the solemn pledges made by Candidate Roosevelt in his 1932 campaign. campaign.

The Fox River Valley was largely settled by hardy Scandinavians. Here you have laid out fine cities, built homes, schools, churches, and factories. It is a garden spot dotted by thousands of farms with substantial buildings and dairy herds. You will, therefore, be virtually affected by President Roosevelt's reciprocal-trade policy, which is slowly turning over to the foreigner the great American market. Practically everything that is produced in the Fox River Valley has been adversely affected by these trade agreements, every one of which violates the best interest of American agriculture and industry. ture and industry.

ture and industry.

You have here in Elgin the largest watch factory in the world. Let us see what the Swiss trade treaty is doing to the American watch industry. But let me, at this point first state that Congressman Reed worked in season and out of season to prevent this injustice being done to your leading industry, upon which the welfare of hundreds of your families, directly and indirectly rests. The watch industry is of the greatest importance to Elgin and vicinity and the pay roll therefrom in normal times must be an impressive one which contributes materially to the welfare and well-being of this community. Like all other industries, the watch people have suffered severely from foreign competition. Notwithstanding this, President Roosevelt negotiated a trade treaty with Switzerland which made substantial reductions in the import duties on Swiss watches and parts, some running as high as 50 percent. as 50 percent.

You know as well as I do, my friends, that these rates, by You know as well as I do, my friends, that these rates, by opening the American market to more Swiss watches, means more jobs and steadier employment in Switzerland at the expense of the watchmakers here in Elgin, which is reflected in smaller pay rolls and less buying power, and that in turn injures the local merchant. I am happy to inform you that Congressman Reen vigorously fought the passage of the iniquitous reciprocaltariff bill under which the Swiss treaty was negotiated and he was equally active in his efforts to prevent the adoption of the treaty itself. treaty itself.

Other industries also are suffering. Up in Minnesota, five print-paper mills have shut down the manufacture of print paper print-paper mills have shut down the manufacture of print paper because they cannot compete with Canada and the Baltic countries of Europe. In the same State thousands of iron miners are out of work because we are importing iron ores from South America, Russia, and the Orient. Several large match factories have been obliged to close because they could not compete with Japanese matches, where wages are about only one-fifth as high as they are in this country. Then we wonder why we have unemployment; why our farmers are not receiving reasonable returns for their products. Last year, 1935, under President Roosevelt and the New Deal, imports to the United States increased 24 percent, while for the same period exports increased but 7 percent. Briefly, that tells what Mr. Roosevelt's farm and trade policies have accomplished. accomplished.

But Secretary Hull tells us that he is asking the watch makers and other American workers to make sacrifices so that our farmers may have a foreign market for their surplus. Let us see how this works. Through his policies of curtailment, Secretary Wallace has seen to it that the farmers have no surplus to export. On the other hand, New Deal scarcity has compelled us to buy farm commodities from abroad so that millions of dollars, which should have gone to our farmers are now in the pockets of the corn growers of Argentina and the dairymen of New Zealand.

The Fox River Valley is one of the greatest dairying sections of the whole country. As I recall, Elgin at one time, fixed the world butter price. You have in this valley thousands of farmers engaged in dairying. Their well-being depends upon the prosperity But Secretary Hull tells us that he is asking the watch makers of that industry. The same is true of Wisconsin, Minnesota, New York, and other dairy States. Last year we permitted 22,000,000 pounds of butter to be shipped into this country, which was just enough to turn the dairyman's selling market into a buying market.

Last year we imported nearly 46,000,000 pounds of cheese and nearly 88,000,000 pounds of meats. Dairy cows and other cattle valued at $8,497,117 were bought in foreign markets in 1935 as against $616,000 in 1934.

In 1932, we exported Wheat is no longer on an export basis. 60,000,000 bushels of wheat in grain and flour. In 1935, our exports were less than 5,000,000 bushels. In 1932, we imported 56,000 bushels of wheat. In 1935, we imported 27,438,870 bushels. The same is true of corn. In 1932, we imported 344,000 bushels of corn; in 1935, 43,200,000 bushels. The 1935 figure was an increase of 1,361 percent over 1934.

Outstanding in its adverse effect on American agriculture is the trade treaty with Canada. In effect about 18 months, it is already visiting distress upon our great dairy interests. Reductions were made on cream from 56.6 cents a gallon to 35 cents a gallon. On Cheddar cheese the duty was reduced from 7 to 5 cents a pound. On Canadian cattle weighing more than 700 pounds the duty was reduced from 2 to 5 cents a pound. the duty was reduced from 3 to 2 cents a pound. On dairy cattle weighing more than 700 pounds, the duty was reduced from 3 to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound, with that on calves weighing less than 175 pounds, reduced from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. The tariff on Canadian live poultry was reduced from 8 to 4 cents per pound and protection was lowered on alfalfa, sweet clover, timothy seed, and seed potatoes.

But this is not the worst feature of the Canadian treaty. In these reciprocal-trade agreements there is a most-favored-nation clause which is one of the strongest objections to the agreements. Leading nations, except Germany, which has no favored-nation treaty with us, received practically the same tariff concessions under its provisions as were made to Canada. It is true that Canada made concessions to some American manufactures, but other countries, making no concessions to the United States, now enjoy the benefits of the concessions on farm products which the United States gave to Canada.

How have these trade agreements worked toward increasing our foreign trade? We have one of those Hull agreements with Cuba and our exports to the island increased $21,000,000 in the first 12 months of the operation of the trade agreement with that first 12 months of the operation of the trade agreement with that country. But our imports from Cuba, in the same period, increased $103,000,000; practically five to one. The first 6 months of the operation of the Belgium treaty showed a three to one increase in imports over exports. This is the more abundant life, which the President talks about, but it is more abundant for the Cubans and Belgians, at the expense of the American producer.

I could go on citing instances in which the American worker and farmer have been penalized for the benefit of the peon and coolie, until milking time in Canada, but the hour forbids. To sum it all up, Mr. Roosevelt has saved the Canadian farmer, at the expense of the American farmer. His reciprocal-trade policy has robbed our farmer of his domestic market as well as of the markets abroad and has compelled the United States to buy elsemarkets abroad and has compelled the United States to buy elsewhere foodstuffs which once were more than plentiful enough to supply the home and foreign markets. The policy has crippled the country's great dairy industry, dealt a severe blow to other industries, has crippled our fruit, grain, and hay producers, and transferred thousands from jobs in private industry to the Federal

It has delivered a blow to the American beet-sugar industry. The reduction of the tariff on Cuban sugar from 2 cents a pound to nine-tenths of 1 cent a pound constitutes an outright gift to the Cuban sugar interests, which are owned largely by the City National Bank, Chase National Bank, and Vincent Astor, the man with the yacht, all of New York. The gift amounts, roughly, to $42,000,000 a year, but another result of Mr. Roosevelt's sugar policy has been to close down American beet-sugar factories because they cannot meet Cuban competition. And there has been no appreciable reduction in the price of sugar to the American housewife.

Then you may ask what is the remedy? Some of the New Dealers tell us we have no right to criticize them unless we offer substitute policies. We may question the logic of this assertion. When a man's house is burning the thing to do is to put out the fire before we enter into a discussion as to how the repairs are to be made. we enter into a discussion as to how the repairs are to be made. But there is a substitute program. It could be invoked by President Roosevelt himself, if he were to turn away from the visionary schemes of college professors who have deserted the campus for Pennsylvania Avenue. He should breathe the spirit of political life into the defunct Democratic platform of 1932. If broken planks could be mended and broken promises made whole, then there would be hope in the New Deal. Unfortunately, however, the maze of the New Deal has now gone beyond the point of untangling. What we need is to substitute sane economy and a balanced budget for reckless extravagance and boondoggling, with the ever-present threat of higher taxes and possible inflation.

We need to reestablish sound money in the place of "baloney"

We need to reestablish sound money in the place of "baloney" We need to reestablish sound money in the place of "baloney" dollars, and, last but not least, we need a return to the sound policy of adequate protection for the American worker, whether he be in the mill or on the farm, so that America may produce what it needs, so far as it can, without looking to foreign lands for the things which can and should be grown and manufactured at home. In short, we need a return to sound constitutional government, with the encouragement of private enterprise and of individual effort, rather than the setting up of an autocratic octopus which, in seeking to aid all, the worthy and unworthy alike, will end by reducing everything to the deadly and enervating level of state socialism.

When this is done, public confidence will return and private enterprise will forge ahead, providing jobs for the workers, because it sees security and prosperity in the future.

to me a source of consolation, and it must be to you a cause for pride, that our hardy and sane Americans of Scandinavian stock, have in the great majority always stood with the Republican Party, because it had advocated the sound principles of government which have grown out of the American Constitution, handed down to us by the founding fathers. That these principles have been right is proved for us by a glance at the record of our national achievement during the past three-quarters of the century.

In a few short months the descendents of that sturdy people who gave us John Ericsson at a time when the Nation sorely needed him, will have another opportunity to express their preference for the sane and orderly principles of sound economy. When that day arrives, I feel sure that they will no more fail the Nation than did that belowed nothing the product of the Monther than the product of the Monther than the product of the Nation than the Nation than the product of the Nation than the N Nation than did that beloved patriot, who gave us the Monitor in the darkest hour of the Union.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I think if Members of the House from their experience in the last two Congresses had not been made shock proof this bill would give them quite a shock, particularly if they considered it judicially and thoroughly.

In the most general terms, the bill provides for the expenditure of $425,000,000 and an undetermined but large additional amount to which I shall allude later. It provides, furthermore, for this expenditure solely under the authority of one man without any check whatever, so far as I can see, except the provision that with regard to a certain part of it not more than 10 percent may be granted to any one State. To show the enormous amount of power put in the hands of one man I read the first section of the bill:

That there is hereby created and established an agency of the United States to be known as the Rural Electrification Administration, all of the powers of which shall be exercised by an administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of 10 years, and who shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year.

It is at least undemocratic to give one man unlimited control over this enormous sum of money to be used throughout the entire United States. I think it also indicates one of the results of our previous legislative efforts, namely, that having given to our Chief Executive unlimited power over $5,000,000,-000 it is a very easy thing to make permanent the various agencies he established as emergency activities and to continue in charge of them some one man or bureau.

Referring to the bill more in detail it provides for an appropriation for the first year of $50,000,000 which shall be lent by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. After that and for 9 years more there is provided an appropriation of $40,-000,000 a year. You will see that in the end this makes a total sum of $425,000,000.

This Rural Electrification Administration was first established by Executive order and this bill will continue that emergency operation created by the President and make it into a permanent organization with a single and permanent head.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. I would like to know what became of the $200,000,000 which was allocated under the works-relief bill or public-works bill, either one or the other, for electrification purposes?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. This has been partially used. The $50,000,000 which is now proposed to be lent by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be under the jurisdiction of the same man who has carried out the use of that $200,000,000.

Mr. THOM. I understand the $200,000,000 is not nearly exhausted. Has the gentleman any information on that?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Not accurately; no; but my understanding is the power to use that appropriation expires within the year. This first appropriation of $50,-000,000 for the first year is all that is now available for allocation. The rest may be used, but there is no more to be allocated except this $50,000,000.

Mr. THOM. The rest of it will go back to the fund?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. The bill provides that of this first $50,000,000 and the subsequent allowances of $40,000,000 a year, 50 percent must be allocated to the various States in proportion that their unelectrified farms bear to the unelectrified farms of other States. But here is a provision which I think the House ought to know about. There is no compulsion on this autocrat to make any grants at all. He may allocate, but any money that is not expended in any one year goes into a general fund which has no limitations whatever. The other 50 percent is without any limitation to start with. The only provision is that not over 10 percent shall be allowed to be used in any one State.

I do not say that the Administrator will do this, but it is possible under this bill for him not to use any money, if he wants to build up a fund. This will go over to the next year and will not be subject to any restrictions at all. Then he may use all of his fund if he wants to in only 10 States. I do not say he will do that, but he may.

I think perhaps I ought to say that the fund referred to by the gentleman, which has been used for rural electrification, has been administered by Mr. Cook, and, so far as the committee knows and so far as I know, he has used it conservatively and with great skill. But that does not alter the principle of the thing. It is a risky matter and an unwise procedure to create these enormous funds and allow them to be used without definite instructions or any supervision.

I do not see anything in the bill that puts this Administrator under the jurisdiction of any of the departments of the Government. There is a provision about making reports, but there is no limitation on what he does with the money. The R. F. C. has made its loans on an 85-percent basis. They would not make loans for more than 85 percent of the value of the project when completed, but this bill takes out that limitation and allows the Administrator to make loans for the full amount, with the sole proviso that he must be satisfied the amount will ultimately be repaid. That is true of loans for fitting up the houses with appliances, with plumbing, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House ought to pay careful attention to section 10. We all know from experience how every Government bureau and every Government department wants to grow. Every departmental and bureau chief—and properly so, I think—feels that his work is the most important work in the Government. That is how he should feel, and he ought to attend to his work on that basis. But these bureau chiefs feel that there are very few men wiser than they are—certainly in their own line. The result is they want to continue their work and increase it. There is a constant tendency to do that.

Section 10 provides that to carry out the provisions of the act the Administrator may accept and utilize such volunteer services as he may obtain—and please note this on page 17 of the bill—and he may without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws applicable to officers and employees of the United States appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys, engineers, and experts; and he may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as he may find necessary and prescribe their duties.

I think it will be seen that while there is a civil-service limitation on the second class of employees, there is no limitation whatever on the number to be employed. This is an unlimited appropriation for the expansion of this organization until it is large enough to organize and rule rural electrification throughout the United States.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] painted a picture which I think appeals to the sympathies of all of us of the hardship of these people who are settling in countries which have no electrical service. It is only fair to point out, I think, that electric service anywhere is quite new. All the States of this Nation practically were built up before there was any electrical service whatever.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says that electric service anywhere is new. Of course, it is no more new in this country than in Europe. I wonder if the gentleman knows that we are far behind any country in Europe so far as rural electrification is concerned?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not think we are far behind in those sections of the country where the population is on a comparable basis. Of course, taking the countries of Europe, you might fairly compare them with the Eastern States and perhaps California, and I think the results will be just as satisfactory here as they are there.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman knows that in New Zealand, a new country, two-thirds of their farms are electrified, whereas in the United States only about 10 percent or less are electrified?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. In New Zealand they deal with enormous tracts of land and call that one farm. Also in New Zealand they have a socialistic state.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman knows that in France and Germany 90 percent of their farms are electrified? Those are not socialistic states.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. No; they are not socialistic, but they are imperialistic.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman knew that Holland and Switzerland are practically 100 percent electrified?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. But they are no larger than our own New England.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand, but there is no State in New England that even has 25 percent of its rural homes elec-

England that even has 25 percent of its rural homes electrified.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. On the contrary, I think there are several States with that percentage.

Mr. RANKIN. I have been unable to find them. Sweden and Norway are rather sparsely settled. I wonder if the gentleman knew that they run about 85 percent, and also that Denmark has about 85 percent of the farms electrified.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not care to give the gentleman any more time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman said this was new. Of course, it originated in this country, and I wonder if the gentleman is familiar with the fact that they are almost thoroughly electrified rurally and we are electrified rurally to a very small extent.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I hope the gentleman will get his own time.

Of course, the general answer is that we are dealing with an enormous territory as compared with any European state, and the whole basis of our civilization is different.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. Does not the gentleman think it is time we should go into this line of endeavor with the hope we might give to this class of citizens of the United States the benefits that are being received in the industrial section and in the large communities, cities, and so forth?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes; I think that is desirable, but I think we ought to pay attention to the means we adopt.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not think to help these citizens we ought to endanger the structure of our Government, which I think we are doing by putting the Federal Government into all sorts of things that the States ought to attend to themselves. You must bear in mind that where our States are more fully electrified today, this has been done without any help from the Federal Government. The underlying fear I have about this whole business is the increasing interference of the Federal Government, and this is going on all over the United States. Every individual, every municipality, or every State that gets into any trouble immediately comes to Washington to get help. I think if you will look back on the history of this country you will find that all of the States were built up under great hardship and by hard work; and I think everybody will agree, when he considers the matter conscientiously and not in an election year, that hard work and hardships build a sturdy citizenship, such as has been the foundation of this country and which, I am afraid, is now being undermined.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Has the gentleman ever experienced any of the drudgery of the farm, such as sawing wood and doing other chores that light and power would relieve on the farm?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. No; I have not. I sympathize with that and I think I appreciate it, and I should like to have such people helped; and, as a matter of fact, the work that is proposed here is going on now under existing companies, and will go on faster if the Congress and the administration will remove from these companies the fear of being murdered.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. The gentleman states that the reason a great many industries and businesses and utilities are not proceeding is because they are hesitating on account of a fear of what the Government may do.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman explain why, prior to 1933, they not only hesitated but they stopped at a time when the Government was not interfering with anybody? What caused them to stop at that time?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not think that is in accordance with the facts.

To give an admirable illustration of how these organizations extend their power we may refer to the T. V. A. I need not go into particulars, but you know what they have undertaken to do in the way of building townships and power dams and all sorts of things to interfere with existing lines and to wipe out existing companies. I do not know how accurate my information is, but I understand that when they started they thought $150,000,000 would be the limit of the amount of money they would want. My understanding is now they are before one of the appropriating committees seeking to increase their capitalization or their authorization to $600.000.000.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman makes the statement that the Tennessee Valley Authority is destroying existing lines. I wonder if the gentleman knows it is the policy of the Tennessee Valley Authority not to extend its lines nor to erect lines where they will compete with lines owned by private companies?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Yes; I believe that is said to be their policy, but I think there have been at least some cases where they have offered to buy a competing line, with the statement that if the owner would not sell at their price they would build a line themselves.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 more minutes.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to let me finish my statement?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not want the gentleman to take all my time. I am sure the gentleman can get time later.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up my objections to this organization, I think it is not possible for these emergency Federal organizations to become permanent without producing in this country a bureaucratic and socialistic state; and all these autocratic bureaus will finally merge and come under control of an individual autocrat.

The history of all nations shows that a bureaucratic state must end in a dictatorship.

I hope and believe that our country is more concerned 50 percent of the entire agricultural area of Sweden is elecin maintaining the freedom and enterprise of its constituent trifled, that in Japan 90 percent of the homes are connected

States and of all our citizens than in endeavoring by unconstitutional means to help a certain class who can and will be helped by other means.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I know of no activity of the Federal Government that has met with greater public approval than has the rural electrification program. Especially is this true in the State of Wisconsin.

The bill under consideration today is substantially the same as S. 3483, sponsored by Senator Norris, which recently passed the Senate. This legislation, if enacted into law, would establish an agency known as the Rural Electrification Administration, under the direction of an administrator, who would be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. The administrator would be authorized and empowered to make loans for rural electrification and the furnishing of electric energy to persons in rural areas who are not now receiving service and to make studies, investigations, and reports concerning the condition and progress of the electrification of rural areas. The measure provides for two types of loans. First, for generating plants and electric transmission and distribution lines, and, second, for the wiring of consumers' premises and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances. The first type of loan may be made to persons, corporations, cooperative or other nonprofit or limited-dividend associations, States, municipalities, and other public bodies. It provides that such loans shall be self-liquidating, within a period of not to exceed 25 years, and shall bear interest at a rate not less than 3 percent per annum.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make loans to the administrator upon his request, approved by the President, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, not exceeding the amount of $50,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for the following 8 years the bill authorizes an annual appropriation of $40,000,000. It also provides that 50 percent of the annual sums be made available to the several States in proportion to the number of their farms not then receiving electric service. The remaining 50 percent of such annual sums to be allocated without regard to this proportion, but in no event shall more than 10 percent of such unallocated annual sums be used in any one State. Therefore, under the provisions of this act, the present temporary rural electrification is extended for a period of 10 years.

It must be clearly understood that this bill provides for no grant or subsidy. All of the money loaned for any of the purposes specified will be recaptured by the Government with interest. Experience of other agencies engaged in making this type of loan has demonstrated that these loans are perfectly safe. No one will question the value of electric service to the farm, for its use and the services obtained through it constitute one of the basic necessities to our farm life.

The 1935 census shows that there are 6,800,000 farms in the United States. Of those, more than 6,000,000 are now without electric service of any kind. The testimony before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House on this measure discloses that more than 1,000,000 of these farms could be served through this program on a self-liquidating basis.

I was particularly interested in the testimony of Morris L. Cook, Administrator of Rural Electrification, and the figures he gave in comparing rural electrification in the United States to similar activities in a number of foreign countries. His undisputed testimony disclosed that 10 percent of the farms in the United States have electricity available to them, while in Holland practically all of the farms have electricity, 90 percent of the German farms have electricity, more than 50 percent of the entire agricultural area of Sweden is electrified, that in Japan 90 percent of the homes are connected with electricity, that in France more than 90 percent of the | is that the farm organizations in my State of Wisconsin are farms are served with electricity. There is no comparison between these activities in the United States and similar activities in foreign countries. Under private leadership our rural electrification program has bogged down terribly.

It is also interesting to note that foreign countries, in recognizing the need for rural electrification, have in some instances made outright grants and subsidies in order to accomplish their objective.

Great credit is due Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, and Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi, for having for years kept up a persistent fight for rural electrification. Many years ago, when they initiated the movement, they were in a hopeless minority, with very little prospect that they would ever succeed. The day, however, is not far distant when at least a portion of their objective will have been accomplished. However, in the years to come practically every farm home in the United States will have electric lights and utilize electric power for a great deal of farm and household work that is now done by hand. When that time comes much of the labor that is exhausted and that now constitutes drudgery will be done electrically. There will be no occasion for leaving the farm and moving to the city in order to enjoy the advantages of electricity.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WITHROW. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman from Wisconsin is well acquainted with the increasing farm population at the present time, and does he not think that it is on account of the electric improvements on the farm?

Mr. WITHROW. I think so.
Mr. RANDOLPH. And if my colleague will permit me this further statement, may I say that this legislation is of vital importance to my district and the State of West Virginia. You have explained that in the United States only about 10 percent of the farm homes are equipped with electricity, but in West Virginia there is only approximately 5 percent of our farms provided with this electrical modernization. There are 10 percent of the homes with water piped into the house, 10 percent with radios, 35 percent with telephones, and 40 percent with automobiles. This presents a graphic picture of the relationship between rural electrification in my State and other forms of improvements thereon. The Federal Government will be repaid for loans made under this act and I am pleased to support the provisions of such a helpful and beneficial measure.

Mr. WITHROW. I agree with you.

In addition, there is every reason the farmer should become a much larger consumer of electricity than the dweller in the city. The farmer has use for all the household and electrical appliances which can be used by the city dweller, and in addition is a large user of power in his business. Water pumps, feed grinders, milking machines, small motors for many uses, and refrigeration are among the many uses he has for electricity. Another important feature of this Government program is that for every dollar invested in line construction, at least another dollar will in all probability be spent by the consumers for wiring their homes and for electric appliances. These loans would, therefore, benefit industry and labor directly. In the past electrical appliances have sold at such prices as to make them almost prohibitive in the average farm home. However, the temporary Rural Electrification Administration has already demonstrated that these costs can be materially reduced and these appliances purchased at prices that will make it possible for them to be owned and used by the average farmer.

I was astonished to learn that less than 20 percent of the farms in the great State of Wisconsin have electricity, that twice as many homes have radios as have electricity, and that three times as many homes have telephones as have electricity, which further brings out in bold relief the fact that the electrification program under the policy of the past has been an utter economic failure.

There is every indication that we have entered a new era in equitably distributing the benefits to be obtained from the intent on taking advantage of the benefit made possible through Rural Electrification Administration and are receiving the wholehearted support of Governor Philip La Follette, of Wisconsin. In December 1935 the office of State rural electrification coordinator was created and former State Senator Orland S. Loomis appointed to fill the post. A committee of eight representing the farm organizations of the State was immediately formed. The necessary preliminary surveys and estimates have been made in more than 25 areas in the State, and hundreds of local committeemen have signed up their fellow farmers on more than 50 projects. Of these, 26 have been recommended to the Rural Electrification Administration by Coordinator Loomis and are now under consideration at Washington. The committee and the Governor have set as their objective the electrification of at least 30,000 Wisconsin farms, which to date have been unable to get electric service.

Pursuing the same short-sighted policy of the past, the private power companies are fighting the formation of these cooperative companies. The farm executives charge that as soon as their own enterprise is under way and likely to succeed, the companies start competing lines in order to break up the farmers' movements. I understand that in Wisconsin a temporary truce has been arrived at, the power companies pledging themselves to keep out of at least six farm districts already organized.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. The gentleman from Wisconsin has made a very illuminating statement. I have a warm personal affection for him and recognize him as being one of the most valuable Members of the House. I hope this statement or message will get back to the people of Wisconsin and that they will send him back here. [Applause.] I was interested in the statement the gentleman made, in which I understood him to say that 90 percent of the farms in Japan had electricity and only 15 percent in the United States.

Mr. WITHROW. No; I said 10 percent in the United States and 90 percent in Japan, and less than 20 percent in Wisconsin.

There has been much criticism of other Government activities because they have spent huge sums of money. This spending has often been referred to as "boondoggling", and

The charge of waste, excessive spending, cannot be associated with Rural Electrification Administration, because the Government will get back every cent of money loaned and in addition, will have created a taxable valuation. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous ques-

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3483) to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SUTPHIN in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAY-BURN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to me to extensive use of electricity. The most encouraging feature | be able once more to present a bill about which there is not so much controversy, and several Members of the House, since the Securities Act of 1933, the Stock Exchange Act of 1934, and the Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, have also expressed great gratification that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce could bring in a bill about which there was no seething controversy.

Mr. Chairman, on January 6, 1935, Senator Norris introduced in the Senate, S. 3483, and on the same day I introduced in the House, H. R. 9681. In their essentials, they were the same. There were some provisions in the Senate bill which were not in the House bill and some provisions in the House bill that were not in the Senate bill. After the bill passed the Senate in the essential form that it was introduced in the House, we took up in the committee and considered the Senate bill. We made several rather important amendments, and, therefore, instead of putting these amendments into the Senate draft, we struck out all after the enacting clause in the bill and inserted as an amendment the result of the work of the House. I shall discuss the bill in general if I may and those changes in particular. It will be remembered that last year, on May 11, 1935, the President of the United States issued an Executive order which established the Rural Electrification Administration, which Executive order reads as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER 7037

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE BURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, approved April 8, 1935 (Public Res. No. 11, 74th Cong.), I hereby establish an agency within the Government to be known as the Rural Electrification Administration, the head thereof to be known as the Administrator.

within the Government to be known as the Rural Electrification Administration, the head thereof to be known as the Administrator. I hereby prescribe the following duties and functions of the said Rural Electrification Administration to be exercised and performed by the Administrator thereof to be hereafter appointed:

To initiate, formulate, administer, and supervise a program of approved projects with respect to the generation, transmission, and distribution of electric energy in rural areas.

In the performance of such duties and functions, expenditures are hereby authorized for necessary supplies and equipment; lawbooks and books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; travel expenses, including the expense of attendance at meetings when specifically authorized by the Administrator; rental at the seat of Government and elsewhere; purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; printing and binding; and incidental expenses; and I hereby authorize the Administrator to accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services and, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees, and appoint, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws, such officers and employees as may be necessary, prescribe their duties and responsibilities, and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix their compensation: Provided, That insofar as practicable the persons employed under the authority of this Executive order shall be selected from those receiving relief.

To the extent necessary to carry out the provisions of this Executive order, the Administrator is authorized to acquire, by pur-

To the extent necessary to carry out the provisions of this Executive order, the Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease (with or without the privilege of purchasing), or otherwise dispose of any such property or interest therein.

For the administrative expenses of the Rural Electrification Electrification Administrative expenses of the Rural Electrification Elec ministration there is hereby allocated to the Administration from the appropriation made by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 the sum of $75,000. Allocations will be made hereafter for authorized projects.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 11, 1935.

It should be stated here that at that time the President allotted to the Rural Electrification Administration $100,-000,000, to be loaned to cooperatives and to corporations, and so forth, for the purpose of bringing about rural electrification. It was later determined that some of that money would be taken away, and $90,000,000 was withdrawn from the Rural Electrification Administration, so that they have had only $10,000,000 with which to deal. Five million dollars of that has actually been loaned, $9,000,000 being in process of projects which have been approved, but it might be of interest to know that there are applications pending in the Rural Electrification Administration at the present time for more than ninety millions in loans to these private concerns.

The bill as originally introduced in the Senate and in the House provided for a 10-year program of $100,000,000 a year. After some consultation it was determined that that amount should be reduced to $420,000,000. The first $100,000,000-$50,000,000 for the first year and $50,000,000 for the second year-was to come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and after that for the remaining 8 years, $40,000,000 a year was to be appropriated by the Congress. The bill passed the Senate in that form, and when it came to the House committee we found that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, after January 30, 1937, did not have authority to make loans, so that it would have been an indirect way of amending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Therefore, we dropped the latter $50,000,000 and provided for the first year that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should, at 3 percent, loan to the Rural Electrification Administration $50,000,000, and that the $40,000,000 should begin the second year and should extend through that year and for 8 years thereafter.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Merritt] remarked about the bill and the great power that was given to the Administrator. Well, the power must be lodged somewhere, and, as far as I am concerned, with a man like Morris Cooke at the head of it, I am satisfied to have the power lodged there. I hope that he will remain at the head of this Administration for many years to come. He is sane, honest, patriotic. We might as well lodge this power in one man's hands as to lodge it in the hands of a commission, because in many instances that just brings about a debating society that is not in the interest of expedition of business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the provision which gives this official a 10-year tenure of office? With the exception of the Comptroller General, I think that will be the longest tenure of office in the administrative branch of the Government—and I am not asking that question in hostility to Mr. Cooke.

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand. That is a long tenure of office, if he remains there, but sometimes we do not get men like Mr. Cooke to remain in the Government for 10 years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It goes through two Presidential administrations.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is true. Now, allow me to refer for a moment to another statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] in which he thinks we are going to socialize things by such measures as this. I do not believe in socializing this industry. I think the industry should remain in private hands, and Mr. Cooke, the Administrator, believes the same thing. Of course, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Merritt] cannot understand things like that because he does not live in a section of the country circumstanced like a vast majority of the people of the United States. His section of the country is today rurally electrified more than 30 percent. In the great State of Texas there are a bare 2 percent of the farms electrified.

I think nobody from the industrial centers this year or last year or back in the Hoover administration, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was set up, objected to appropriating vast sums of money to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to loan to business. I certainly had no objection to it, and I think under the leadership which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has had, it has been one of the greatest agencies for good in the Government. But why endorse loans to a certain class of people under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and not to others? That is not socialism; that is not socializing industry to loan to one class; but when we appropriate a sum of money to make the burden of the people on the farms a little lighter and bring to their doors some of the conveniences and some of the comforts of life, then some of our very dear friends argue that we are going to try to socialize the industry and that we are plunging the United States so deeply into debt that it can never get out.

As I said, this bill provides for this loan. The Senate bill provided that these matters should be self-liquidating in 25 years, but set no standard. The House committee put in the bill a provision which provided that the Rural Electrification Administrator must affirmatively find that in his best judgment these loans will be self-liquidating within 25 years. Allow me to say this about farmers' loans: I live in a farming section of the country. The bankers there and the attorneys for the banks there tell me that the largest percentage of collections they ever made in a year came from people engaged in agriculture.

Now, there is no grant in this. There is no subsidy in this. There is no revolving fund in this. The Government takes as security all of the assets of the corporation, association, or cooperative that sets up the line to furnish electrification for rural communities. Further than that, the Senate bill provided that these loans should be made at not exceeding 3 percent. The House committee amended the bill to read "at not less than 3 percent." I thought the argument for that amendment was very good for the simple reason that times may get better. We hope they will, and that money will be more in demand and interest rates will go up. We do not want the Federal Government to lend money to any organization, to any corporation, or to any agency of the Government at a less figure than the Government can go out and borrow the money itself. In times like these, of course, I think the interest will be 3 percent, which is a very, very reasonable sum to pay.

We amended the bill in some other respects.

First, let me say the gentleman from Connecticut also asked—

If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation demands 15-percent assurance by the corporation that is getting the loan, why not this? Why loan 100 percent to one of these rural electrification organizations?

The reason is simply this: If you demand 15 percent of this money to be put up by the farmers, as I said in the committee, I think you might just as well strike out the enacting clause of this bill, because they could not borrow on any such figure as that. About all these farmers can do is to provide for connecting up with the rural electrification and buy their own electrical appliances. We do provide in this bill that for fixtures and for wiring, the rural electrification may make a loan. That loan will usually be made to a business concern which, in turn, will take the obligation of the consumers for the return of that money.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Only about 2 weeks ago we had before the House a bill presented by the Committee on Banking and Currency that practically permits another administration to perform the same duties that you want to give under this.

Mr. RAYBURN. It extended it only for 1 year.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Why should that not have gone into this administration?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, I did not handle that bill.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. But we do have a duplication, do we not?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. I am told there is no duplication. Gentlemen who deal with the Committee on Banking and Currency discussed that with me and they said there was not any duplication. Further than that, it continues for only 1 year anyway.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman state how this organization will be set up? Will a unit be confined to some particular locality or county, or in just what way is it contemplated the units will be set up?

Mr. RAYBURN. The House committee made another very important amendment to the Senate bill. The Senate bill made no provision for loaning this money to utility companies. It made no provision for loaning any of this money to an individual. The House bill provides that this money may be loaned to an individual as well as to these cooperatives, and so forth, and also to utility companies where they cannot finance matters. We did that for this reason, and I am coming to the answer to the gentleman's question: There are many sections of the country in which the utilities have reasonably well covered the country. There are communities, in which they could build lines if they had the money, that are so small that it would not be proper to try to set up an independent rural electrification administration. So we provide that this money may be loaned.

What our committee was interested in was rural electrification. We want it brought to the rural communities of this country by anybody who can bring it there and bring it there in the most economical way. What will happen will be that a community wanting rural electrification will form under State law a cooperative or a corporation as the case may be. When they have formed this organization and their engineers have worked out a plan, it will be sent to the Rural Electrification Administration and they will come into the picture sending their engineers into the field to look into the feasibility of the project. Then the engineers' report and the application will go to the Rural Electrification Administration. If it is determined by the Rural Electrification Administration that the project is sufficiently large and the use of electricity will be sufficient to liquidate the cost in 25 years they go about the business of making a loan to this cooperative, private corporation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman speaks of a project having to be sufficiently large to warrant a loan. Is any limitation made of $10,000, $15,000, or $50,000?

Mr. RAYBURN. No limitation is made at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

What I meant was that the set-up was such that it would reasonably be expected to liquidate the cost in 25 years. To illustrate, 250 farm families in sparsely settled country might want to establish a project, but they would be so far apart, the lines would be so long, the expense of building the transmission system would be so great that in the judgment of the Rural Electrification Administration it would never be self-liquidating. In an instance like this the Administrator, under this bill, is charged with the duty of not making a loan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the initial expense to which the gentleman referred, in connection with the formation of cooperatives or corporations, to be put up by the farmers' association?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not see any other way in which it can be done. Certainly some organizations who apply are not going to get loans. There could be no reason for the Government expending any money in connection with loans that are turned down; so I see no reason why the Government should put up any money to finance the organizational work in those cases where loans are granted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To use a definite illustration, I have in mind a spot in the gentleman's own State which is more than 17 miles from any kind of electrical connection whatsoever, a thickly settled farming country in which the people are interested in such a proposition, and where there will probably be from 100 to 250 farm families. As I understand it, the purpose of this bill is to take care of such a situation after the project is approved by the engineers?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct.

Let me say to those who fear this legislation may hurt private industry that, in my opinion, it will be one of the greatest helps to private industry. In the first place, in every situation where a rural electrification set-up is made they are going to take the power from an already established power company if they can get it at a reasonable rate. Furthermore, in a community such as the gentleman speaks of, if no power company desires to go into the community, they can set up a diesel engine and generate power very much cheaper than we buy it in our section of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that in Tennessee and that section of the country the consumption of electricity has increased 300 percent in the past 12 months?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know. The gentleman probably knows more about that than I; but in Tennessee or elsewhere, in the case of electrical energy, transportation, or anything else, consumption goes up as price comes down.

Another factor to be borne in mind in this matter of rural electrification is that the farmer is a much greater potential user of electricity than the town man. The town or city dweller has lights, fans, possibly an iron and refrigerator, but on most of the farms where there is electrical energy available the farm wife has an electric washer; she does her own ironing and has an electric iron; she wants an electric sweeper; the dairyman wants a milking machine operated by electricity, a feed grinder, a water pump, and motors for other power uses.

The history of rural electrification is that the rural patron uses much more electricity than the average town dweller. Many communities, therefore, which today do not look like they could support one of these set-ups, as the thing develops and the power is used, will make such a project self-liquidating. In my opiinon, if the law is judiciously administered, every one of these propositions can be made 100 percent selfliquidating.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Does this bill provide for the making of loans for the purpose of enabling municipalities of, say, 3,000 people owning their own municipal power plant, to extend their lines into the outlying districts?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes: it could lend to a separate concern which may be set up and which would take its current from a municipally owned plant. But this bill defines "rural area", and no area is defined as a rural area which has more than 1,500 people.

Mr. COLDEN. What are the requirements for these cooperatives in order to secure this Government assistance?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, first they go out and form a corporation under the State law, a cooperative or whatever it may be. In some States a cooperative cannot be formed, and in this event another little corporation will have to be incorporated. They have to go out and get as many signers to use electricity as they can. When they get that set-up and their little corporation organized, then they invite the representatives of the Rural Electrification Administration to come in and look the situation over and determine whether or not in years to come the thing will take care of itself.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman spoke of the rural area and its definition. He said it is limited so that no city or village may be included within that definition if it has more than 1,500 inhabitants.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I have in mind certain villages that have in the neighborhood of 2,000 population. I wonder what led the committee or the gentleman to fix that at 1,500?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think that is the definition of rural area given by the Department of Agriculture. We tried to reach the same definition as the Department of Agriculture. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan, I think, will bear me out when I say that we took from the Department of Agriculture their definition of "rural area."

Mr. GILCHRIST. Well, manifestly the fact that they define a rural area for other reasons and for other activities would not necessarily make it applicable here.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know of a town of 2,000 population that does not have electrification of some sort.

Mr. GILCHRIST. They might want to go into this new scheme.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say to the gentleman that we are not, in this bill, intending to go out and compete with anybody. By this bill we hope to bring electrification to people who do not now have it. This bill was not written on the theory that we were going to punish somebody or parallel | their lines or enter into competition with them. It was our thought that in the States where electricity is now generated and distributed the laws of that State would control the rates. May I say further that the Rural Electrification Administration will have nothing whatever to do with the rates that may be fixed in these communities, for the simple reason that matter will be controlled by State law.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Ten-

Mr. PEARSON. May I ask if it is not a fact that one of the requirements for the organization of these cooperative associations or corporations is that a certain number of kilowatt-hours of current must be consumed per month and sufficient to make it self-sustaining before these loans are made available?

Mr. RAYBURN. In the judgment of the Administrator there must be such consumption as to make it self-liquidating within a certain period of time.

Mr. PEARSON. Then the Government is protected in making these loans.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It seems to me that one of the important features of this proposition is the only possibility that it offers to rural sections of the country, on a cooperative basis, the opportunity to operate these plants and get all the benefit without the profit motive being involved.

Mr. RAYBURN. Precisely so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In other words, no dividends are to be distributed, and the fact such is the case will allow them to more economically provide for the amortization of the debt. It seems to me that is one of the important things to be considered.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was coming to that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that these cooperatives or these corporations are supposed to be set up absolutely upon a nonprofit basis, so that everything will be used to bring to the rural community electricity and plenty of it at the cheapest possible price.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. In California we have many small cities that include large areas surrounding them because of the use of irrigation. Will this provision which was discussed a moment ago eliminate farmers that live within the incorporated limits of a city?

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman mean the farmer lives within the city?

Mr. COLDEN. Within the city limits.

Mr. RAYBURN. And his farm is on the outside of the city limits?

Mr. COLDEN. No. The city is incorporated, and it includes a large area of surrounding country which is supplied by the same source of water for irrigation purposes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think so. I would not endorse going out and taking in areas in order to set up some value that would sustain a city government; but if it is a rural area, it comes under this bill.

Mr. COLDEN. It is of necessity, because the irrigation proposition comes in.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman does not mean an incorporated city. He means it is a corporation?

Mr. COLDEN. It is an incorporated city. The city of Los Angeles, for instance, includes thousands of farms.

Mr. RAYBURN. Anything that is defined as a rural area would be included.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in favor of the principle of rural electrification of the farms, but is there not a danger if we lend to the Power Trust organizations we are going to defeat the very purposes of the bill by strangling the effort

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me repeat that what we are interested in is rural electrification, and I think that the Rural Electrification Administration, with the money in their pockets, will be able to make a pretty fair trade with the private company that wants to borrow money to go into this thing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

A great many communities that will not sustain a rural electrification set-up are being told by some of the power companies today that if they could borrow the money they would build out into these small villages and give them electrification.

Furthermore, I think the motive will not be questioned and I think we will not have as much fight upon these rural electrification set-ups by the power companies, and I know pretty well the wiles of the power companies. I have been dealing with them in legislation and now I am dealing with them in politics up to my neck and am going to be from now until the 24th of July; but I do not think that with the Rural Electrification Administration, alert and vigilant, we are going to have much trouble about injustices being done to communities by a loan to a private company, and I do think it will enhance very greatly the rural electrification of the country and bring a little more ease, a little more comfort, and a little more happiness to those people out there on the farm.

Let me also say this to the gentleman, and I know he is in sympathy with the statement. Since we have laborsaving machinery the problem of unemployment in the great centers is permanent. Something must be done out there on the farm where people can live quietly and make their bread and their meat. This will induce those who are there now to stay and will probably attract a few others, who can never have a job in a town, to move out there and stay there and make a living. [Applause.]

There is little or no rural electrification in many of the richest farming sections of the country. Take the district which I represent, for example: There is no richer farming land in any country than in the counties that comprise the Fourth Congressional District of Texas, yet there are practically no farm homes that have the conveniences and comforts of electricity.

In Collin County there are 6,069 farms, and only 83 have electricity; in Fannin County 5,894 farms and 94 electrified; in Grayson 5,169 farms, 101 electrified; in Hunt 5,905 farms, 219 electrified; in Kaufman 5,131 farms, 88 electrified; in Rains, 1.691 farms, 4 electrified; in Rockwall 1,031 farms, 32 electrified.

You see from these figures how little rural-electrification minded they are. In other words, out of 30,490 farms only 621 have electricity.

With the farm program of this administration, that has brought increased prices for everything raised on the farm, has brought a degree of prosperity to the farmers, and, we hope and believe, more to come, we intend to bring electric lights to these people at a reasonable price, and with all of the conveniences and comforts that it brings to make the farms of the whole country more comfortable and easy for the farmer and his wife.

Electricity at a proper price is cheaper than oil and lamps. We want to make the farmer and his wife and family believe and know that they are no longer the forgotten people, but make them know that they are remembered as part of-yea, they are the bulwark of the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I can confirm what the gentleman from Texas said with respect to this measure and the differences of opinion which may exist about it as compared with the turmoil and storm that characterized the discussions of the public utility holding company bill of last of small cooperatives to start plans and to get what they | year. I think we shall not be in for any such performance as featured that occasion.

> I want to call the attention of the members of the Committee to some strictly business considerations in connection with this bill. Before doing so, let me say that in large measure I sympathize with the viewpoint of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] in that, in part at least, this measure, coupled with many, many other measures which the Congress has been passing in the last 3 years, brings up a fundamental issue of government, but I shall not discuss that side of it. The gentleman from Connecticut has already done > Something has been said about the policy pursued by R. F. C. in the making of loans, and an attempt has been made to justify the loans to be made by the Administrator of Rural Electrification by citing R. F. C. loans as an example. It has been said, for example, that there should be no complaint against loans to be made by the Rural Electrification Administrator to rural communities, in view of the fact that R. F. C. has made giant loans to the industrial element of the country. The difference is this: While it is true that R. F. C. has made very large and helpful loans to industry, it has followed a strict policy of demanding security in an amount in excess, according to their appraisal, of the amount of the loan. In other words, the collateral demanded by R. F. C. has been on the average 120 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield, as I have only 15

So, generally speaking, in the R. F. C. loans the Government-if you denominate R. F. C. as the Government, and it is, practically speaking-has had a cushion to fall back on in the event of difficulty being encountered by the borrower. You will note that in this bill R. F. C. is authorized and directed to finance the first year's operations of the Rural Electrification Administration, and is confined to making Ioans to that Administration to the extent only of 85 percent of the security to be supplied by that Administration as collateral. In other words, this bill is perfectly consistent in its treatment of R. F. C. loans, and to that extent it is sound.

Now, the Government, in its other lending agencies which have been in operation 2 or 3 years, has followed a very similar practice. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation would not think of lending 100 percent of the value of a home. It is limited by statute, as I recollect it, and it is certainly limited by its own practice to making loans up to a certain percentage of the value of the property which is put up as collateral for the loan. The same thing is true of the Federal Farm Loan Board, which operates through the Federal land banks. I think it is not within the statutory power of that agricultural lending agency to lend more than 50 or 60 percent-I forget the exact figure—of the value of the property which is to be put up as security for the loan.

So both in rural lines and urban lines and in industrial lines, it has been the wise policy of the Government to reserve for its own protection, the protection of the taxpayer, and, indeed, the credit of the Government of the United States some degree of additional security which we are pleased to call the cushion.

This bill violates that principle. Perhaps the House desires to violate it, but we might just as well look it straight in the face and admit it when we are doing it, for the bill provides that after the first year, which is to be financed by the R. F. C., $40,000,000 may be loaned annually by the Administrator, with no provision whatever for a Government cushion.

In the hearings Mr. Cooper is frank enough to say that in making the loans the security that the Administrator would receive would be the transmission line itself. In other words, the Government, through the Administrator, is making a 100-percent loan in every one of these cases.

Now, I think they have in the back of their heads some little hesitancy about having the Government embark on that lending policy and have done their best to write into the bill words which it is hoped will guide the judgment of the Administrator.

The chairman of the committee has explained that he must state affirmatively—perhaps I am not quoting the exact language—he must state his affirmative belief that the loan he is about to make is reasonably secure, although it is a 100-percent loan.

When a banker makes a commercial loan he tries to make up his mind whether or not it is reasonably secured. He will never make a 100-percent loan on that basis. There is no reasonable security for a 100-percent loan.

It may be that if the Administrator is conscientious—and I assume that Mr. Cook is—his conscientious judgment will lead him to turn down more loans than he approves. Unless the prospect of the earning power of the line is extraordinarily favorable he will have to turn them down.

If by an act of God the line is severely injured inevitably the Government must take the loss.

I have just returned from a visit to my own home town. I witnessed a scene there which astounded me. Ten days ago we had what we call in western New York an ice storm. By some freak of nature a drizzling rain froze as it fell and covered every twig, every branch, every tree, with an inch of ice. Every telephone wire, every power-line wire, was likewise coated, together with the brackets and poles. There was a shower of splitting trees and branches all over that country. The roads were blocked with rubbish-every wire was down. There was no telephone communication for 5 days. There was no electric power furnished out in the country along these roads to these farms for an equal length of time. The companies which operate those lines mobilized their repairmen, their linemen. Their staffs resident in western New York were not sufficient. They sent to neighboring States to get more linemen, and spent thousands and thousands of dollars repairing that damage. I can remember a similar storm about 10 years ago happening in the same country, where literally the power companies of western New York imported linemen, to help in the repair, all the way from the State of North Carolina. Millions of dollars had to be spent. Now, what becomes of a 100-percent loan in the face of such a thing as that?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. We have advanced considerably since those lines were built. A great many of these rural lines will be underground, and if they had that protection in the State of New York they would be free from the evil of these ice storms that seem to be tearing things to pieces up there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they put these lines underground, they will treble the capital investment to begin with and treble their loans.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, the gentleman is wrong there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not going to get into an argument about overhead and underground equipment. I am stating what has happened thus far.

Mr. RANKIN. But the gentleman's statement about the cost of putting them underground is wrong.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And so it happens with respect to destructive floods. We have only to remember the description of the floods which injured so seriously many of the valleys of this country 2 weeks ago. I happened to take a train that carried me along the Potomac Valley above Harpers Ferry the other day, and from the train window witnessed the destruction wrought by that flood in that valley. It is almost unbelievable. Of course, those things are repaired quickly. The human race is resilient and has extraordinary recuperative powers, but it costs money. You are organizing from a business standpoint on a mighty thin basis when you make a 100-percent loan. I anticipate that if any act of God, such as I have described, hits one of these installations provided for in this bill, the Government will have to take it over. The loan will go to default, the interest cannot be paid unless the Administrator in making the 100-percent loan is assured in advance that the rates to be paid by these farmers will be large enough to build a cushion in the hands of the local company, and if the rates are large enough to do that the rates will be prohibitive and they will not be accepted by the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, please do not get the impression that I take no interest in this matter. It would be very strange if I were indifferent to it. I live in the country and my business is farming.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does not the gentleman think that usually these corporations that do this kind of business have some kind of insurance, such as we do on our houses, against storms and hail, and so forth. Does he not think that the average corporation set up under this, even though a private corporation, would have some kind of insurance and charge a rate to take care of the insurance cost?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know much about insurance, but I imagine the rate charged by insurance companies for a small concern of this kind, which already owes 100 percent of the value of its own property, would be pretty high, and would have to be added to the charge made to the consumer.

Mr. RAYBURN. The rate is high on farmhouses, but those of us who have them try to protect them, nevertheless.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Indeed, my interest in this thing is deep. My dread is that we are starting out in an unbusiness-like way, and there is going to be a lot of disillusionment. If the members of the committee will permit me to say so, I am tired, tired sick, of the disillusionment handed out annually by the Congress to the farmers of the United States. They are disillusioned too often. I am not going to enter into a lengthy discussion of that, however. I think from a sound business basis—and we ought not to do it in any other way—that the local people in all regions should be asked to put in a little of the money, say 15 percent.

put in a little of the money, say 15 percent.

I think you will have a healthier condition if you do it.
Could anybody object? The chairman of the committee says if you ask the local people to put in a cent, the whole thing if you ask the local people to put in a cent, the whole thing will fall down; they will not put it in. That is a confession that the thing is unsound. Let us not do an unsound thing. Let us build this thing on correct foundations if we build it at all. I regret to see the Government going into the business of loaning money for commercial purposes, but I suppose we are in for it. We have been in it for 3 or 4 or 5 years now, but if we are going into it in this field, let us do it on a sound basis. We will get much further by going on a sound basis than by going on an unsound basis which, for the time being, seems attractive. We always pay the penalty for our economic errors. My judgment is that this bill, if passed, will not only bring disappointment with respect to the frequency with which its provisions are taken advantage of but it will also bring disappointment with respect to the number of local companies that the Government will have to take over, because they will be carrying a debt equal to 100 percent of their assets.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LUCKEY. Is the gentleman not familiar with the fact that we have been subsidizing the merchant marine, where we have been trying to build an institution for the benefit of our foreign trade and putting in a lot of money? Suppose we should lose some of these loans; would it not be a good asset to get this thing developed and put people back to work, and so forth?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not thoroughly familiar with the merchant-marine subsidy law, so called, but I do not believe we loan a shipbuilding company 100 percent of the cost of building the ship.

Mr. LUCKEY. I might call attention to the Dollar Steamship Line.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know anything about it. Now, just one other matter before I conclude. I believe the tenure of office of the Administrator should be reduced from 10 to 5 years at least as a matter of public policy. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] has again expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half

May I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], with reference to this 100-percent loan, that each month after the loan is made, the loan will become smaller and smaller, and the amount that it is reduced will go into the Treasury of the United States.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Maverick].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain tables, excerpts, and a radio speech by the Rural Electrification Administrator. Hon. Morris L. Cooke.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

ELECTRIFICATION DIFFERENCE BETWEEN MISERABLE EXISTENCE AND DECENT STANDARD

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I want first to discuss some of the social aspects in the matter of rural electrification. On account of modern conditions, electricity can make the difference between the most primitive and miserable existence and acceptable standards of real and decent American living. Too many farm women are slaves of the water pump, or even have to use water hauled for many miles in barrels. They are likewise the slaves of the scrubboard in the back yard. Too many people who live on farms are barely scratching out an existence, and they need rural electrification. There are too many young people wanting to get away from the farms, so we ought to help make the farms livable, instead of making speeches about the wickedness of youth. We have electricity in all of the industrial and congested centers, and we need it for the farms. Instead of this being for 10 years, I think it ought to be made permanent.

I think it ought to be as long as we have a nation. Rural electrification means so much to every phase of rural life that it is our duty and responsibility to see that its progress is unimpeded. Rural electrification is a matter of concern to all of us. It is an eminently proper field for the Federal Government.

MORRIS L. COOKE ONE OF ABLEST ADMINISTRATORS IN AMERICA

I want to say about Administrator Mr. Morris L. Cooke—I have heard he was a Republican, and he may be one now, but he is one of the ablest men in the United States Government. I know of no more able administrator in the United States than Mr. Morris L. Cooke; he has had long, successful experience and he is the kind of faithful and intelligent man we need in Government service. He has done and is doing a good job. He has long recognized the vital necessity of a planned development and utilization of our facilities and resources, including rural electrification.

(For a full statement of his views, and the program of REA, see I, speech of Morris L. Cooke, Rural Electrification, p. 5288.)

This movement to take power to the farm is not just an effort to do something for the farmer, but it is an effort to do something for the whole United States. It is a vital thing for the preservation of our natural resources. If one lives in a city he has to exist off natural resources, and unless we conserve those resources, unless we use our natural resources in a wise and proper way, cities cannot exist.

Another thing, we cannot let our people in the rural sections go on living, deprived, through no fault of their own, of the ordinary decencies and amenities of life. I live in a city district. I do not live in a farming district. I live in one of the biggest cities in Texas, and as far as my voters are concerned, I think only something like 3 percent of them are farmers, so I am not appealing to any great farm vote when I say that I will do everything I can to get those farmers, and all others in America, electricity. But to go on, our cities are largely electrified. All of our major industries are electrified. In this country only one farm in nine has electrification.

(For further facts about farm life, see II, Farm Statistics and Four Ways to Get Electricity, p. 5290.)

Power companies have built farm lines solely to provide private profits. This is not in criticism of the companies, but a statement of fact. The only reason the farmers have not built the lines is because they have not had the opportunity.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES HAVE MORE RURAL ELECTRIFICATION THAN AMERICA

I have read several books on rural electrification, and I want you to hear me when I say that the farms in Holland, Germany, and Sweden, all are better electrified and have a greater percentage of electrification than those in the United States of America. Even Japan has electrified its farms—Japan 90 percent electrified; the United States 10 or 11 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, one of the greatest advocates in America of cheap power to the people.

Mr. RANKIN. Those countries are better electrified than they are in any State of the American Union.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; that is unfortunately true; and I shall mention some of the States as I go along.

(For more data on States see III, Rural Electrification in the States, p. 5290.)

We can have rural electrification in this country. This is proved by the fact that Ontario with conditions similar to ours enjoys rural electrification; and I do not believe the Canadians are any more capable of self-government than we.

I stated these foreign countries all had more rural electrification than the United States. Now as to States: I am not here to make a confession or to say embarrassing things about my own State. We from Texas are always prone to brag about our scenery and the size of our State. We have more farmers than any other State, but we rank forty-fifth in the scale of farm electrification. There are, however, States in the North, in the Dakotas, the Middle West, the West, and even some in the East in a bad condition, so far as rural electrification is concerned, but all of them are worse off in this respect than the European countries.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION MATTER OF PUBLIC SERVICE, NOT GREED AND PROFIT

So long as we look at the matter of rural electrification in the light of economic greed, private profit, and speculation, nothing will ever be done for the farmer. We cannot do this on the basis of immediate dividends and immediate profits. We cannot rely on the private utility industry alone, we must look at the subject from a viewpoint of public service.

UTILITY COMPANY SAYS DEVELOPMENT IS FEAR OF GOVERNMENT COMPETITION—REAL REASON IS POSSIBLE ORGANIZATION OF FARMER

As I stated, I have been doing some research on this problem. I want to read to you the attitude of certain private utility people as reflected in the publication called the San Antonio Light, issued on January 30 of this year. This statement is made:

Facing possible competition from the Government in supplying electric energy to rural communities and farms near Bexar County, the San Antonio Public Service Co. has launched an extensive development of its south Texas department.

N. Bernard Gussett, general superintendent of the south Texas department, Thursday pointed out that during 1935 the company strung almost 30 miles of extensions. In 1936 an additional 44 miles of wiring is contemplated. At present the company serves approximately 1,092 rural customers with lines totaling 182 miles.

Until only recently, C. N. Chubb, company president, admitted SAPSCO and other utility interests ran high lines into communities only where a profit was assured.

Now, however, Chubb said, utility companies intend to blanket their territories with lines to avoid Government competition.

Rural residents pay a slight premium for their power as compared with the city dweller, however. The first 35 kilowatt-hours cost 7 cents on the farm, compared with the city rate of 3% cents for the first 35 hours.

Since the appearance of radios, electric refrigerators, and electric ranges the profits on farm service have increased, Gussett said.

Mr. Chairman, I deny that it is on account of Government competition. We can say all we please, but there is no Government competition in this particular bill. The fine gentleman who made these statements, managing a company which operates in my own State, and from whom I myself buy power were not afraid of the Government of the United States, because the utilities pretty well run the State of Texas. They are unrestrained; we have not even got a utility commission in the State of Texas. So far as utility legislation is concerned, we are probably the most primitive State in the United States of America. But what this company and all utility companies are afraid of is that the farmers will get together under this act and get enough money to form their own organizations and bring electricity to their own homes. So they are preparing to give this service over southwest Texas. That is fine. But the Government is not in the power business in Texas even though it is in Tennessee; so these companies cannot claim they are actuated by fear of Government competition. They are afraid the farmers will organize and get the service for themselves.

SPITE LINES AND COURTS—INJUNCTIONS AND DILATORY TACTICS

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to my good friend from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman might add that the power companies in Texas have taken due precaution to block this as long as they could by filing injunction suits on every water project that could be used to develop electrical energy.

Mr. MAVERICK. I am not criticizing the power people for using the courts. I would use the courts, too, if I were a power lawyer; your statement of fact, however, is correct. Let me tell you, however, of another practice. One thing some companies did was to build fake lines. They would go out and set up a few poles and string a slack wire to keep the farmers from organizing. In other words, the utility companies, in building these fake lines, were asserting their monopolistic rights under the utility commissions. This is not true in my own congressional district, but it is true in other parts of Texas, and in other places over the Nation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield for a brief question. Mr. ZIONCHECK. I just wanted to make the observation that the utility companies are not primarily interested in putting up lines and getting electricity to consumers in rural communities; they are primarily interested in selling stocks and bonds, and nothing but soap wrappers at that.

Mr. MAVERICK. That is right. Their chief interest, of course, is in private profit. That is all they are interested in. That, necessarily, is the attitude of private power companies.

But let me mention specifically the electric situation in my own district, which I think is about like any other in the United States: The utility company is very rightfully in business for profit, and I presume that that motive alone dominates its policies. Concerning 182 miles of lines, they report 1,092 users; that is, 6 users to 1 mile. The Rural Electrification Administration, or REA, state that farm lines can have as small a number as three to a line; therefore, the figures given by the San Antonio company are more suburban than farm. The point is that the farmers of this country ought to have electrification, even though high profits are not made. Farmers should demand this. just as any group of our citizenship should demand a decent standard of living for themselves and posterity.

READ MARQUIS CHILDS' BOOK ABOUT SWEDEN

In the first part of my speech I mentioned the fact that the United States is behind other countries in rural electrification, and the country which is probably more like us in race and temperament among those mentioned is Sweden. Everyone should read Marquis Childs' illuminating book on Sweden, which he aptly terms "The Middle Way." Sweden is no socialistic or communistic country; the people are not violent radicals, nor are they reactionary; they do not incline toward forcible regimentation, but they have brains enough to use public ownership where necessary and voluntary cooperatives when found beneficial to the people.

It seems to be that the philosophy in Sweden is to stay out of war, to be peaceful with their neighbors, and build up their country for the benefit of the people who live in it, instead of having big dividends for a few of the people. is true that Sweden is a foreign country, but I should like to see electricity provided for our rural residents in the same way; that is, on a cooperative basis, and for the effect it will have on the farmers themselves and not for the effect it will have on Power Trust dividends; and, as in Sweden, it will probably be found that business is in no way diminished and that publicly produced power can exist side by side with privately produced power. But let me make this plain.

THIS BILL DOES NOT MEAN GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP

The enactment of this bill does not mean Federal Government ownership and operation of rural lines. It means that the farmers themselves should own and operate the systems which bring them electricity. Lines which would never return a profit to a private utility can be, and are, entirely self-supporting when profit considerations are eliminated. Cooperatives, nonprofit and mutual companies, public power districts, municipalities wishing to extend their service into the surrounding rural area—all these are proper vehicles for taking power to the farm.

In the past farmers have often been required to pay the entire cost or a large part of the cost of the electric line to serve them. Then they had to buy enough electricity to pay the cost of the lines again. They were paying the power company interest on the farmers' own investment. So let us give the farmer a break.

Since the farmers have so frequently paid for the lines anyway, there is every reason to believe they can afford to own them. Right now, when the Federal Government has shown the way to successful low-cost line building, it seems improper for us to discontinue our efforts.

It will not do to drift in the presence of such rare opportunity. We must accord the farmer justice-which is all our rural people are asking. We must continue the path we have started to follow, since we can see it leads to our goal of wide availability of electricity.

ELECTRICITY IS A SOCIAL NECESSITY

Electricity is a social necessity. We have the natural resources for its manufacture, so why not do it? Illumination by electricity is just as necessary now as was illumination by candles, lanterns, and whale oil lamps in the past. Electricity is necessary to protect our waters in its many phases, including irrigation in practically one-third or one-half of the farming territories of the United States. We should have electricity for refrigeration, radio, power, and heat. Why not?

The aim of those who favor this bill is to take electricity to as many farms as possible in the shortest possible time. and to have it used there in quantities sufficient to affect rural life. The reluctance of the utility industry to make any concerted approach to that objective on its own initiative has been amply demonstrated. Our choice is between action and inaction, between haphazard, planless rural lines, and complete coverage.

The program contemplated in the legislation pending before this House would harm no person or legitimate interest and would help the whole Nation. Even the private power industry will be helped by providing an outlet for surplus power at wholesale rates. (See IV, statement of John T. Flynn, p. 5645.) The stimulus to production and sales of line materials, plumbing supplies, electrical appliances, and electrical farm equipment can scarcely be conjectured. By eliminating waste and increasing efficiency, greater farm income can be obtained without burdening the consumers. The farm will once more be as attractive to the young people as the town, and farm drudgery will be lifted from the backs of our men and women.

YES, WE AMERICANS CAN AFFORD ELECTRICITY IF SWEDEN, GERMANY, HOLLAND, AND JAPAN CAN HAVE IT FOR THEIR FARMS

Mr. Chairman, I have already heard on this floor that we who live in the richest nation on earth cannot afford this. That the farmer has not got any money now and is just scratching through and has such a low standard of living that there is nothing we can do about it. And yet, I must say, that in Sweden-yes; even in Japan-that the people, through their governments, have had sense enough to provide themselves with electricity and have increased their standard of living. Sweden, as I said, is a fair comparison. In a cold climate, with short seasons, they have given their people a much higher standard of living through encouragement of private business and, at the same time, cooperatives by citizens and farmers. Also, as I have said before, Canada has proceeded to give their farms electrification and their farming population a better standard of living, and I believe that we are capable of doing quite as much as the Canadians. I believe that this will prove in all cases practical, businesslike, sensible-not profitable in the sense of producing huge gains in money for a few, but that it will pay for itself financially and give huge gains in human life.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

(The following is a speech delivered by Hon. Morris L. Cooke, head of the Rural Electrification Administration, delivered October 21, 1935, under the auspices of the Evening Star, Washington, D. C. Since he delivered this speech considerable progress has been made. See other tables for information.)

In order that you may have a better understanding of the aims and objectives of the Government rural-electrification program, let me explain why it appeared necessary to take some action to change the rate of progress of rural electrification in this country.

About half a century ago the French novelist, Emile Zola, wrote:

"The day will come when electricity will be for everyone as the waters of the rivers and the wind of heaven. It should not merely be supplied, but lavished, that men may use it at their will as the air they breathe."

And the late Charles P. Steinmetz, one of our greatest authorities on electricity, foretold the time when electricity will be so plentiful that for retail use it would not pay to meter it.

ONLY 10 PERCENT OF AMERICAN FARMS ELECTRIFIED

In many of our industries and in many modern city homes the day foretold by Zola seems to be approaching. In some foreign countries electricity has been made available to almost every resident, urban or rural. But when we survey the situation in our own countries electricity has been made available to almost every resident, urban or rural. But when we survey the situation in our own great Nation we find that only a little over 10 percent of the farms in the United States have been electrified, although the electric light and power industry recently celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. During the depression years and in the early stages of the recovery the business of extending rural lines had come almost to a standstill. As a matter of fact, the number of unelectrified farms actually increased by more than 350,000 in the 5-year period 1930 to 1934 because in that period new farms were added faster than electrification was extended to farms.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION DELAYED; UTILITY INTERESTS SLOW TO COOPERATE

Many factors delayed the extension of rural electrification. To overcome them a strong national effort was required. Among these hampering conditions were charges for energy in rural areas that were prohibitive and out of line with charges to urban consumers. were prohibitive and out of line with charges to urban consumers. Then, too, burdensome conditions were imposed upon the extension of rural lines which penalized the hard-pressed farmer and discouraged his efforts to become a customer. And then there was the lack of facilities to finance home and farm electrical equipment which was needed if rural consumption was to increase and ment which was needed if rural consumption was to increase and the benefits of real rural electrification were to be available to the farmers. In addition, some utilities that desired to extend rural lines were unable to borrow money privately on reasonable terms. When to all this was added the inertia of many units of the utility industry, their traditional policy of extending their monopolistic franchises as widely as possible while extending their services only to those areas which were most profitable, the outlook for rural electrification was indeed unpromising.

DROP IN UTILITY CONSTRUCTION INCREASES UNEMPLOYMENT

Because of these and other adverse conditions, utility construction shrank from approximately $920,000,000 in 1930 to $100,000,000 in 1934. This threw out of employment and onto the relief rolls a vast reservoir of skilled labor which was anxious to return to its old tasks. Those manufacturing industries whose products are required for rural-line extensions were for the most part work-are required for rural-line extensions were for the most part working only part time.

You can well imagine that such conditions were of particular interest to an administration pledged to improve the living conditions of our rural areas and interested in extending to the farmer as many as possible of the benefits of urban life. One of the many modern conveniences which we take for granted in the city—without which, indeed, life in our cities would be impossible—is running water. Yet we found the percentage of farmhouses with running water was almost identical with the ratio having electricity. That is not a coincidence, for electric power is the most satisfactory method of providing running water on the farm.

About 60 percent of our farms have automobiles, and over a third of them have telephones. In every area where electricity has been made available to them, the farmers have demonstrated not only ability but ardent willingness to utilize it. It is certainly not a fact that only 1 farmer in 10 wants electric power. Such, then, were the conditions existing when the Government launched its rural electrification program.

CONGRESS EARMARKS $100,000,000 FOR EURAL ELECTRIFICATION

CONGRESS EARMARKS $100,000,000 FOR RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

The Congress took the first step in this program when it earmarked $100,000,000 of the work-relief funds to be used in increasing the degree of rural electrification in this country. President Roosevelt last May created the Rural Electrification Administration to put that money to work and to supervise a program to bring about greater utilization of electric energy in rural areas.

REA is trying to bring electric power to the greatest possible number of farms in the shortest possible time. It is strongly urging that in the construction of rural lines entire areas be served, thus taking "the skimmed milk with the cream"—a policy that many utilities have in the past been reluctant to follow.

Loans at an interest rate of 3 percent, to be amortized over a period of 20 years, are to be made to the public as well as private bodies on approved self-liquidating projects. No grants will be given.

be given.

Normally the construction of 25 or more miles of rural lines where customers average three or more to a mile will be considered a project. Construction cost would be approximately $1,000 per mile, and there should be a prospect of building up consumption of current to exceed an average of 100 kilowatt-hours monthly per customer.

NEW METHODS IN BUILDING FARM LINES

In order to achieve these objectives new and inexpensive standards of rural line construction, lower rates, and a new type of service contract, free from the burdensome conditions heretofore prevailing, must be established. Rural lines must be "tailored" to the farmers' needs and the use of expensive urban construction eliminated. In conjunction with the approval of projects REA is insisting that rate schedules be adopted which will encourage the generous use of electricity. A special effort is being directed toward breaking down antiquated systems of high minimum monthly charges and of requiring consumer cash contributions before lines are extended. before lines are extended.

At least 25 percent of the money lent is to be expended for labor under each particular project carried on by a public body, and preference in the employment of workers will be given to persons from public relief rolls. Wages will be determined by REA, but in accordance with local wage conditions.

REA has sought to find the best method by which all interested agencies might cooperate in the rural electrification program. In this effort agencies of all types have been consulted. At the outset REA called conferences of the private utilities, the municipal utilities, and cooperatives. These took the form of round-table discussions, in which REA participated. There was a mutual exchange of points of view, resulting in a much more efficient approach to the problem on the part of all.

COOPERATION WITH OTHER GOVERNMENT UNITS AND FARMERS' ORGANIZATIONS

Liaison has been established with all Government departments and agencies which have an interest in the farmers' welfare or the electric industry. State agencies, such as the public service commissions, State rural electrification authorities, and the State departments of agriculture, have been consulted. Splendid cooperation has developed between REA and national farmers' associations. ciations, such as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the Farmers' Union. Almost daily we are receiving reports from private companies containing their 1935–36 line-construction programs, accompanied in some instances by revised rate schedules and rules for extending lines.

The lethargy in which rural electrification has rested up to the present makes it necessary for REA to undertake extensive initiatory work before the rural electrification program can attain its fullest development.

MONTHLY BULLETINS AND PAMPHLETS

To that end we have prepared and distributed small printed To that end we have prepared and distributed small printed pamphlets announcing and explaining the Government rural electrification program. We are distributing a monthly bulletin to serve as a central clearing house for information on all rural electrification activities—Federal, State, and private. (This monthly bulletin, Rural Electrification News, will be sent each month on request.) Through the medium of that bulletin, and otherwise, we are collecting statistics of rural electrification and effecting an interchange of plans, progress, and technical developments. There has been an extreme dearth of accurate statistical information on rural electrification. For example, even now we have no way of rural electrification. For example, even now we have no way of telling precisely how many miles of rural lines there are in this country, and even as to the number of farms receiving electric service there is a marked difference in the statistics issued by recognized authorities.

This information service has progressed quietly, without any fanfare of trumpets nor beating of drums. It has consisted largely of keeping those who are, or who may become leaders and active participants in our program currently informed of our activities, and seeing that pertinent information from one part of the country is called to the attention of interested persons in other

LEGAL AND ENGINEERING SERVICE AVAILABLE TO PUBLIC AND PRIVATE GROUPS

To be effective, an information service must be supplemented by more direct contacts. Hearty cooperation has been assured by the private-utility industry. The cooperative movement, already well established as an aid to the farmer in both production and consumption, is anxious to play a significant part in the REA proprogram and has requested contacts by REA representatives. To these, as to all other enterprises participating, we make available, in an advisory capacity, our legal and engineering services.

REA engineers have drawn up standard specifications for a type of line construction most suitable to rural needs. These standards are now in the hands of national authorities in electrical engineering for final checking. (These suggested construction methods have been printed and may be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, for 20 cents a copy.) The effect of such a service is to reduce costs to a minimum consistent with satisfactory operation; this in turn means a lower cost of electricity to the consumer. Model bylaws and standard forms for incorporation suitable for electric cooperatives have been prepared. cooperatives have been prepared.

COOPERATIVES IN MANY AREAS

Cooperatives in many areas have already done a thorough job of organizing farmers who are asking for rural electrification, and they have submitted many applications for loans. Electric cooperatives which have been operating for years almost unknown to the industry at large are preparing to expand their activities.

Certain national farmers' associations—the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange, among others—have created special sections and committees to aid the farmer in procuring electric service. Part of the activity of these national associations is being carried on in conjunction with State departments of agriculture. State agricultural colleges are continuing and in some cases expanding their activities relating to rural electrification.

Despite the inertia which has beset the rural electrification situation, REA has already docketed potential projects from 46 States. While some of these may not now, or even after amendment, satisfy the several requirements laid down by the President, many of them undoubtedly will. And where a project proves too weak, there is always the possibility of combining it with another and stronger one.

Many of the projects which were submitted early have met our many of the projects which were stabilited early have her our engineering, legal, and economic tests. Right now, loan contracts are awaiting signature on 11 rural-electrification projects in seven different States. Action on many more projects is rapidly approaching completion, and loan contracts for them will probably be completed soon.

REA SMALL UNIT OF TRAINED PEOPLE

The Rural Electrification Administration itself is a small, intimate group of specialists and near specialists. There are only about 200 names on our pay roll. We depend very largely on the initiative of farm leaders to organize projects, to make vocal the demand of farmers in their communities for electricity. We are all located here in Washington, and in our few short months of life we have been presty busy.

all located here in Washington, and in our few short months of life we have kept pretty busy.

In the meantime, in response to the stimulus given by the Government program, thousands of miles of rural lines are being built throughout the country with private financing. Power companies have reduced their rural rates and liberalized their rural extension terms, and utility commissions have revised their regulations to conform with the new spirit evident everywhere.

This burst of speed in rural line construction is highly gratifying in itself, and especially so when compared with the actifying this field prior to 1935. The number of new rural customers to be added in the State of New York alone as a result of the program recently announced by private utilities in that State may easily exceed the increase for the entire country in the year 1934.

PROGRAM SUBSTANTIAL CONTRIBUTION TO AGRICULTURAL WELFARE

When it is considered that in spite of the fact that the most When it is considered that in spite of the fact that the most profitable customers have already been connected by utility companies, the number of new lines constructed in 1935 will, in all probability, exceed by several times the construction of 1934, and that definite evidence points to 1936 as the year in which rural line construction will exceed even the most prosperous years of the industry, the Federal Government may be confident that its rural electrification activity is one of the really substantial contributions to the agricultural welfare of the Nation.

The Government rural electrification program is based entirely on the principle that the time has come to abandon practices generally admitted to be outworn and to adopt forward-looking policies made possible by the favorable 1935 conditions. What we need in this program, as in any other new activity, is the inquiring cies made possible by the favorable 1935 conditions. What we need in this program, as in any other new activity, is the inquiring mind and a fresh and untrammeled point of view. It would be a capital blunder to spend millions of dollars for rural electrification using standards which have produced such unsatisfactory results in the past, and leave America as it is today, a backward country in furnishing its rural population with the comforts and necessities of electrical power.

FARMERS SHOULD GET RETTER CONDITIONS

We believe that the electricity from the lines should be sold under entirely different conditions than are now customary in rural areas. For example, we feel that any sort of service charge which does not include some current should be avoided in billing farm customers. Room and area charges are not suitable to ordi-we recommend a simple system of block rates, with a promotional rate schedule. Higher use is induced by having the price per kilowatt-hour drop sharply in the second and following blocks

The minimum monthly bill for the rural customer should not exceed $3 or $3.50, and this sum should include enough current—40 or 50 kilowatt-hours—for ordinary lighting and minor house hold appliances hold appliances.

Customer contracts for rural service which provide for a monthly minimum guaranty should have a definite termination for such guaranties, normally in about 3 years.

In areas where farms average between three and four to the mile, rural extensions should normally be built without customer contributions. The rules governing extensions should be phrased so the prospective customer can understand them without an interpreter. Some contracts in the past haven't been understood even by the companies themselves, I think.

Such principles as these, we feel, must be adopted before satisfactory progress is made in rural electrification in this country.

PLANNING IS IMPORTANT

PLANNING IS IMPORTANT

The most important requirement of present and future rural electrification in the United States is planning. We must have a great national plan which is the sum of many smaller local plans. Each group concerned with rural electrification must have its own plan, and each of these must be coordinated into an integrated whole. These plans may very well be in the form of quotas, self-allotted goals reasonably capable of attainment. There must be a quota for all of rural America, and a quota for each State, and a quota for each county, each community.

Each appliance maker must have a quota, each public and private utility organization must determine its share in the rural electrification program. Private utilities now operating in rural territories should as a rule at least double the amount of current sold. Let me repeat that and emphasize it: The total kilowatthours of electricity consumed in the homes and on the farms of hours of electricity consumed in the homes and on the farms of the United States can and will be doubled in the next few years.

the United States can and will be doubled in the next few years. Naturally, even the attainment of that quota will be only the first step in our long-range plan. But right now we are concerned with a condition that amounts to an emergency. We have two things to do, as I see it. We have to prepare a sound, forward-looking program leading ultimately to very general rural electrification, and we have to get that program started and a lot of progress made in the months and years just ahead.

NATION AS A WHOLE BENEFITS

The benefits to the country as a whole from the acceleration of this program are, first, the direct employment in the construction of lines of thousands of men now on relief rolls; and, second, the stimulation of the copper, glass, and lumber industry and electrical equipment fabricators with resulting increases in employment, pay rolls, and profits.

Additional benefits will arise from the stimulation given industrial recovery by the increased demand for electrical appliances and plumbing equipment which rural electrification make it possible for the farmer to use.

ELECTRICITY RAISES FARMERS' STANDARD OF LIVING

It is impossible to overestimate the true significance of rural electrification in the stabilization of farm life and the reconelectrification in the stabilization of farm life and the reconstruction of agriculture. The use of electricity for the pumping of irrigation water and its relation to soil erosion make rural electrification an indispensable factor in the new era of agriculture. Electricity will remove the drudgery from farm life, and the cultural benefits that arise from its abundant use will lift the plane of the farmer's standard of living. This will help to stabilize our rural population and keep our best young people on the farm. The program under way promises results satisfactory, not only to the Federal Government and to farm communities, but to the power companies as well. REA has diligently cultivated friendly rural organizations, equipment manufacturers, cooperatives, mu rural organizations, equipment manufacturers, cooperatives, mu-nicipalities, privately owned utilities—and it is to the united exertions of these groups that credit will be due for the success of its program.

In this period of stress and shifting standards in American life one master problem stands out. This is rural rehabilitation. But, of course, the problem can be made to sound more simple than or course, the problem can be made to sound more simple than it really is. In any plan for rehabilitating American agriculture one must include the salvation of our soils from erosion, the building up of farm incomes and a general improvement in the levels of living to the end that the gap which now exists between urban and country life may be closed. And in any such planning for the economic and cultural betterment of life in rural America, electrification must play an increasingly important part electrification must play an increasingly important part.

Mr. Chairman, this speech was broadcast last October, before a single REA loan contract had been executed. Let us look at the record and see what has been accomplished during the winter.

Federal funds have been loaned or finally earmarked for Number of farms and farms served by electric central stations in 44 REA projects in 20 States, including 3 in Texas; the total amount allotted is $8,265,912. Definite loan contracts, binding the Government to advance funds as construction advances, according to approved specifications, have been executed for 26 of these projects.

These projects extend literally from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico and from Virginia to Idaho. They are being built by cooperatives, municipalities, rural public power districts, private utilities, State government agencies, and nonprofit and mutual companies.

An interesting project, illustrating how this rural-electrification program can help utilize our present facilities, is the one sponsored by a utility company in Oklahoma. The company has an ice plant with diesel-powered generators four times as powerful as the ice machinery needs, even in the summer. The company is now building, with money borrowed from REA, a 30-mile system of rural lines to use this surplus capacity. With the installation of household refrigerators and milk coolers on the farms the lines reach, the company will be selling ice by wire. All the drip and dirt and mess will be left in the ice plant, not carried into the farm kitchen.

Mr. Cooke predicted, in the speech above, that rural-line construction would probably show a great increase in 1935 over 1934. Figures compiled recently prove the accuracy of that prediction: 175 percent more new customers—almost three times as many—were added to rural electric lines in 1935 as in the preceding year.

FARM STATISTICS AND FOUR WAYS TO GET ELECTRICITY

The Rural Electrification Administration offers some very interesting information of the primitive condition of our farms. In pamphlet recently printed, Light and Power for the Farm, it said:

Lack of electricity shuts out the electric pump, denying to most farmers the sanitation and living comforts that go with household and farm water systems. National surveys disclose that of the 32,700,000 persons in this country living on farms:

Seventy-three percent must carry water from wells or other sources of supply.

Seventy-seven percent must put up with unsanitary, inconvenient outdoor toilets.

Ninety-three percent have neither bathtub nor shower.

Seventy-six percent must depend upon kerosene or gasoline lamps; apparently about 10 percent use candles or are entirely without light.

Thirty-three percent heat their homes partially or entirely with fireplaces; and 54 percent with stoves.

Forty-eight percent are compelled to do their laundry work out

In its desire to relieve the hardships which these figures re-flect, Congress decided that the farmers of the country can and should have electricity and the benefits that go with it.

I quote this pamphlet further:

FOUR WAYS TO GET ELECTRICITY

If you live in an area where self-supporting electric power and light lines are feasible, and if you and your neighbors can start a sound project that will satisfy REA conditions, electricity for the farm may be obtained:

(1) Through your nearest private power company.

(2) Through a nearby city-owned electric plant, which perhaps can and will extend its electric distributing lines to serve you and your neighbors, or a public-utility district, or some other form of public body now existing or which perhaps may be formed under the law of your State. the laws of your State.

(3) Through a farmers' cooperative association or other local corporation which may be created under the laws of your State with power to operate an electric line.

TIT

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION IN THE STATES

Mr. Chairman, the question of rural electrification in the various States is worthy of our study. As stated by Mr. RANKIN, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, the United States as a whole has less rural electrification than many foreign countries, and besides that, even New Hampshire and California, which have more rural electrification than any other State, still have less rural electrification than the foreign countries mentioned. The statistics on States are as follows:

	Number of farms Jan. 1, 1935 ¹		Number of served De 1935	e. 31,	Percent of farms served 1935 Census of Agriculture.

 Edison Electric Industry Bulletin, March 1936.
 Preliminary and subject to revision. Includes 89 farms for the District of Colum-

JOHN T. FLYNN, OF NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM, EXPLAINS BENEFIT. RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

John T. Flynn, who contributes to the Scripps-Howard newspapers, recently wrote a penetrating article on the purposes of the R. E. A. and dispelled some current illusions. He said, in part, as reported in the New York World-Telegram:

Comments lately on the plans of the Rural Electrification Administration indicate that its objectives are pretty well misunderstood. Because of the Government's attack on holding companies in the utility field there is a notion that the REA is some sort of reinforcement for the Government's designs against the utilities—a kind of third member of a trinity consisting of TVA, SEC, and the REA.

This is in no sense true. It is the one arm of the Government which aims to act in friendly cooperation with the utility interests. Its plan is to extend electric power to as many American farms as possible. This it proposes to do by asking utility companies to utilize its resources. * *

Where the utility company is not willing, not disposed to take the risk, then REA encourages farmers to form themselves into cooperative groups to buy power wholesale from the utility. * * *

This enables the farmers to get power, the utility company to get customers, the electrical construction industry to get a contract, the electrical supply industry to sell equipment.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Holmes].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the legislation now pending before the Committee, I feel very much like my two colleagues who just preceded me and who spoke against the bill S. 3483. Very little has been said about the burden that this administration by its extension of rural lines is going to shoulder onto the individual farmers before they may take advantage of rural electrification. I think it is the intent of the Administrator of this act to deal only with large cooperative units. I do not believe it is their | intention to touch or extend any of this electrification to communities unless there is involved somewhere between 75 and 100 or more miles in the project. This will mean that many of the territories and States in the United States are going to be left out in the cold and get no advantage whatsoever. All you have to do is to read the Administrator's testimony as given before the committee, which pretty well defines their policy in extending or carrying out this legislation which is now pending before the House.

Let us assume an area up in New England or in my own State, comprising about 25 square miles, in which 75 farmers could be accommodated. They form a cooperative group to take advantage of this legislation and expect to receive help under this act. The Administrator figures it will cost approximately $25,000 to build the main lines which carry the energy to this cooperative group of 75 people. In addition to that, the Rural Electrification Administration is permitted and allowed to finance the wiring of the house, the purchase of certain appliances that may be necessary, as well as the purchase of electric pumps, electric stoves, and any other appliances which the farmer feels he may need for his convenience in the utilization of this electricity. It is estimated it will cost the individual farmer approximately $700 as his share of the expense in order to secure this electricity. In other words, if there are three farmers to a mile of line and it cost $1,000 a mile, this means approximately $350 for each farmer's share of the line. This has to be amortized over a period of 25 years. The Administrator submitted figures himself which showed it would cost about $350 to wire the house, buy the cook stove, put in the bathrooms, tubs, and many other conveniences on the farm, and the Administrator may lend the money for these purposes. Therefore, the farmer has to assume a burden or liability of approximately $700 or $800 before he can take advantage of this rural electrification program.

At 3 percent, interest on this $50,000 will cost this group of farmers $1,500 a year. That is the first obligation. Then they have to amortize the $50,000 investment over a period of 25 years. He therefore assumes another burden of $2,000 a year in order to meet his obligation at the time of maturity. This obligates him practically for $4.33 or $4.50 a month as an initial charge before he can utilize or consume any electric energy.

The Administrator estimates that in all probability, through education and through utilizing to the full advantage the electrical equipment, each farmer will use approximately 1,200 kilowatt-hours of energy a year. We will assume that 5 cents per kilowatt-hour is a fair average for this energy. He therefore obligates himself to pay another $60 a year, to say nothing at all about the liability which he as a cooperative to assume for the maintenance of the line and the maintenance of any equipment which he has installed, and which is financed by the Government.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho. Mr. WHITE. The gentleman is making a very interesting discourse with reference to the cost to the farmer. But does he take into consideration that the cost is no greater for the appliances which the farmer buys for the farm than in the city? Does he take into consideration further the fact that the utilization of the power to do the work around the farm will result in a saving to the farmer by doing this work by electricity?

Mr. HOLMES. I think I am far ahead of the gentleman. The farmer should buy his equipment, these stoves and appliances, cheaper than the average person in the city may buy them. I am taking Commissioner Cook's own figure.

Mr. WHITE. He is put to no more expense in doing that and his charges are amortized. Is he not therefore at a better advantage than the city person?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with my colleague, the chairman of the committee, that there is a great about the cost of the installation of these fixtures I looked deal of need for this sort of legislation. I am interested myself in farming, and I have several of them up in New Hampshire. They are located in a community in which it is hard to get electricity. Many of my neighbors do not now have electricity, and while I think this is a mighty fine thing, the question is, with all of our expenses at the present time, can we afford the expenditure at this time?

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposing this measure because I am opposed to extending electrification to the farmers who have not got it at the present time. I know they are suffering, if we can believe what various gentlemen have stated to the House. We have passed a great deal of legislation during the past 3 years to relieve and help the farmer because he is overburdened. He is not getting enough out of his activities on the farm. As some of my colleagues stated, he is working hard and barely scratching a living out of his farm. If we are going to believe that is so, we must assume by the passage of this bill that we will put another burden on him in addition to all the existing mortgages and in addition to all his other expenses to the tune of $700 before he will receive the advantage of electricity.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. In Sweden, for instance, they had a lower standard of living on the farm, but they now have a higher one and this has been accomplished through electrification. This is my theory and I think I am right about it.

Mr. HOLMES. I think the gentleman is somewhat correct about that. I shall not dispute the matter with the gentleman, because we are living in America and I do not think America should take a back seat for any country.

Mr. MAVERICK. That is right.

Mr. HOLMES. When it comes to the question of the people and their advancement in science, industry, and every other phase of our national life.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman he is entirely wrong about the effect on the farmers of this country. I probably have had as much experience in this work as any man in Congress or out of it or in public life, and my experience is, and I have ocular proof from the farmers themselves, it has raised their standards of living and has not imposed the additional burdens on them that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. HOLMES. In my opinion, many of these farms no doubt could have had electricity if the farmers had wanted to spend the money for it. The gentleman has a chart from Commissioner Cooke which shows the ratio of automobiles, for instance, owned by individuals in the various States and in Iowa, for instance, 90 percent of the farmers have automobiles, trucks, and tractors, but still that State is only electrified to the extent of 15 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. Which is a tragedy in itself.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOLMES. Not now.

Many other States are similarly situated, having 90, 85, or 75 percent owning automobiles, trucks, and tractors, and many other things, but still they are only electrified to the extent of 10 or 15 or 20 percent.

Mr. RANKIN. Under this bill, for a small portion of what it costs to run those automobiles and pay for them, they can electrify their homes, relieve themselves and their families of the burdens of the drudgery they have encountered, and make their homes more livable and more pleasant.

Mr. HOLMES. I appreciate that is true, but at the same time I think this legislation, as it is now, is not in proper form.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, while my good colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Holmes], was talking Committee for me to read briefly from them.

The Rural Electrification Administrator, Mr. Cooke, stated:

My colleague advises me it would be $50 up, according to the number of outlets you would require.

In other words, the cost of wiring a small house would be about $50. The distinguished chairman of the committee said that he had a 10-room farmhouse down in Texas wired

Mr. Cooke, the Administrator, in reference to prices for installation, said:

We are working now with the Electrical Contractors Association, We are working now with the Electrical Contractors Association, trying to standardize house wiring so that we can advertise 100 homes to be wired at the same time. We are doing exactly the same thing with plumbing. The plumbing industry has for the first time taken the position that simply because every farmhouse is different every bathroom does not have to be different, and so we are standardizing the bathrooms, and it will surprise you gentlemen to know that I have a price for a bathtub, washstand, and toilet, in quantity, of $25 for the three pieces.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this bill will do more for the farmers of this country than any one piece of legislation the Congress has passed.

We have 6,800,000 farms, of which 6,000,000 are without

We have heard very much of the principle of going back to the farms. It is said that we cannot solve the problems now confronting this country unless we take out of the cities that large portion of the population that came off of the farms during the World War, and which has not, up to this time, gone back to the farms; and I may say that this bill will do more toward taking the excess population from the cities back to the farms than anything I can imagine.

It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that there are more suicides among the farmers' wives than any other group in the country, and I may say to you that the result of this legislation will be to bring a ray of sunshine and happiness to the farmers' wives of this country that up to this time has been denied them.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. If the farmers of Arkansas and Mississippi have to pay the rates now charged by the Arkansas Light & Power Co. and the Mississippi Light & Power Co., they will not be any better off when this bill passes. If the private corporations are allowed to run their lines, the chances are that it will paralyze the development that you now have.

Mr. TERRY. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi that the Arkansas Power & Light Co. in my State is doing what it can to bring rural electrification. Mr. Couch, president of the power and light company, in my opinion, is a very broad-minded man, and under his administration the public utility is trying to extend its lines as far as possible into the country. I know a number of communities where the power and light company has extended its lines, but to extend the benefit of electricity generally over the rural sections of the country it is necessary that the assistance of this legislation be given. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am supposed to be the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Expenditures. I seldom take the floor to oppose small matters. We are hoping to have some larger matters brought before the committee later on, which will be worth while to present to the House for real consideration.

I suggested to the chairman of the committee that we might like to amend the title of this bill to read "An act to encourage the farmer to take upon himself greater indebtedness by purchasing electrical equipment."

I was amused when the chairman said he was rather proud that the people now approved of the bills heretofore presented by his committee, especially the formation of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I desire to tell the chairman something about the Securities and Exchange Commission. I have a letter from its as well as those that are only recipients, through the hearings, and it might be of interest to the | Chairman, which says that of all the issues the Securities and Exchange Commission has approved, only 2 percent were for new business. At a time when new business was so greatly to be desired, it was apparently frightened to proceed.

> Were not you amused yesterday to read in the paper that former Chairman Kennedy received a fee of $150,000 for telling one concern how to frame a proposition that would be satisfactory to this particular Commission? His advice seems to be regarded as worth a goodly sum.

> It is foolish to believe that Mr. Cooke-if he is the man you say he is-will allow 25 or 50 farmers to get together, with a Government 100-percent liability, as shown so clearly by the gentleman from New York, and that he would not demand that those farmers agree that they will use electricity enough to pay the expenses and amortization of the proposition. And if that is not getting the farmer plenty into debt, I am much mistaken. After all the pictures you have drawn us of the plight of the farmer, and his already huge indebtedness, why encourage him to go deeper at this time?

> Your intentions may be good, but in the light of present conditions I shall probably vote against this bill, as I wish to keep the Government out of the business of continually lending its credit for such a multiplicity of operations, so many of which are in direct competition with private industry. We have gone much too far already, and must stop further activities of this nature. I sympathize with the representatives of the great State of Texas. They are making the strongest plea here for this legislation. But I want them to sympathize with me for a minute as well. I represent a State that put up $114,000,000 last year to help run this Government, and received only about $77,000,000. The State of Texas received nearly $220,000,000, counting the A. A. A. payments in full to date, and put up only about seventy-seven million. Yet you boast about the great State of Texas.

> Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

> Mr. GIFFORD. Not now. The gentleman should boast about it in his own time. Oh, I have read a lot about Texas and the marvelously fertile fields you have there. God gave you great fertility of soil and other natural advantages. Come to Massachusetts and look at the New England sandy shores and rocky hills. Then you will wonder how in the world we made the money to loan, and to give, to Texas. However, I have read about some parts of Texas which must be a very dry and arid country and perhaps contains some of the farms that you want to electrify.

> The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

> Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

> Mr. GIFFORD. I read about someone who went down there and remarked to a native, "It looks like rain." The native replied, "I wish it would rain, for I would like for my boy to see it. I myself have seen it rain." [Laughter.] The great State of Texas that we read so much about has received so much from us in Massachusetts and New England that I want to remind you of it. Now, you want to lend the Government credit further, but if money is lost you are not going to pay for it. Oh, no. We know the States that will pay for it. You have parceled out gifts and guaranties to a great mass of voters, and have a watchword, "Vote for Roosevelt; see what he has done for me." You will probably get plenty of votes as a result of these proceedings, but some time our people will awaken to the realization that they are going to have to pay for them. You have distributed relief and largesses widely. However, you have also merely distributed debt, and distributed it very unevenly. I represent a section that will pay a large share of that debt year in and year out for the next many years to come. These wonderfully fertile States desire that the Central Government assume the bill, well aware that only seven or eight States of the Union will eventually pay it. I believe we should consider the States that must pay the bill

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman know that Massachusetts had a hundred years "the jump" on us under the tariff system?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I hear about that tariff system very often.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. I desire a minute to answer that ques-

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I give the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. McFARLANE. But the gentleman cannot answer that in 1 minute. He had better take 10.

Mr. GIFFORD. If there is any one class of people to which we have tried to give the benefits of the tariff, it is the farmer. You say that it does not work, but we will give you an even higher tariff wall if you need it. In those hundred years which the gentleman from Texas talks about we in New England have been able to save some money, but for most of those hundred years we have had to do without all these improvements. We managed to save by being industrious and careful, and then to loan you folks enough to get started. Now we hope that you will get going on your own pretty soon. You still depend so largely on the earnings of our people of New England and a few other States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wolverton].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the bill now under consideration, S. 3483, is the result of a study made by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Norris, and passed by that body, and the companion bill introduced in the House by Mr. Rayburn, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to establish a permanent and comprehensive national policy for rural electrification and to create an agency of the United States to be known as the Rural Electrification Administration to promote the electrification of rural areas not now receiving electric light and power service.

The need for a service such as this Government agency will provide is evidenced by the fact that, notwithstanding the high degree of perfection now reached in the distribution and use of electric current, but comparatively few American farmers have electric power and light service. In the hearings before the committee it appeared that of the 6,800,000 farms in the United States about 6,000,000 are not receiving any service from existing power stations. Lack of electricity shuts out the electric pump, denying to most farmers the sanitation and living comforts that should be enjoyed by every household. A national survey has disclosed that of the 32,700,000 persons in this country living on farms, 73 percent must carry water from wells or other sources of supply; 77 percent must put up with inconvenient sanitary facilities; 93 percent have no modern bathroom facilities; and 76 percent depend upon kerosene or gasoline lamps. The enactment of this legislation provides a means of relief from these hardships. It will clearly evidence upon the part of Congress an intention that the farmers of the country can and shall have electricity and the benefits that go with it.

Heretofore utility companies have been slow to extend power and light service to rural districts because of the high cost and small return. It has been only in the more densely settled farming country that the private power and light companies have been willing to provide electric service. While it is true that there is farming country which is too thinly settled to support the cost of erecting lines, yet, in between the territory in which the utility companies have been willing to extend lines and the territory in which no one is able to do so, there are vast areas where rural electrification is needed and feasible but has not yet been.

undertaken and will not be without aid from the Government in financing such projects as provided for in this bill. These great areas present new fields for electric power and light, to serve farms which have heretofore been denied such facilities. Power and light, with its tremendous possibilities for better living and more effective farming, should be used at least as generally as the automobile and the telephone.

The widespread interest in rural communities for the rural electrification program indicates that few things will add more to the comfort, satisfaction, and happiness of the rural population than the electrification of farm homes. Furthermore, the farmer should become a much better consumer of electricity than the dweller in the city. The farmer has use for all the household electrical appliances which can be used by the city dweller, but, in addition, he is a large user of power in his business. Water pumps, feed grinders, milking machines, small motors for many uses, refrigeration are among the many uses of electricity which mean a saving of money and a relief of the drudgery of farm work.

An additional and valuable feature of rural electrification is the fact that for every dollar spent upon line construction at least another dollar probably will be spent by the consumer for wiring and appliances. Thus it will benefit industry engaged in manufacturing and distributing such appliances. Labor is doubly benefited in that direct labor employed in line construction is augmented by the increased work made possible in the manufacture of materials for line construction and in the manufacture of appliances and equipment used by consumers.

Consumers who desire the benefit of Government loans for the installation of wiring and appliances can obtain the benefit of such loans under the provisions of this bill. The facilities afforded by the temporary Rural Electrification Administration has already made it possible to purchase electrical appliances upon terms that make it possible for such to be utilized by the average farmer. Manufacturers of such appliances are now cooperating in this regard.

Rural electrification means more than providing mere lighting facilities for the houses of our farmers. It means not only the substitution of electric lights for unsatisfactory oil lamps and the use of the electric pump in place of carrying water in pails, but it will also mean the use of electric appliances which will end much of the drudgery of the farm wife and the operation of machinery that will enable the farmer to perform much of the heavy work of the farm at a substantial saving.

City dwellers, accustomed to the innumerable services performed each day by electric energy, have difficulty in visualizing the inconveniences experienced by those who live on farms untouched by power lines. All the helps and conveniences that electric current now brings to city and town dwellers can by the provisions of this bill be made available to those who reside on the farms of America and who do not enjoy at the present time the conveniences and comforts that follow the introduction of electric current into a community.

The bill has been carefully drawn, it does not impose any financial obligation upon the Government. It does, however, provide an effectual means of extending governmental aid to persons, corporations, States, subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, peoples' utility districts, and cooperative nonprofit or limited-dividend associations upon a self-liquidating basis of long-term repayment with a low-interest rate.

The program for rural electrification, as provided for in this bill, has been endorsed by the National Grange, Farmers' Union, and other farm organizations, and also by the American Federation of Labor through its affiliated bodies having jurisdiction in the subject matter.

There is no reason why the farmers of America should not have the conveniences, economies, and comforts which are a part of the modern electrified home. I hope that this bill now before the House to accomplish this worth-while purpose will receive the full support of the Membership of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY].

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, without wasting words or allowing any false impressions to be made, I want to state that I am wholeheartedly in support of the Norris rural electrification bill. This bill which we have before us is a bill to provide money for use by the Rural Electrification Administration to promote the development of rural electric distribution systems. It is a works-relief bill of great magnitude, and it is a program that builds for tomorrow as well as it takes care of a very urgent need for increased employment today. Briefly, I want to analyze the motives and arguments of the opposition forces who have rallied to attempt a defeat of this bill. This opposition is not confined to political parties, and I do not make my criticism on a partisan basis. Instead, I appeal to the members of both parties for their Last session, when we considered the holding-company bill. the largest and most extravagant lobby in history was organized to defeat that measure. That lobby, which so lavishly spent its investors' money, is essentially the same as that which now opposes the rural-electrification bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that no opposition from the public-utility companies has been evidenced against this bill whatsoever?

Mr. LUCKEY. I am inclined to think there has been.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There has been no request for time before our committee and no effort on their part to be heard. Is not the gentleman aware that they do not fear this legislation at all?

Mr. LUCKEY. They have blocked it in some instances. They are not in sympathy with it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This legislation?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes; in principle.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes. Mr. PIERCE. Has not rural electrification up to this point amounted to practically nothing for the farmer?

Mr. LUCKEY. That is true; and the farmers in my district were practically unable to get electrification.

Mr. PIERCE. Even now?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes; even now.

Mr. McFARLANE. Are the power companies attempting to block this program?

Mr. LUCKEY. They are already doing that in some dis-They are extending the lines for the purpose of gaining the territory and keeping the rural cooperatives out.

Mr. McFARLANE. So that probably accounts for the reason why they are not opposing this bill and why they are in favor of it as it is drawn?

Mr. LUCKEY. It would seem that way.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCKEY. I cannot yield further. I only have a few minutes. Last year the battle cry of the lobby was, "Pass the bill and you will destroy the life savings of millions of investors." The tactics have been changed, and now the cry is that the proposed rural electrification bill is socialistic and that it brings Government into competition with private business.

Last Saturday I received a letter from a businessman who is prominently identified with one of the semipolitical organizations whose objective is to promote liberty. The writer bitterly criticized me for voting for the so-called death sentence. He stated that my vote destroyed the equity and investment of millions of investors. Now that, mind you, was not a statement of possibility or of what might happen, but it was assertedly a statement based upon what had happened. In plain words my correspondent stated that the Public Utility Act had ruined those investments. That letter from one identified with the Liberty League raised some doubts in my mind, and I decided to investigate what truth ing-company bill was introduced. The stocks in those com-there was in his statement. Was it more power-company propaganda or was it a fact?

Let me examine the charges to show how specious is the reasoning by which the propagandists spread misinformation and falsehoods in the minds of American citizens, for I believe that my correspondent was sincere. I show this because it is the same type of propaganda and equally as false as is being used in opposition to the rural electrification bill. The holding-company bill was introduced on May 9, 1935. Prior to that time there had been no agitation on the subject that would produce any adverse effect upon the price of holding-company stocks. The latter part of August last year the bill became law. Between May and August the propaganda campaign was carried on, and the process of educating the American people to help intimidate Congress reached its full bloom. Literally millions of people were led to believe that the bill menaced their savings. The holding-company abuses in the past were well known, and it was equally well known that it was a situation with which the various sovereign States could not cope effectively because of the limitations placed upon the States under our form of government. The holding companies, with their semipolitical organized henchmen, attacked the bill and spent millions in an effort to defeat it. While they were staging the "widows and orplans" campaign decrying the lost investments, those investments, instead of decreasing in value, were actually increasing. Not only did they increase during the period before enactment of the law, but they have been increasing since the act became effective. Let us take a look at the record. I have prepared a chart to show the fluctuations in the value of the stocks of the principal holding companies since 1929 and in particular to show the values of those stocks at the time the holding-company bill was proposed, when it was enacted, and as they appear today. I ask unanimous consent to include the chart at this point in my remarks.

The 23 holding companies listed in the chart show that in every instance their stocks are now higher than they were the day the holding-company bill was proposed. The widows, the orphans, and the millions of investors have not experienced a loss, but instead they have received a very material gain. American Gas & Electric has increased 50 percent in value. American Superpower has trebled in value. American Power & Light has quadrupled in value. Cities Service stock has more than trebled in value, as have the stocks in Columbia Gas & Electric, Commonwealth & Southern, Electric Bond & Share, and others. Stock values have multiplied five times in Electric Power & Light, six times in North American Light & Power, and nearly five times in Stone & Webster. The A and B shares of United Light & Power have nearly eight times greater value today than they did on the day before the holdpanies gained in value during the months Congress spent in | consideration of the bill, and they have continued to increase in value since the legislation became law. The widow's mite has not been destroyed-it has been multiplied!

Thus far I have dealt with the tactics of the power lobby upon the holding-company bill. Let me now turn to the arguments advanced against the rural-electrification bill. Opposition has been based upon the grounds that the measure is socialistic, that it puts the Government into competition with private enterprise, and that it adds another burden upon an already overtaxed Treasury.

Let us examine the socialistic angle of this legislation. When a group of businessmen band together to start a new enterprise for its private profit, that is cooperation. When a group pools its resources to exploit its fellow men, that is business. When farmers unite to erect an electric-distribution system for their own needs on a nonprofit basis, that is socialism. The element of profit seems to be the deciding line between socialism and business. Do we regard the citizens of a community who organize to provide for police, water systems, sewage systems, and other advantages as Socialists who are destroying the existing order? Rural public power districts are no more socialistic than are the organizations of urban dwellers who seek to provide better conditions in which to live. It is a cooperative movement to provide benefits tangible benefits, which are otherwise inaccessible.

The question arises as to whether rural electrification, as proposed in the present bill, places the Government in competition with private enterprise. Such an assumption is too foolish to merit lengthy discussion. Do these farms have electric power available? If not, where does the element of competition enter into the picture? Under the provisions of this bill the Government loans money to cooperative groups to build electric distribution systems. The builders pay interest on the money they borrow and amortize the principle in orderly fashion. The Government does not own and does not operate the distribution systems any more than it owns and operates the various public buildings and other projects which have been built with money loaned to political subdivisions by the Public Works Administration. The Government does not any more own and operate these systems than it owns and operates the banks and railroads to which it has made huge loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The third objection is that of the added expense to the Federal Government and the additional increase in the public deficit. Let me say that this money is not to be spent in outright grants. The Rural Electrification Administration is not giving away money. This money is loaned at interest, and the Treasury collects the interest and the principle in due course. Actually the Government does not have to pay a dime, and it even gains on the interest rate. Our national debt, over a long period, is not increased. We have heard much about retrenchment and economy in Government expenditures. This bill offers a means of retrenchment in that it helps take care of the work-relief problem by placing workers on projects which are self-liquidating.

Personally I am utterly opposed to "made work" projects. I believe that there are plenty of projects which can be undertaken which will provide some lasting improvements—which will give us something for our money. I believe that there are many self-liquidating projects which can be developed to take care of much of the present unemployment. The present bill offers a good means of taking care of many of our unemployed. It provides work and brings about a real public development and does not cost the Government a cent. It is a recoverable expenditure. In the past I have felt it my duty to vote against many appropriation bills which I believed to be excessive. There is a real need for us to conserve our financial resources, and if we are to do this and at the same time take care of the unemployment situation we must find projects which are self-liquidating. All of you who believe in real economy in expenditures as well as unemployment relief will vote for this measure.

There are few congressional districts which offer a more fertile field than does my own First District of Nebraska. prises is that they cut costs and overhead charges and permit

The farmers in my district are no different from the farmers in all other districts. They know the advantages which they may gain through rural electrification. They fully realize the economic and social values which may be obtained, and they want rural electrification at a price they can afford to pay. They are ready and waiting for the opportunity this measure extends.

To bring economic and social advantages to rural America, to provide work for the unemployed, and to bring about permanent public improvement I urge the passage of the Norris rural-electrification bill. The advantages extend beyond partisan political lines and the benefits will endure for years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, as has been emphasized repeatedly on this floor, a great section of the United States has been denied the opportunity to share in the ever-increasing convenience and comfort of living that follow the widespread use of electricity. Whatever may be the reasons for this neglect-and many explanations have been given—the fact remains, that the rural areas of this country are grievously handicapped, culturally and economically, because of the lack of electric power.

Of course, there have been and are now difficulties in the way. If there had not been difficulties the farm population would have had electricity long since. Unless there were difficulties there would be no call upon the Federal Government to concern itself with the problem.

In brief, the problem may be stated this way: First, in order to reach and maintain the high standard of living in which 120,000,000 Americans believe, it is necessary, among other things, that electricity be brought to the farm and used there in quantities sufficient to affect rural life. Second, present methods of extending rural lines have proved inadequate to carry out this program. Third, it is, therefore, only right that the Government should stand back of its citizens in a determined effort to secure these benefits for themselves.

The suggested plan by which the Government will lend its resources to the fulfillment of the program is the most feasible and practical that has been devised. It has the sanction of farmers and farm associations in all parts of the country. And already the response and cooperation received by the present temporary Rural Electrification Administration indicate that the venture will be overwhelmingly successful.

Good government has been defined as one that helps people to help themselves. R. E. A. is based on that principle. R. E. A. does not, and would not, under this bill, give anything away. It is a financing organization that lends money to agencies in a position to carry through a power-line construction project rapidly and adequately.

Provision is made to see to it that every dollar the Government lends for building rural lines is returned. Nor is this a mere idle boast. Projects submitted to R. E. A. are thoroughly and rigorously examined. Only after a project passes strict engineering, legal, and economic tests is it given final approval. The project must bear evidence of being able to pay all operating costs, including interest, any taxes, and maintenance, and of ability to repay the Government loan.

Projects are not lumped together in the hope that, taken as a whole, most of them will come out all right. Instead, each project is studied individually for its individual merits and for its individual defects.

Considerable criticism has been leveled at the plan on the grounds of supposed injury to present operating private utility companies. This criticism is unwarranted. R. E. A. lines will not compete with existing facilities. In fact, construction of lines by cooperative associations will be to the advantage of the utility companies. With probably very few exceptions power will be purchased from present generating plants, increasing the revenues of the utilities.

But the best argument in favor of nonprofit utility enter-their customers to purchase electricity at lower rates. It is increasingly recognized that electricity is indispensable to acceptable standards of living, especially in rural areas, and legislative bodies have considered the supply of electric current as a matter of public concern. Even when power distribution is almost wholly a private business, profits from its sale are becoming more and more strictly regulated.

The rural-electrification program which was started a year ago as an emergency measure has already had a salutary effect on costs and rates. Before R. E. A. undertook its program, rural lines often cost from $1,500 to $2,000 and more per mile. Utilities—except for a group of decidedly progressive companies—accepted such costs as more or less inevitable. R. E. A. maintained that, as some utilities already were demonstrating, satisfactory lines could be built for about $1,000 per mile. They prepared suggested specifications for low-cost construction. Following the more advanced practices and methods, contractors and utilities are building lines for $1,000, $900, and even less per mile.

State and local regulatory bodies often hold that 7 percent is a fair return on the investment, and rates are based on that figure. If a line costs $500 a mile less than formerly, that means a saving of $35 a year in the charge against the line. If there are three customers to the mile, the bill of each one of them can be a dollar less each month for the same amount of electricity.

But pursuing that same point a little further: If the line is operated by a mutual, cooperative, or similar organization, with the profit eliminated, the amount of revenue needed to support the line is much further reduced.

Often this reduction in the amount of revenues needed will make rural lines feasible, where otherwise they would not be feasible. It tends also, through the reduction of unit costs, to enable the users to buy more electricity and more electric equipment to put it to work. This equipment in turn lightens the farm drudgery, increases farm income, and makes rural life more attractive so that the young folks are likely to stay on the land instead of migrating to the cities.

Such benefits as these we can now confer on a great number of our people. It is right and just that we should do so. To undertake this program will cost little and benefit practically every part of our Nation. We cannot afford to miss such an opportunity [Applause] such an opportunity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

All time has expired. The Clerk will read the first paragraph of the amendment, under the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created and established an agency of the United States to be known as the "Rural Electrification Administration", all of the powers of which shall be exercised by an Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of 10 years, and who shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year. This act may be cited as the "Rural Electrification Act of 1936."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wadsworth: On page 10, line 23, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it will not require 5 minutes to explain the amendment. As the members of the Committee know, this bill as drafted and reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce provides that the Administrator of this act shall serve for a term of 10 years. If you will look over the structure of the Federal Government, I think you will find there is only one exception to a very general rule. That exception is the case of the Comptroller General, who is elected by the Congress of the United States, not appointed by the President, and who serves, as I recollect, for 15 years. All the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, of the Federal Communications Commission, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and of the Federal Trade Commission are appointed by the President and serve for 5 years.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield? I know the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission serve for 7 years, and I think some of the others also.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, generally it is from 5 to 7 years. I think the term of 10 years is excessive. I have no reflection to make on Mr. Cooke. He is an excellent gentleman, but we are not dealing with individuals. We are dealing with the structure of the Federal Government. Ten years is too long a period to be appointed to wield this immense power. My proposal is to make it 5 years. There is nothing partisan in it. It is merely a question of good policy.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I may say in reply to the gentleman from New York that this is a 10-year program. Mr. WADSWORTH. But he can be reappointed.

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot see any reason why this administrator should not be appointed for that length of time. Five years and then someone else is appointed; someone who may not be in sympathy with the program that has been inaugurated or not in sympathy with the policy at all. It would seem to me to simply split the program wide open. Frankly I cannot see any reason, except the fundamental one that the gentleman has, or a political reason, for making the administrator's term a shorter length of time than the life of the act.

I therefore hope the amendment will be rejected and that the Committee will stay with the bill as it has been reported by the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is with very great regret that I vote for this bill as it is now written. I agree with our colleague from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] that 10 years is decidedly too long for the term of the Administrator; I shall vote for the bill if we cannot change it by amendment, but I would have much preferred the bill as drawn by Senator Norris. If I am not mistaken, we are going to be greatly disappointed in the effects of this legislation as now drawn. It seems to me it is too much in the interest of the utility companies who want to get 3-percent money. I live on a farm; for 40 years it has been my home practically all the time. My farm is completely electrified. I know the value of rural electrification. The farms of many of my close neighbors are also electrified. For several years I owned the larger part of a power company. When I owned the company I did my very best to push lines out into the country. Rural electrification should have been long ago carried out by the utility companies themselves. The private companies could have constructed rural lines very cheaply and given their services to the rural communities. The R. E. A. so far has not accomplished very much for rural electrification.

Every time I have appealed for a small community in my country, to extend a line a mile or two to help a dozen or two dozen farmers, there has always been some obstruction found. If the line was possible, it was built by the utility companies. So far as I know, there has been no general lowering of rates in rural communities. I am supporting the gentleman's amendment most heartily.

I am sorry the bill carries any provision permitting the lending of money to private utility companies at rates lower than those given for farm loans. Encouragement should be given to lines owned by the people. This activity seems chiefly concerned with extending governmental benefits to private power companies.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York is adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to discuss this bill. I have great respect for my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce], who has just spoken to the Committee. I do not know the Administrator in charge of this work, but I must say to my colleague that the gentleman's comments so far as Tennessee and my section of the South is concerned do the present Administrator a very great injustice. Throughout middle Tennessee farm homes are receiving, for the first time, the benefits of electric light and electric

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Gladly.

Mr. PIERCE. Is not that because the power companies themselves have been pushed into the field?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Oh, no. The development that is coming most rapidly in the best farming section of my district, which is composed of 18 counties and, I think, the very best farming section in all the southland, is coming as a result of the Tennessee Valley Authority and rural electrification program, which has enabled the farmers to buy the necessary equipment to light their residences, outbuildings, and to drive their machinery.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Gladly.

Mr. MORAN. In answer to what the R. E. A. has accomplished so far—the gentleman perhaps has the information-46 projects have been allocated for a total of $8,265,-912, a new mileage of 7,600, and 28,000 new customers. That was the showing of the R. E. A., the existing organization, as of March 25. As of today, there are 57 allocations for $9,198,812, of which 27 are loan contracts; applications now under consideration amount to $93,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I am very grateful for this most valuable information, as I know each Member of the House is.

We hear loose criticism to the effect that the Government has gone into the business of lending money recklessly and indiscriminately. I have had a small experience in the banking business. This act carries $50,000,000 for the next year and $40,000,000 annually thereafter. This, necessarily, is to be used by small borrowers.

THEY ARE THE ONES WHO PAY MOST PROMPTLY

The bill authorizes loans in the sum of $50,000,000 for the year 1937 and $40,000,000 for each year thereafter for 8 consecutive years, thus making available the sum of $370,-000,000 for rural electrification in the United States. The interest rate is fixed at 3 percent. I am greatly interested in this measure, for it means much to the farmers of my district and to people in all sections of the country. The value to the farm of electric service and the ability to buy the appliances for electric use is invaluable. The use of electricity is one of the basic necessities of farm life. It adds to the comfort of the home. It adds to the health of the family. It removes the drudgery of the faithful housewife and lessens her burdens. Of the 6,800,000 farms in the United States, I regret to say that 6,000,000 of them are without electric service at this time. This bill should make available electric current for at least 1,000,000 farm homes in America. These loans will be promptly repaid. In my district some of the best and most responsible farmers are using the money heretofore provided for this purpose to electrify their residences and outbuildings. It is the beginning of a new day for the people of the rural districts, and especially have the farmers of Middle Tennessee, in my congressional district, been benefited by rural electrification and by the development of the T. V. A. The farmer will receive added public satisfaction and happiness as a result of owning a home that is served by electricity. He will become a greater consumer of electric current than his neighbor in the city or town. He will use the current to drive the water pumps, to chop feeds in his grinder, for milking machines, and small motors for many uses. Refrigeration, of course, will mean a great saving in money and relief of the drudgery on the farm. Only those of us who have been deprived of its use in the past on the farm can appreciate what a great benefaction and blessing it is. Any citizen who has had occasion so many times to go to the barns to look after his livestock in the nighttime or to bridle and saddle the faithful saddle horse to seek a physician because of illness in the family can appreciate the convenience in having the modern barn lighted with electricity or the garage so equipped. It lengthens the days and prolongs the life of the producers of the wealth of America. Nothing is so essential as having a happy and contented farm population. The young men and women who are raised on the farms will be content to continue on them if they are provided the conveniences that their city neighbors have. longer will we witness our young people drifting away from the farm, but many of them will be induced to return and purchase a home when it can be equipped with the modern conveniences. The radio is now in common usage and is a great blessing to the people. It is a source of needed information and entertainment for the people. It is but one of the many conveniences that follows in the wake of the electric current.

The farmers of America are entitled to the conveniences, economies, and comforts which are a part of the modern electrified home. It is fitting and proper that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a branch of the Federal Government, should be made available to furnish credit at a cheap rate of interest to encourage the farmers in their efforts to have added and needed comforts. All too long has the Treasury been made available to those in the cities and in more favored circumstances of life at the expense of the farmers in this country. I know of nothing which has meant so much to the people in my State and district as the money appropriated for the construction of the Norris Dam and the completion of Muscle Shoals. A number of counties in my district are now organizing companies under the provisions of the rural-electrification program so as to have the benefit of electricity for the first time in their homes. And this, too, is in a section where the land is most fertile and the people are and have always been most progressive. It was simply not available to them under previous administrations. A great reduction has been had in the price of electricity to the citizens in the towns in every part of my district as a result of the T. V. A. development. The private power companies have seen the "handwriting on the wall" and are now undertaking to forestall further development or the building of additional power dams by reducing their rates on electricity. It is a case of deathbed repentance and eleventh-hour conversion, but I presume that the old adage will apply—that "it is better late than never." We are reminded of the familiar hymn which states, "While the light holds out to burn, the vilest of the vile may return." The reduction in the rates and the saving to the people has all come about because of the Democratic program here in Washington, which has made possible these great improvements. More power to the New Deal, and may its usefulness be continued in the service of a deserving and grateful people.

Let us pass this bill and make this added contribution to good government. It will return a tenfold dividend to the Treasury and to the people in the long stretch of years ahead. The bill is endorsed by farm bureaus and farmers of the country and when we add to the value of the homes we add to the value of the Treasury in more ways than in dollars and cents. I can see no possible objection to this bill, and I hope it will receive, as I believe it should, the unanimous approval of every Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAYBURN) there were-ayes 31, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Gray of Indiana: After line 25, page 10, insert the following as a new and additional section:

"SEC. 1-A. Said Administration is hereby authorized and empowered to create and establish electrical districts of certain defined limits, conforming with civil divisions of the States and Territories, or otherwise, and to provide for the exclusive genera-tion, transmission, and distribution of electric current within such district, under one system, and to coordinate the different exist-ing systems therein under one general, unified management, with authority and power to provide for the construction of generating plants, transmission and distributing lines, or to acquire such existing plants, transmission and distributing lines as may be found most economical to effect such unified and coordinated system within such district."

THE FIRST REQUIREMENT TO CARRY ELECTRICITY TO THE FARMERS

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to organize a system and to provide means and facilities to carry electricity to the farmers whom the private electric companies have ignored, disregarded, and failed to serve, and left groping in the mud and darkness of primitive or medieval life.

In providing for a farm electric program it must be realized and understood that farmers as a class of people in industry are compelled to rely upon low cash and unreliable income for the payment of their monthly bills and from which they must pay their electric charges. For this reason the first requirement for such farm electric program is low and reasonable charges for service, and without such low and reasonable charges any program to bring electricity to farmers would prove a vain and fruitless gesture, a humiliation, disappointment, and failure.

The building of electric distributing lines will not alone bring electricity to the farmers, nor will the construction of transmission and distributing lines bring such service to them, nor will the construction of generating, transmission, and distributing lines all together bring electricity to the farmers unless low and reasonable charges are provided.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION IS A PROBLEM OF COSTS

The farm electric problem is a problem of costs, a problem of low and reasonable costs, a problem of the elimination of loss and waste, a problem of economy and efficiency, a problem of bringing down electrical costs and charges within the reach of all the farmers.

It has been high and excessive electrical charges which have denied electricity to the farmers. But I believe such low and reasonable rates are feasible, possible, and practicable, and that electricity in ample and sufficient volume to meet the farmers' wants and needs can be brought to them almost as low as pumping and distributing water.

SOME OF THE CAUSES OF HIGH ELECTRIC CHARGES

Some of the causes which have made charges high and excessive are shown by the Federal trade report investigating holding-company activities. One of the charges included was excessive salaries paid to private-company officers, sometimes as high as $300,000 annually paid to one officer of private holding companies. Another reason shown in this report was dividends paid on watered stock and to stockholders, sometimes of many companies, for one and the same service.

Other causes shown by the Federal trade report contributing to high and excessive charges are vast sums expended by private electric companies for newspaper and other propaganda, including paid articles to be published as editorials prepared by the local editors, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars annually. These with other excessive expenditures charged up as operating and administrative costs have been added to the electric rates and collected from the consumers, making the cost of electric service high and extortionate to town and city consumers and prohibitive to farmers.

WHY NINE-TENTHS OF FARMERS ARE WITHOUT ELECTRICITY

These are some of the facts and reasons why only one-tenth of the farmers of the country have been able to secure electricity and why more than nine-tenths of the farmers have been deprived of its advantages, why of the 6,812,049 farmers in the United States only 743,954 have had electricity made available to them and 6,068,095 have been left without electricity. These are some of the causes which have withheld electricity from the farmers of the State of Indiana, why of the 200,835 farms in Indiana only 23,476 enjoy the use of electricity and why 177,359 farmers in Indiana are still groping in the mud and darkness, without electricity for light, heat, or power.

ANOTHER CAUSE WHICH THIS BILL WILL NOT REMEDY

These evils and abuses in the electric service contributing to high and excessive costs and to make electricity prohibitive to farmers may be eliminated and overcome under this bill through the provisions granting loans to farm cooperative associations operating for use and service and without profit or gain. But there is another and equal cause existing to make and hold electric charges high and beyond the means of farmers to pay which this bill will not reach and remedy and, without which remedy provided, low and reasonable rates to farmers will still hold electricity from them.

THE ECONOMIC LAW OF COSTS

It is an accepted and recognized economic law that the cost of a service is determined by the scale of operations under which provided or the cost of any product or commodity is determined by the volume of production under which produced. Under this economic law the larger the scale of operations the lower will be the cost of the service or the larger the volume of production the lower will be the costs of the production. Under this economic law it is only by a large scale of operation that will assure low cost of service or a large volume of production that will insure a low cost of product. This is the economic principle of mass production. Under this economic law small scale of operations or a small volume of production will make low and reasonable costs impossible.

FARMERS CANNOT BE SERVED SEPARATELY

It is for this reason that farmers or rural areas cannot be served separately and apart from the towns and cities therein located. But all consumers of any certain district must be served with electricity together. The farmers of the rural areas cannot be served at low and reasonable rates under a limited service or small volume of production. This is especially true of electric service. The generation, transmission, and distribution of electricity must be in large mass or volume to bring down the unit cost of electricity provided.

THE ELECTRICAL DISTRICT THE REMEDY

There is a remedy for this duplication and overlapping service, this piecemeal extension of distributing lines, this operation of separate and different systems of generating plants, transmission and distributing lines, and the different and separate service provided for towns, cities, and rural communities within the same territory or district. It is the organization of the county or electrical district under one unified or coordinated system for the generation of electric power or current for the whole territory, or all the consumers of such district, which is necessary to lower the powerunit cost by increasing the volume of electricity produced, and by combining town, city, and rural territories under one central power plant for all. The entire territory of the county unit or electrical district, the farm, urban, and city population and all individual consumers and industries served within the specified territory included, must be held for the exclusive market and consumption of such unified system and coordinative facilities to bring electricity within the reach of the farmers.

Under the county unit or electrical district, all existing plants would be coordinated or organized under one unified system for the elimination of loss and waste resulting from duplication and overlapping service necessary for economic and efficient operations. Or the cooperative associations and municipalities may acquire and take over the existing electrical means and facilities under the laws of the State where located for unification or coordination of such plants under one system of operation and management. Or if there is a municipally owned plant within the county territory or electrical district without sufficient generating capacity to produce electrical current or power for all the individual consumers and industry included in such county unit or electrical district, then the municipality owning such plant may apply to the Rural Electrification Administration for a loan to enlarge such municipal plant to provide the farm electric membership association with such increased power or current in addition to the amount required by the city consumers.

THERE IS NO ROYAL ROAD TO RURAL ELECTRIC SERVICE

There is no royal road or highway to bring electricity within reach of all the farmers in sufficient amount for proper use and service. The added charges to pay high-salaried officers, the dividends on watered, fictitious stock, and to pay the repeating holding-company stockholders and the haphazard, piecemeal line extensions made in frenzied haste in quest of increased profits, the duplicating and overlapping service, and all the evils of private-company operations must be eliminated, overcome, and excluded, and electricity carried to the farmers under a system operated for use and service and free from profits and selfish gain and at actual costs, economically and efficiently operated.

THE PURPOSE OF THE AMENDMENT OFFERED

I am offering this amendment as a new section to this bill to create such unified system and to effect such economy and efficiency. This is section 5 of a bill which I have prepared to carry out such plan. If this amendment is not adopted, it is my intention to file my bill, which includes the provision I am offering, creating a county unit or electrical district, and to urge its consideration and adoption as the only solution of the problem of providing low and reasonable rates to farmers.

Without such unified, central system a few more of the farmers with ample means and those more favorably located may be able to take and maintain service. But the great mass of the farmers, the farmers of limited means and income and those more isolated in location, will still be left groping in the mud and darkness of primitive or medieval life.

WILL REDUCE ALL RATES TO TOWN AND CITY AS WELL AS FARM CONSUMERS

Such county or electrical district will not only reduce the rate of electricity to the lowest possible minimum to farmers, but the economy of large-scale production in reducing the unit cost of electric power will bring down the rates to the town and city consumers as well, variously estimated at one-third to one-half below piecemeal, overlapping operations, with benefits and advantages to all.

SOCIAL AND CIVIC ADVANTAGES OF DISTRICT SYSTEM

There is another advantage resulting from the organization of such electrical districts bringing together towns, cities, and rural areas to be served as one body of consumers. Such other advantage is incidental but is a very substantial consideration in the social and civic development of the district community.

The organization of the electric county or district with the power or generating plant located in the county seat or center city will bring the business people of such city and the farmers of the surrounding community in close business and social relationship for mutual benefit and advantage. Such county unit or district will prompt civic pride and enthusiasm of the town, urban, and city dweller in common with the rural residents included in the organized district to the social and civic advantages to all.

ANOTHER VITAL AMENDMENT REQUIRED

There is another vital amendment which I am assured will be offered to this bill by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin]. The amendment will be to strike out from line 6, page 14 of the bill, the innocently appearing words, "person, corporation." This bill was prepared and filed by Senator Norris, considered and reported by the Senate committee, further considered, debated, and passed by the Senate and brought to the House without these two words included and which first appeared in the bill as reported to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The farm electric program was organized to carry electricity to farmers where private companies had failed, neglected, or refused to serve them at reasonable rates, or rates within their means to pay. The effect of this seemingly trivial amendment will be to give the private companies an opportunity to take advantage of their own faults and failures by taking the money intended for the farm cooperatives.

By these two seemingly unimportant words inserted the private companies can defeat the whole object and purpose of the bill. Being already organized and ready they can act before the cooperatives, reduce their rates temporarily, and extend their lines to take on a sufficient number of farmers to prevent the farm cooperative membership required.

With these two words inserted the private electric companies, which had failed, neglected, and refused to provide the farmers with electricity could now receive this money provided for the farmers, serve a few more of the "cream" of the consumers and stop the farm cooperative movement. With these two words left in the bill the farm cooperative membership movement organized to carry electricity to all the farmers at low rates can be defeated in two ways; first, by extending their lines just far enough to take on a sufficient number of farmers to prevent the farm cooperatives from securing the required membership, and second, by absorbing and taking up the funds appropriated for the farmers and thereby leaving the farm cooperatives without money to build their lines as intended.

These two words inserted in the bill will transfer this legislation from a farm-cooperative measure to a Federal agency or administration to finance the private electric companies without any obligation to serve the farmers or to provide electricity at low or reasonable rates.

With no reflection upon the able committee membership, and while maintaining full and absolute confidence in their ability, integrity, and good faith, the quiet and unheralded insertion of these two words is significant of secret lobby methods long resorted to before legislative committees to defeat or frustrate legislative measures or to evade their force and effect if enacted.

THE REMEDY OF PUBLIC OR COOPERATIVE OPERATIONS

And the remedy for the burdensome and excessive rates to pay high salaries of private-company officials and to pay dividends on watered stock and dividends to stockholders of many private or overhead or holding companies for one and the same service, is public or cooperative ownership of the power of generating plants as well as the transmission and distribution systems, operated and carried on for use and service economically and effectively administered at actual cost to the consumers and free from profit and gain.

Public or cooperative ownership and operations generating, transmitting, and distributing electricity at wholesale will bring electricity down to a cost within the reach of every resident of every town, city, hamlet, and farmer in the land.

A NECESSITY TOO VITAL FOR PRIVATE MONOPOLY

Electricity for light, heat, and power has come to be a vital, indispensable necessity in our system of industrial production on the farm and in the rural homes as well as in the factory, mill, and workshop of the towns and great cities of the country. For this reason electricity should no more be left subject to private monopoly than air, light, and water should be allowed to be controlled for private and selfish gain.

The people are entitled to be served with electricity for light, heat, and power and electrical operations carried on for use and service to them without the burdens of profit or gain and at the actual cost of production and distribution and under economical and effective operations.

MEANS AND FACILITIES MUST BE PROVIDED AT COST

The distributing lines to be built for the farmers must be held from profits in construction. They must be contracted for and built upon the basis of actual cost of poles, wires, and equipment and the cost of labor actually performed and only the further cost of proper and expert supervision, with all speculative profits barred and excluded.

Under the system of public and cooperative ownership the farmers of the State of Washington have found by employing their own engineers that they could construct their own lines at not to exceed $600 per mile where they can also buy their electric current from publicly owned generating plants at one-half cent per kilowatt-hour. This same economy and low rate can be taken advantage of in Indiana by the electric cooperative associations under direct construction operations with the aid of an electrical engineer furnished by the State-wide cooperative organization or by the Federal Rural Electrification Administration and by buying current generated under public ownership.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP AND COOPERATIVE OPERATIONS ARE NOT AN EXPERIMENT

Public or cooperative ownership is not a sentimental experiment; it is a practical reality of the times, an economic necessity under industrial conditions to make available to the people the use and benefit of a great natural force which is the property and inheritance of all the people and which they are entitled to enjoy as free as water, light, and the air they breathe. The merits of public or cooperative ownership are based upon the natural principle that men will not act for others as they will act in the interest of themselves. And first to conserve their own welfare they must assume control of their own affairs. And this has become the basis alone upon which to ground a system of public service, whether for providing water for the people or generating electric power for transmission and distribution to them.

A COMPARISON OF PUBLIC OR COOPERATIVE RATES WITH PRIVATE CHARGES

Under such county or electrical district the farmers of Alcorn County, Miss., are being supplied with electricity and for a certain amount, 20 kilowatt-hours, for which they are paying only $1. The farmers, under private-company ownership, in Arkansas, are paying for the same amount of power $4.50. In Iowa they are paying for a like amount the sum of $4, and in New York they are paying as high as $6 for the same amount.

The Virginia, Minn., municipally owned plant is furnishing 40 kilowatt-hours for 80 cents. At Minneapolis the privately owned plant is charging for the same amount of current $2.18, and in Mankato, Minn., a privately owned plant is charging for the same amount $2.97. At St. Cloud, Minn., a privately owned plant is charging for the same amount of current $2.38.

In Tupelo, Miss., under public ownership and cooperative distributing systems, the farmers are paying for 1,000 kilowatt-hours $8.90, while under private ownership in Kentucky they are paying for the same amount $34, in Maine $41, and in Illinois $30.70, in New York $19, in Pennsylvania $28, in Virginia $45, and in Arkansas $35.90.

THE COMPARISON IN INDIANA

The lower rates under public or cooperative ownership is shown and illustrated in Indiana by the different rates or charges between the Washington, Ind., municipally owned plant, and the Madison, Ind., privately owned plant. Where in Washington, Ind., under public ownership the charge for 25 kilowatt-hours is $5.50, while the Madison, Ind., rate under private ownership is $10.25 for the same amount, 25 kilowatt-hours, or 83 percent higher than charged by the publicly owned plant.

The Frankfort municipally owned plant sells 25 kilowatthours of current for $1.25, while the Lakeport privately owned plant sells the same amount for $2.12, or 69 percent higher than the municipally owned plant. The Crawfords-ville municipally owned plant sells 25 kilowatt-hours of current for $6.10, while the Insull private plant at Huntington, Ind., sells the same kilowatt-hours at $10.80, or at a rate 77 percent higher than the public plant.

WHEN THE FARMERS WILL COME INTO THEIR OWN

When the county or electrical district is organized and systematized for efficient operation and the loss and waste of duplicating overlapping service has been overcome and eliminated and the users of electric power have been relieved of these burdens added to their charges, and when the cooperative producing plants are made to furnish electricity at the lower cost under larger volume, under economical and efficient operations and at the actual cost of production and cooperative transmission and distributing lines are made to carry current without extortion, then the farmers of the country will come into their own and enjoy the comforts and blessings, the use, benefits, and advantages of electricity equal with the other parts of the population.

SERVING THE ISOLATED FARMERS

Instead of only serving the cream of the farmers and those least expensive to reach, as has been the policy of private companies, not only the great mass of the farmers will be served but the costs of the service will be spread to serve isolated farmers and those living in the sparsely or thinly settled territory. All the farmers will be served with electricity and at far lower rates than the cream and with the cost spread and made equal to all, like the mail or parcel-post service delivering to patrons at a greater distance at the same rate patrons nearer are served under the public-mail or post-office system.

PRIVATE ELECTRIC COMPANIES CANNOT SERVE FARMERS

Private electric companies with high-salaried officials to pay, with dividends to collect from consumers sometimes for stockholders of many holding or overhead companies, can no more and will no more carry electricity to all the farmers at low and reasonable rates than a private-company mail service or a private express company could have or would have brought the rural free delivery and the parcel post to the farmers. This rural service for the farmers calls for a public or cooperative agency operated for use and service only and economically and efficiently carried on at the actual cost of service and production, and free from the burdens of profit and gain.

PRIVATE COMPANY OBJECTIONS

The objection will be urged that public ownership and cooperative operations are invading the rights of private business and taking away individual enterprise and individual initiative and incentive. The answer to this objection is that public ownership comes in to perform a service only where private ownership fails. Private ownership has failed to bring electricity to the farmers and has left them in the mud and darkness, except the "cream" or the few most profitably to be served.

When private ownership fails to function, the people are not compelled to sit idly by and suffer for want of necessary service. They have a right to act and serve themselves either by their own cooperative efforts or by calling upon the Government to act for them. When private business failed to provide employment and the people were without earnings and income, starving, freezing, and suffering, the public comes in to provide employment and bring earnings and income to them and thereby provide the people relief.

OTHER OBJECTIONS URGED

The objection will also be urged that the service of valuable administrators or executive officials would be dispensed with. But this only applies to such high officials who are drawing salaries far in excess of any substantial services rendered to consumers, sometimes as high as $300,000 annually. Public or cooperative ownerhip and operations do not bar the employment of necessary and efficient officers. These are retained and paid higher than under private ownership. Nor will corporation operations dispense with the employment of necessary laborers to carry on the operations of the system. Laborers are paid higher wages than under private ownership, which is made possible by eliminating the salaries of the high officials performing trivial service and who are drawing excessive salaries or pay.

Another argument generally used against public ownership is that its operations are carried on with loss, waste, and inefficiency, and subject to the evils of political influence. With the free common-school system and the mail and parcel-post system, neither of these great services are impaired by political influence and are rendering such satisfactory service that no consideration of the people would induce them to give up the school system or Postal Service for private operation and control.

PRIVATE COMPANIES HAVE FAILED THE FARMERS

Then there are some services so vital and necessary to the welfare of the people that the service of the public is required to safeguard their rights and interests, such as the common-school system and the parcel-post system referred to. Private utility companies have failed the farmers. They have left the farmers out in the mud and darkness without light for their homes and barns, without power for their machinery; and on such failure the farmers have a natural right to organize under cooperative associations and invoke the aid of the Government for relief.

The tragedy of it all is that the farmers are not only left unserved but the private electric companies are opposing all efforts for their relief and condemning them to darkness, refusing to serve them themselves and objecting to their being served by others or organizing to serve themselves.

PRIVATE COMPANIES LOSING NOTHING

Nothing is being taken away from the complaining private companies. They have not been and are not now serving the farmers. They have never held or served the individual farmers of the country. They will be losing nothing by the public or cooperative ownership coming in to rescue the deserted farmers. The complaint is not because the private companies are losing the business, but because they do not want to see a comparison of cooperative with private service and a practical object lesson held before the people. They will not serve the farmers or allow others to serve them.

THE INTEREST CHARGE

Another relief which must be granted to farm electrical cooperative organizations is the excessive interest charge which has gone to increase the rates to the farmers. It has been shown by the report of the Federal Trade Commission that under private holding companies, monopolizing and holding control of electric service for exorbitant and excessive rate charges, the holding or overhead company has charged the under or operating company 8-percent interest, compounded semiannually, and compelled its collection from the consumer in the form of higher and excessive electric charges.

The interest for the money loaned under this Rural Electrification Administration is the lowest rate for money which has ever been furnished the farmers. But the farmers are entitled to money, interest at a nominal lower rate.

PAYING INTEREST TO FINANCIERS ON GOVERNMENT MONEY

The Government is furnishing this money to the bond and investing financiers at less than one-third of 1 percent as cost to them. And in fairness there is no reason why the money should not be loaned to the farm cooperatives at a rate at least as low as the money furnished to the financiers. The farmers borrowing this money should know that they are not paying this 3-percent interest to the Government. They are paying it to the bond investing bankers who obtain the money from the Government for practically no charge to them. Farmers should realize and understand that they are toiling through the winter's wind and through the burning summer's sun to pay tribute levied upon them through the jugglery and mysteries of money and are paying millions to lending financiers for the use of the people's money.

THE PRIVATE-COMPANY OVERCHARGE

Hon. John E. Rankin, Member of Congress from Mississippi, has prepared a comprehensive statement showing a comparison of rates and charges for electric service in the different States under private electric company operations and public or cooperative ownership, and gives these charges for each State separately. The T. V. A. rates compared by him refer to the charges for electricity by the Government-owned generating plant operated at the Muscle Shoals Dam, and the comparison is with the charges of privately owned electrical plants obtained from their regular rates. The statement is based upon facts, authorities, and data presented to him by Congress, and is as follows:

MAINE

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Maine would save $5,087,000 a year.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of New Hampshire would save $3,443,000 a year.

VERMONT AND RHODE ISLAND

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the States of Vermont and Rhode Island together would save $8,222,000 a year.

MASSACHUSETTS

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Massachusetts would save $37,184,000 a year.

CONNECTICUT

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Connecticut would save $14,451,000 a year.

NEW YORK

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of New York would save $125,699,000 a year.

NEW JERSEY

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of New Jersey would save $39,123,000 a year.

PENNSYLVANIA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Pennsylvania would save $71,169,000 a year.

OHIO

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Ohio would save $46,843,000 a year.

INDIANA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Indiana would save $19,184,000 a year.

ILLINOIS

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Illinois would save $58,474,000 a year.

MICHIGAN

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Michigan would save $34,025,000 a year.

WISCONSIN

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Wisconsin would save $17,893,000 a year.

MINNESOTA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Minnesota would save $14,460,000 a year.

IOWA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Iowa would save $12,480,000 a year.

MISSOURI

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Missouri would save $21,068,000 a year.

NORTH DAKOTA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of North Dakota would save $2,184,000 a year.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of South Dakota would save $2,480,000 a year.

NEBRASKA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Nebraska would save $7,156,000 a year.

KANSAS

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Kansas would save $9,174,000 a year.

DELAWARE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, MARYLAND, AND WEST VIRGINIA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the States of Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia, and the District of Columbia together would save $24,870,000 a year.

VIRGINIA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Virginia would save $9,600,000 a year.

NORTH CAROLINA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of North Carolina would save $10,642,000 a year.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of South Carolina would save $5,567,000 a year.

GEORGIA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Georgia would save $9,666,000 a year.

FLORIDA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Florida would save $9,141,000 a year.

KENTUCKY

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Kentucky would save $8,227,000 a year.

TENNESSEE

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Tennessee would save $9,852,000 a year.

ALABAMA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Alabama would save $6,163,000 a year.

MISSISSIPPI

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Mississippi would save $3,981,000 a year.

ARKANSAS

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Arkansas would save $4,157,000 a year.

LOUISIANA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Louisiana would save $7,401,000 a year.

TEXAS

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Texas would save $24,912,000 a year.

OKLAHOMA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Oklahoma would save $8,639,000 a year.

MONTANA AND UTAH

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the States of Montana and Utah together would save $6,546,000 a year.

IDAHO

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Idaho would save $2.761,000 a year.

WYOMING

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Wyoming would save $1.318,000 a year.

COLORADO

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Colorado would save $6.405.000 a year.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the States of Arizona and New Mexico together would save $4,287,000 a year.

NEVADA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Nevada would save $1,034,000 a year.

WASHINGTON

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Washington would save $12,188,000 a year.

OREGON

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of Oregon would save $6,929,000 a year.

CALIFORNIA

Under the T. V. A. rates the people of the State of California would save $53,503,000 a year.

THE OVERCHARGE IN INDIANA

Now coming to the overcharge in my own State of Indiana, we find that the people of the State of Indiana are paying annually over 19 millions of dollars more than the fair and reasonable cost of electricity as provided under public and cooperative ownership. The people of the State of Indiana used 1,209,459,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy last year for which they paid the sum of $39,861,716. Under the T. V. A. rates, the cost would have been $20,677,716, a saving of $19,184,000 a year. Under the Tacoma rates, the cost would have been $20,672,716, a saving of $19,189,000 a year. Under the Ontario rates, the cost would have been $16,219,967, a saving of $23,641,749 a year. Under the Winnipeg rates, the cost would have been $13,351.716, a saving of $21.510.000 a year.

This 19 millions of dollars is being collected from the people of the State of Indiana to pay high salaries of presidents and other head officials of the private electrical companies doing business in the State and for dividends on watered stock and for dividends to stockholders of many private electric holding companies for one and the same service rendered the people. The local and operating companies furnishing or providing the people with electricity are being compelled by the foreign, overhead companies to collect this amount for salaries and dividends in the form of increased charges and are powerless to safeguard their consumers against the high and extortionate charges resulting.

SOME OF THE USES OF ELECTRICITY IN THE FARM HOME

The following are some of the many uses which electricity can be made to serve to relieve from the irksome drudgery of woman's work on the farm and the many comforts, conveniences, and pleasures which electricity brings to the farm home:

For churning, corn popper, door bell, hair dryer, hair clipper, bottle heaters, water heaters, curling irons, flatirons, lighting dwelling and premises, radio sets, ranges, refrigerators, sewing machines, sausage grinders, toasters, vacuum cleaner, waffle iron, washing machine, water cooler, water pump, and dish washer.

SOME OF THE USES OF ELECTRICITY IN FARM OPERATIONS

And these are some of the tasks performed by electricity on the farm to relieve from the burdens of farm work and which is today revolutionizing farm operations and life in the country:

For cooling milk, pasteurizing milk, bottling milk, operating brooders, charging batteries, making cheese, cleaning grain, clipping horses, for cold storage, concrete mixer, for shelling corn, for cream separator, cutting ensilage and feed, running frost-preventer fans, grinding feed and grain, heating poultry water and stock tank water, hoisting hay, making ice, operating incubators, milking cows, mixing feed, operating machinery for repair shop, running grindstones, sawing wood, shearing sheep, pumping water and washing bottles for dairy, lighting barn, stables, and dairy, garage, walks, and driveways.

COSTS TO INDIVIDUAL FARMERS UNDER COOPERATIVE OPERATION

Under public and cooperative ownership and operations, Mr. R. L. Burns, Guys, Tenn., uses lights in his barn, stables, and garage, a radio, refrigerator, and electric iron, vacuum cleaner, washing machine, sewing machine, and electric water pump, and battery charger. He reports that in February last he used 57 kilowatt-hours at a cost for electricity and amortized payment of $2.21, or at a cost for electricity alone of $1.64.

THE MACHINE AGE

We are living under the machine age, and under which all industry and production is dependent upon power for machine operations. This has become true with farmers as well as other classes in industry and without equal power available to them agriculture must suffer great disadvantage. Farmers, in fact, have greater need for machine power than other individuals, necessary to relieve them from the irksome drudgery of the many different farm operations.

But notwithstanding these greater needs of farmers for light as well as machine power, electricity has been brought or furnished to every other producing class for use in their business operations, while the farmer has been left unprovided and floundering in the darkness. There is nothing that can be brought to the farm nor to the farm homes of the country which will bring like or equal advantage or can be used for as many different purposes as electricity for light, heat, and power. Electricity is revolutionizing farm life.

PARITY OF OPPORTUNITY AND EQUAL ADVANTAGE

The farmers have long suffered for want of parity of prices; that is, for want of being able to buy their supplies for farm operations as low as they are compelled to sell their crops, and under which they are forced to sell at a low price and buy at a high price. But they are suffering the same or more for want of parity of equal advantages in farm production. While other producers are using machines and enjoying the use of electric power most of the farmers are compelled to produce without such economic parity. Parity of advantages and opportunities in production and the conduct of operations are just as necessary to the farmer for his equality with other producing classes as parity of prices of what they have to sell and buy.

ANSWER TO OBJECTION THAT ELECTRICITY IS A STATE AND NOT A NATIONAL PROBLEM

The production or generation of electricity, and incidentally the transmission and distribution thereof, involves a national problem, and, with the inauguration of a farmelectric program, the foundation must be concurrently laid on a basis of interstate service and concern. And this is more especially true with the farm or rural electric service.

Providing electricity to the farmers in rural areas is not a local state question in Sweden. It is not a local or state question in Denmark. It is not a local or state problem in England. It is not a local or state problem in France, nor in many other great countries of Europe, where nine-tenths of the farmers are provided with electric power. It is a national problem in those countries, where nine-tenths of the farmers are provided with electricity, whereas in this country, where private electric companies are holding electricity under divided State jurisdictions, only one-tenth of the farmers are provided electric power and nine-tenths are left out in the mud and darkness.

Under divided State jurisdiction in Indiana, of the 200,835 farms in that State only 23,476 enjoy the use of electricity, and these are compelled to pay a high and burdensome rate, and under such divided State jurisdiction, of the 6,812,049 farmers in all the States, only 743,954 are provided the advantages of electricity.

MUST DEVELOP SYSTEM LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

The falling waters of the great streams and rivers of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and of other great streams and water courses of the country, which are located in and intersect many States, will furnish the electric power for the future sufficient to light every street and highway and every private dwelling and every public building in the land and to furnish power for every mill, factory, workshop, and to operate every machine on the farm and industry. And some day these great onward-flowing streams will be improved for flood control, and for irrigation or water transportation or for all. And with these great valuable uses power will be developed over and over again from every stream to its mouth to its source, and the light can be made to rival the sunshine and the power developed to equal the forces of nature.

In the meantime we cannot wait until these great water-power facilities are planned, entered upon, and completed. We must act now and provide electricity for the present by the construction of smaller scale generating plants or producing facilities of smaller volume production. But while providing and using such present available means these great water power forces must be developed under a system looking to their future and ultimate coordination and their coordination with transmission and distributing lines which we must provide for and build now by observing a well considered and mature plan for such unified means and facilities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it too late now to make a point of order against this amendment on the ground it is not germane?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The amendment has been debated.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment goes exactly in the face of what we are trying to do, and if enacted our money would not go very far. It would be used up at one step. I therefore trust the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Gray].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Administrator is authorized and empowered to make loans in the several States and Territories of the United States for rural electrification and the furnishing of electric energy to persons in rural areas who are not receiving central-station service, as hereinafter provided; to make, or cause to be made, studies, investigations, and reports concerning the condition and progress of the electrification of rural areas in the several States and Territories; and to publish and disseminate information with respect thereto.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I read in the report of this bill entitled "An act to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes", this statement made by the committee:

There is no reason why the farmers of America should not have the conveniences, economies, and comforts which are a part of the modern electrified home. It is believed that the 10-year program provided by this bill will aid greatly in establishing the much-needed balances between urban and rural standards of life."

Realizing full well what the committee meant to say in that paragraph, I want to suggest an amendment that instead of saying, "There is no reason why the farmers of America * * *" should not enjoy these benefits, we say, "There is every reason why the farmers of the country should enjoy the benefits of rural electrification." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to be born and brought up on a farm which is still my home. When I was a child we had no electricity. We had kerosene lights, lanterns, and old windmill to pump water—no electricity of any kind—and I lived there for years; my mother still lives there and it is my home today. I have now seen the advantages of electricity brought to that home and farm and I believe that by the enactment of this legislation, going as far as it does, that we will be rendering a great service to the people of New Hampshire, New England, and every State of this Union, and that there will be happiness, contentment, and prosperity which they could never so fully enjoy under the old system which has been in effect so many years in this country.

This bill on which we are to vote today provides for two kinds of loans—first, for generating plants, distribution lines, and electric transmission; and, second, for the wiring of consumers' premises and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances.

The Government is fully protected, because no grant or subsidy is provided for in the bill. Money loaned for rural electrification must be returned to the Government with a reasonably low rate of interest. In the testimony before the committee which favorably reported this bill it was shown that of the 6,800,000 farms in the United States, approximately 6,000,000 do not receive central-station service. Under this bill approximately 1,000,000 of this number may be helped, and this number of farms is well within the number that can be served on a self-liquidating basis. The value to the farm of electric service is such that the service obtained is continued as one of the basic necessities of farm life.

It is most interesting to note that the bill now before us has been endorsed and recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, the Administrator of the present Rural Electrification Administration, and the leading farm organizations of the United States, including the New Hampshire Farm Bureau from whose president, George M. Putnam, I received a letter of approval several weeks ago.

The great interest manifest throughout the Nation for the rural electrification program shows how much the passage of the bill now before us will add to the comfort, satisfaction, and happiness of our farmers. Another strong argument for the passage of this bill is the realization that a valuable feature of rural electrification is the fact that for every dollar spent upon line construction, at least another dollar will probably be spent by consumers for wiring and appliances. These matters are well emphasized in the committee report as well as the fact that labor will be doubly benefited, because direct labor employed in the construction of electric lines will be greatly helped by the increased work made possible in the manufacture of materials for line construction and in the making of appliances and equipment used by consumers. Consumers who desire the benefit of Government loans for wiring and appliances can obtain the benefit of such loans under the terms of this bill, whereas in the past they have been sold at such prices as to make it practically impossible for the ordinary farmer to get them. In conclusion, I agree thoroughly with the statement of the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration made on March 14, 1936, that "it is within the power of the Congress to make possible the electrification of rural America within our generation.'

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, insofar as I have been able to ascertain, the people of my district are practically unanimous in the hope that Congress will immediately pass this rural electrification bill providing for the electrification of the farm homes of America.

Like many of you, my earlier years were spent on the farm. The profitless toil and drudgery of those monotonous years are unforgettable. Tallow candles and oil lamps provided the only illumination available to those of us living on the farm at that time.

My earliest recollections of hearing electricity discussed in relation to the farm was when racketeering lightning-rod peddlers passed through certain rural communities swindling credulous farmers out of their hard-earned cash.

In those days we could not even imagine having electric illumination and electric power on the farm. Today the farmer not only imagines himself the beneficiary of electric illumination and electric power, he is demanding that he have the same privilege of enjoying the benefits of electricity as are enjoyed by those living in the cities.

When the need for a given type of legislation becomes so obvious as is the need for this legislation we are considering here today, then delay is inexcusable.

NEED OF ELECTRIFICATION IN MY OWN STATE-OHIO

Permit me to present briefly these interesting facts, proving conclusively that this legislation providing for rural electrification is greatly needed by the farmers of my own State—Ohio—and the Nation:

In Ohio 80 percent of our farms are without any electrical service whatever. Seventy percent of our Ohio farms are without facilities for piping the water into the house. Sixty-five percent are without radios. Forty-five percent are without telephones, and 20 percent of Ohio farm homes have no automobiles.

Now let us compare the need for rural electrification in Ohio with the need throughout the other States of the Union, as indicated by the following facts:

While 80 percent of the Ohio farms are without electric lights or electric service of any kind, the farmers without this service in the other States of the Union are in excess of 90 percent.

In the rest of the Nation farmers without telephones aggregate 85 percent.

Seventy percent of the Nation's farms have no radios. Sixty-five percent of the farmers have no telephones.

Forty percent of the farmers do not even have automobiles. In the face of these amazing facts, is it surprising that millions of young people are anxious to leave the farm?

You can see at once that this matter of rural electrification involves a social as well as an economic problem.

When erosion washes the rich top soil away from the farms we become deeply concerned in contemplation of the vast waste of wealth, but when discontent, drudgery, and monotonous living conditions force the boys and girls off the farm and into the city, some Tory-minded reactionaries seem to be less concerned.

THE REMEDY IS OBVIOUS

It is an outrageous situation when nearly one-fourth of our American citizens are compelled to endure primitive living conditions and primitive working tools.

Nearly 30,000,000 people in our rural districts are compelled to get along with flickering candles or dirty oil lamps for illumination; they are denied the safety and convenience of running water and must constantly pump and carry water in pails for household and farm use; they must use manual labor for chores which easily could be mechanized if they had cheap, dependable electric power.

Our farmers do not endure these hardships from choice. Neither, in many cases, do they endure such hardships from any inability or unwillingness to pay a reasonable price to end them. These inexcusable backward conditions come from the fact that electric power is not generally available in rural areas.

REDUCE FARM DRUDGERY

Today this Congress has an opportunity to correct these deplorable conditions and with the opportunity goes the responsibility for immediate action. By supporting this measure we help to rescue farm women from drudgery, improve rural living standards, equalize farm and city cultural advantages, and strike a great blow for general economic betterment throughout the land.

No truly statesman-minded legislator can justify his hesitation in the presence of such a great opportunity to serve the people of America.

Without subsidizing one branch of our national structure at the expense of another without competing in any way with established business, and at negligible cost to the Government, we can, by our votes here today, make it possible for our farmers in large areas over the country to enjoy the blessings of central station electric service.

TEN-YEAR PROGRAM

This great service to the farmer can be accomplished by approving legislation permitting the lending of Federal funds for rural electrification in a 10-year program.

This legislation would make what is now only a temporary emergency effort in this line, a permanent function of our Government.

A year ago, when we passed the Emergency Relief Act, we earmarked a portion of the money to be used to extend electrical benefits into new regions and localities.

A Federal rural electrification program was launched, centered principally in the Rural Electrification Administration, an independent agency established by President Roosevelt.

Let me show you what success we may expect if we extend this work in the future.

ACTIVITY REVIVED

At the beginning of 1935, only 1 farm in 9 had electricity of any kind. Although the electric utility industry was more than 50 years old, and although the rural field was almost the only field not extensively and intensively cultivated by the utility companies, building of new lines had been falling off rapidly and in 1934 had almost stopped.

The Rural Electrification Administration was organized in May 1935 and immediately undertook a twofold effort to revive activity in rural line extensions.

The direct method was by lending money on rather liberal terms to finance the building of noncompetitive lines; the indirect method was to encourage the use of private capital for such construction on reasonable terms.

The first few months were taken up in gathering together a small organization—Rural Electrification Administration has only about 250 workers—in stimulating applications for loans, in examining them for soundness, and in formulating policies. All these things had to be done before sound loans could be made.

SPEEDED UP ELECTRIFICATION

But the other side of the program did not need to wait. No sooner was the Rural Electrification Administration established than the speeding up of rural electrification began in earnest.

There was a great stir all over the country. Agencies which had never paid much attention to rural electrification began to investigate the possibilities.

As soon as the Rural Electrification Administration began receiving application for loans and it was obvious that the Government's program was a serious effort vigorously prosecuted, then new-line construction was started.

Many progressive utility companies liberalized their antiquated farm policies, especially during the late summer and through the fall, and line building went ahead at a pace unequalled for several years back.

In New York State alone reports indicate that more new lines were built in 1935 than were built in all the 48 States in 1934.

MOVEMENT POPULAR

For the country at large, reports to the Rural Electrification Administration show that nearly three times as many new farm customers were added to electric-distribution sysbe the greatest rural-electrification year we have ever known.

These facts are vouched for by the rush of orders going to makers of rural transformers, to the wire mills, to the manufacturers of meters, through line hardware factories, through the railroads which transported this material.

Farm papers, metropolitan journals, electrical trade papers, rural newspapers; all are full of rural electrification news and

I shall return to this activity a little later. Now, let us see how the direct Government program—that of lending money for line construction—progressed.

BUILD 7,500 MILES OF RURAL LINES

The first loan contracts were executed between the Government and the project sponsors in November 1935.

Since then Federal funds have been finally earmarked or expended for 43 projects in 20 States.

These projects call for loans of little more than $8,000,-000 to be used for building about 7,500 miles of rural lines, taking electricity, for the first time, to more than 27,000 farm

About half of that activity took place in February, when the lending program went into full stride.

These projects are widely scattered. Five of them are in my own State of Ohio; others are located literally from Canada to the Gulf; from the Atlantic to the Rockies. Their sponsors range from newly organized farmers' cooperatives to private utility companies of long experience.

The rural electrification program, which we are considering in this legislation, can be undertaken without straining the Federal purse.

The only permanent expense the Federal Government is asked to assume is the cost of administering the program.

Every dollar used for building a rural line, for wiring a farm, for purchasing electrical appliances, for installing electrical farm machinery and equipment will be a loan-on liberal terms, to be sure, but a loan to be repaid with interest. The Government will have reasonable security for each loan it makes.

ELECTRIFICATION WILL REDUCE WASTE

We are asked to assume only the cost of administering the program of rural electrification. This is a legitimate use of Federal funds. We cannot ask the farmer to assume it; we might as well ask the railroads to pay the expenses of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The economic plight of the farmer previous to this administration was a nightmare of poverty, bankruptcy, low prices, and insecurity which all farmers want to forget.

The average farm incomes have increased greatly.

As everyone knows, the Roosevelt administration has brought to the farmers of America the first real prosperity they have enjoyed in many years. This added service to the farmer in the form of rural electrification will be appreciated by every farmer from coast to coast.

As everybody knows, under the Roosevelt administration farmers are now able to enjoy more of the luxuries of life. Electricity on the farm, however, is not a luxury. Over and over it has been proved that electricity is an absolute necessity which a modern farm cannot afford to be without, and we of the Roosevelt administration are determined that the farmer shall enjoy this necessity without delay.

PREFER ELECTRIC SERVICE TO AUTOMOBILE

Farm families on partial relief have kept their light bills paid and so preserved the continuity of electric service.

Instances have been recorded of farmers letting their automobiles be repossessed before allowing their electric-light service to be discontinued.

During the darkest days of the depression farmers fortunate enough to have electric-light service not only kept their electric service but even added new electrical equipment in many cases.

The farmers found that electric operation of farm motors, electric refrigeration of milk, and electric installations in poultry raising made possible savings in cost, reduction in waste, and increase in income which went far to offset, and lending of Government funds.

tems in 1935 as in 1934, and that 1936 will probably prove to | in some instances more than offset, the bill for electric energy and the cost of the equipment.

FARMERS GOOD CREDIT RISKS

Farmers have never been backward about spending their money for the things they really need.

That farmers are good credit risks is conceded by all. A new light on the ability of farmers to pay for electricity is shown in this chart to which I call your attention. It shows the extent of farm modernization as measured by several factors.

Taking those with central-station electrical service, as well as those with their little individual lighting plants, less than 15 percent of our farms had electric lights in 1935.

Running water, which American tourists abroad so quickly use as a measure of superior civilization—and rightly—comes into just about as many farmhouses as have electric lights. That is not a mere coincidence; electric pumping is the best and most economical way yet found for providing running water on the farm.

In many cases the saving on lamp chimneys and kerosene and gasoline and ice and spoilage will more than pay the electric-current bill.

I do not think we need to worry about the self-supporting character of the rural electric system.

ELECTRIFICATION WILL PAY FOR ITSELF

Without implying any criticism of the private utility companies which joined this great movement for rural electrification last year and this spring, they are not generally building their lines as a philanthropic measure. They are building them because they expect the lines not only to pay their own way but to return a profit.

These lines are being built into much more sparsely settled country than the utilities companies would consider some time ago. Why are these lines considered profitable now when, a short time ago, they would not have been undertaken for fear of loss?

A principal reason is the cost of lines has been reduced.

Rural electric lines cost formerly one thousand five hundred or even as much as two thousand dollars per mile. They were built planlessly, each little extension line being forced to stand on its own.

Now, however, the Rural Electrification Administration engineers and the more progressive utility companies have found and proved that large areas can be electrified almost completely as a unit at low cost.

Line costs have fallen greatly and technique has advanced. Lines can be built under most conditions for about $1,000 per mile to serve three customers to the mile.

PROJECTS IN MY OWN STATE-OHIO

In my home State-Ohio-projects furnish an interesting example of the extent to which line costs have come down recently.

Estimates carefully prepared by the sponsors indicated the lines would cost $1,316 in one county; $1,296 in another

Rates were tentatively set to return enough revenue to cover all expenses and repay the loan with interest.

The engineers' specifications were examined by the Rural Electrification Administration and approved.

They were submitted to electrical contractors, and bids for line construction were invited according to the specifications provided.

The bids were open, private concerns were awarded contracts at figures averaging $1,044 and $903 a mile, respec-

FACTS FOR PESSIMISTS ON SECURITY

Some have been reluctant to approve a proposal to lend the entire cost of the line construction as was indicated by the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] a few moments ago.

In reply to those who seem to fear and tremble at the thought of a so-called 100-percent loan and who doubt that a mortgage only on the lines themselves will be adequate security, permit me to call attention to precedent for such Loans of this type are authorized in the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in 1932, during the administration of President Hoover. The Public Works Administration more recently has made outright grants of a portion of the money and loaned all of the rest.

ALL MONEY SPENT FOR LINES

When the Government lends money for the rural electrification system, it lends the actual cost of building these systems.

The Government does not pay for such intangible, but readily appraisable, factors as rights-of-way or franchises.

The Government does not pay for any promoters' service. Every penny loaned by the Government goes to buy line construction, materials, and to assemble them in their proper places.

When the system is done the Government has a first mortgage on repossessable property, worth not only the amount which has been invested, but also a considerable additional sum, the going-concern value of a complete system.

WHY THE SYSTEM WILL INCREASE IN VALUE

As a going concern, a rural electrification distribution system is extremely apt to increase in value during the first few years, even though some small depreciation may occur to the physical property.

This is due to the fact that when the line opens up it rarely serves every customer within its territory.

At first many of the possible customers are often a little hesitant. They do not want to sign up for service until they are sure the line is actually going to materialize and until they find from their neighbors' experiences just how much electricity can do for them.

News travels fast in rural communities. As soon as these nonsubscribers find out that electricity saves money for their neighbors and brings so much of the convenience, safety, and pleasure which they have lacked so long, they clamor to be connected to the power line.

The more customers there are among whom the fixed expenses of operating can be divided the more profitable and the more valuable the line becomes.

LOANS PAID IN INSTALLMENTS

Moreover, the Rural Electrification Administration contracts call for repayment of the loan in installments; in other words, as the system attains this "going-concern" value the amount of the Government mortgage is constantly diminishing.

But there is another reason why loans to cover the entire construction costs are not only reasonable but necessary to the success of the entire program.

Lending Government funds for the entire construction cost of the distribution lines releases the cash resources of the lines' customers for the purchase of house wiring, plumbing, electrical appliances, equipment, and all the other things a farm needs to enjoy and make available electric service.

With such equipment a line becomes economically feasible, when otherwise it would not be feasible. The revenue becomes sufficient to enable the line to pay its way.

WILL IMPROVE LIVING CONDITIONS

Rural electrification means much more than a light or so in the farmhouse. Steady, safe, brilliant electric light is one of the greatest single boons which electric service can bring to any farm. There are so many other uses that house illumination is only a minor part of the whole.

The success of rural electrification efforts depends entirely upon having electricity used on the farm in quantities sufficient to affect rural life.

For many years the young people have been leaving the farm for the city and its conveniences.

The automobile and the telephone did a great deal to end the isolation of the farm but did very little to improve living conditions there.

The city still had its social and cultural advantages and living was much more comfortable there. Electric power alone can bring about acceptable standards of rural life.

IN ELECTRICITY THE FARMER HAS A TIRELESS SERVANT

Electricity must be used for every socially and economically desirable purpose.

After lighting, probably the most important use is pumping water, making possible an inside bathroom and a modern kitchen sink.

Electric energy must be used for a great many of the farm chores now taking up a great toll of human energy—sawing wood, for example, and milking cows and keeping the farm machinery in good repair.

Electric energy is a tireless servant, both in the farmhouse and in the farm production processes. It sweeps the floors and beats the rugs; it takes the manual labor out of sewing for the farm family; it forever banishes washboards and sadirons; it cooks the farm meals with clean, odorless heat, and when the cooking is done no scrubbing of sooty pots or pans is necessary.

With automatic controls, the modern electric range oven cooks a meal without attention.

The housewife just gets things ready and puts the whole meal in the oven of the modern electric stove, plugs in the socket, and goes off to call on the neighbors or attend a meeting of the parent-teacher association. When she returns home dinner is all ready to serve.

WIDE VARIETY OF USES

The farmer can and should use electric energy for a multitude of farm tasks.

Electricity hatches chickens and broods them better than the clucking hen; it guards them from rickets and other diseases as they grow, and with lights it keeps them laying eggs through the winter after they have taken their place as income producers.

The modern dairy farm can hardly operate without electric power for milking, for pumping water, for quick and continued cooling of milk, for ventilating and illuminating the dairy barns, for grinding feed, for cutting and elevating ensilage and hay.

Electricity makes orchard and garden spraying much easier, it prevents and kills insect pests, and it cleans fruit and vegetables.

These are only a few of the many farm uses for electricity. Every use requires some special equipment. Of course, a portable or electric motor can be carried from one task to another, changing without complaining or tiring. But there must be wiring, plumbing, appliances, equipment, and electrical machinery. All these things cost money—more money than a farmer can generally afford to spend in cash at one time.

REASON FOR 100-PERCENT LOAN

The financial success of a rural distribution system depends largely upon having a great amount of electricity used and paid for by the customers. It is imperative, therefore, that some way be found to make it possible for farmers to purchase all the necessary equipment right at the start.

One way to accomplish this end is to make 100-percent loans for the lines, thus saving the contribution which might be required from the customer for use as a down payment on his wiring, plumbing, and equipment purchases.

The legislation we are discussing in Congress here today provides that Federal funds may be loaned on very liberal terms so as to ease the financial burden of the equipment purchases made by the farmers.

This means that for the same down payment and the same monthly payment the farmer can purchase a great deal more electrical goods than he would be able to afford under any other plan so far advanced.

DOES NOT PUT GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

This bill does not put the Government into the electrical contracting business. Purchases will be made through regular channels, meaning a great deal more business for local merchants, but the financial burden will be taken away.

Since the paper the Government will buy is two-name paper, the chances of loss are greatly diminished.

The rural electrification effort which this pending legislation proposes is one of the many important related features in the vital struggle against soil erosion—a struggle with our national existence at stake.

One of the most spectacular aspects of this struggle is the recurrence of such calamities and disasters as the catastrophic floods, which have affected so much of our land and saddened the whole country during these past few months.

ELECTRIFICATION WILL HELP CONTROL FLOODS

Unfortunately, these floods are merely a very visible but comparatively minor symptom of a national disease.

Floods can and must be controlled. More important, the control must include proper measures to preserve the soil upon which our national wealth is founded and on which our national life depends.

If we do not take decisive steps within 25 years, it will be too late.

These control measures must go beyond the big waters which so majestically and formidibly roll on, sweeping cattle and houses and even human beings before them like corks.

They must extend to the little waters which make up the big waters.

We must control these little waters—the creeks, ponds, tiny streams.

We must encourage individual farmers to impound surface water; to keep the valuable topsoil from washing away.

Proper use of land and water will restore the delicate balance which Nature so carefully and patiently built up through the centuries but which impatient man has destroyed in little more than a generation.

Rural communities, even individual farmers, must be taught and must practice proper measures of saving the soil and impounding the water.

HOW ELECTRIC POWER WILL MAKE MONEY FOR FARMERS

In soil conservation, rural electrification plays an important part.

With dependable, low-cost electric power available for pumping, water storage on the farm assumes a practical, dollars-and-cents value to that individual farm, immediately measurable in farm income.

By irrigating his fields, at the proper stage of the crop's maturity, the farmer can attain almost incredible increases in both the quantity and the quality of his agricultural products. Rural electrification will put more money in the pockets of those who live on the farm.

Even in sections of abundant rainfall, irrigation gives a control and a steadiness of supply which nature does not provide. Rural electrification will make it possible for the farmer to exercise this necessary control of water supply.

These control measures which we must undertake if we are to survive, will make our rural sections much pleasanter places in which to live, and will make the cities along our rivers sofer.

Small rural industries will serve the dual purposes of decentralizing production activities, with consequent protection from monopolists, and supporting and fostering community life, cooperative refrigeration plants, for example, are already knitting together many of our rural communities into a common interest as well as increasing the aggregate income of the participant.

WILL PUT MEN TO WORK

I have presented to you some of the many financial and social benefits which rural electrification will bring to agriculture.

The results of the program to our business and commercial structure are also highly important.

It is estimated that for every dollar spent for rural-line building, $2 will go for wiring, appliances, and plumbing.

This means renewed activity in electrical-supply factories, and more trade for distributors of line materials.

Lumberjacks on the Pacific coast and in the Carolinas will have more work, and so will the copper miners in Arizona and Minnesota.

Workers in electrical goods plants, throughout the industrial East, will make more light bulbs, radios, ranges, and refrigerators to supply the new demand.

Farm-equipment manufacturers will devise and sell new lines.

The trading centers of the rural-electrification projects will benefit by the sale and the servicing of this new equipment.

Local plumbers will install a vast amount of new equipment which the farmers will demand.

Local electricians will get contracts for wiring literally hundreds of farms in each community. These things all add up to more business, more sales, more wages, and more prosperous communities.

WHO ARE THE OBJECTORS?

But what is the other side of this question? What are the objections to the bill? Well, this bill was introduced in both Houses of Congress more than 2 months ago. It was widely publicized in the daily and trade press. The activities of the Rural Electrification Administration have quietly become known, by their own merit, to the people of the entire Nation.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce announced it would hold public hearings to discuss the merits of the proposal. Full and free debate occurred in the Senate, after which that body approved the bill without a record vote.

So far I have not learned of any person having appeared to disapprove of the main purposes of this bill. The closest to disapproval has been a short statement made by an official of a big-business organization objecting to what he felt might eventually develop into competition with private enterprise, but, as the facts show, there is no intention that the Rural Electrification Administration will sponsor competition with private enterprise.

BENEFITS GREATLY EXCEED COST

As I have shown, this program does not contemplate nor permit competition with existing public utilities, and the ultimate cost will be infinitesimal in comparison with the great benefits conferred.

Another mimeograph circular claiming this bill to be impracticable and unnecessary was circulated to Members of Congress by a committee of utility executives. Although the two gentlemen responsible more than any others for the activities of that committee were careful and attentive listeners throughout the hearings before the Commerce Committee of this body, I am informed that neither one of them uttered a single word to substantiate or elaborate upon the mimeographed circular.

To test the practicability of the program proposed, all we have to do is to look at the record of the scores of successful undertakings of this type.

To find out whether such a program is necessary, or whether the private public-utility industry can be depended upon to electrify our rural areas without any Federal activity, we have only to see how the vast rural field was so inexcusably, and I may say criminally, neglected over such a long period of time, and with what alacrity private publicutility industry proceeded to erect their lines and otherwise preempted the cream of the rural areas just as soon as word reached them that the Roosevelt Rural Electrification Administration was really going to operate.

APPROVED BY MOST BUSINESSMEN

These few objectors do not represent the rank and file of American business or even any slight important percentage of any branch of business.

It is impossible for me to believe that the rank and file of intelligent, patriotic businessmen are opposed either to American farmers obtaining the benefits of power and light service or, as a means to this end, to the modest measure of Federal aid which is involved in 3-percent loans that must be paid back to the Government.

Indeed, I know that great sections of American business are in favor of this movement, and they advocate it as a means that can contribute generously to recovery.

From the very outset of the very limited and temporary program of rural electrification, manufacturers of electrical ranges, electrical refrigerators, water pumps, and other types of equipment have cooperated closely in furthering the program. I am not talking now about the little businessman alone.

I mean the big fellows, too, like General Electric and Westinghouse.

Businessmen who make and sell plumbing equipment, and whose rural market is dependent so largely upon the extension of the rural power and light lines without which there will be little pumping of water and hence few running-water systems in the home and about the farm, are enthusiastically in favor of rural electrification. The manufacturers of wire and the contractors who make the wire installations are alert in cooperating in every way possible.

A NEW STANDARD OF LIVING FOR FARMERS

With the stimulus to rural electrification afforded by the R. E. A. and the recent marked increase in power production and sales, the merchandizing of electrical equipment has become an outstanding factor in recovery.

As for businessmen who are less directly affected, in the towns adjacent to rural territory, they know that the wiring of homes, the installation of running-water systems, and the introduction of electrical appliance and electrical farm machinery mean the modernization of homes, a new and lively interest in nonelectrical household equipment and furnishings, and a new standard of living for the American farmer, with all that these things entail in the way of increased sales and enlarged opportunity for financial profit.

DANGERS MERELY IMAGINARY

Actually, even if we were to consider the public-utility industry alone, I think we should have to conclude that it is afraid of injuries and dangers which are nonexistent. There are several ways in which the rural-electrification program is likely to affect it favorably.

First, the farm cooperatives and public bodies of various kinds will provide electric service in some regions which the industry may look on as containing potential business for the future.

But this is business which most of the power companies have neglected for years, which they are not developing today, and which, unless a far more progressive attitude grows in industry than is now manifest, they probably never will develop.

RURAL RATES REDUCED TO FARMERS

Second. Increasing rural electrification induces lower rates, in rural territory at least. This has happened already. In State after State, since the Rural Electrification Administration was created, rural rates, which had stood unchanged for years, have been scaled down sharply, and the charges imposed upon the farmer for line extensions have been so reduced as to make them in some instances almost unrecognizable.

Admittedly many power companies have resented and resisted and will continue to resent and resist this reduction of rates and charges. Indeed, it is easy enough to see that this is one of the chief reasons why the Power Trust people have made feeble attempts to block this bill designed in the interest of the American farmer.

But here I wish to call to the attention of the Members of Congress the fact that these reductions in rates have come about without any regulatory actions or any attempted regulatory action by the Rural Electrification Administration.

These rate reductions represent an abandonment of practices long outworn and a dawning awareness that lower rates are needed, not merely because they remove an insurmountable barrier to rural electrical service but because ultimately the lower rates will prove to be more profitable.

It is scarcely necessary to labor this point, when we have before us the examples of the private companies operating in the T. V. A. territory, the municipal plants in Seattle, Winnipeg, and other cities, and the Potomac Power Co. right here in Washington.

WILL AID PRIVATE POWER INDUSTRY

A third way in which the private Power Trust is affected by the rural-electrification program has to do with its bearing upon the capacity of the country's power plants to produce electricity and with their markets for it. Here the results, actual and prospective, seem wholly favorable to the power industry. The Rural Electrification Administration is not generating more power. It is taking part of the present power off the market; putting it to work in the most effective way. And a great part of this power is being bought, and more will be bought, from the present power companies at prices which are not merely altogether compensatory, but, I am informed, decidedly profitable.

In short, the whole purpose of the rural-electrification program, present and proposed, is to develop, not the electric service that the private industry has cultivated, but the electric service which lies just beyond, and which the private industry has scorned as not immediately and alluringly profitable. There is no desire to provide loans either where service exists or where, legitimately and in truth, the power companies are about to provide service.

NEW HOPE, HAPPINESS, AND PROSPERITY

What the Rural Electrification Administration wants, what I want, and what I believe the Roosevelt administration and the Congress want is to take power and light to the hundreds of thousands of farmers to whom the power industry has said, in effect, all through the last dozen years: "We want nothing so much as to bring you the incalculable benefit of power and light service, but try and get it!"

That has been the real attitude of many of the Power Trust people. However cleverly their attitude may have been rigged out and glossed over with "two-dollar", smoke-screen words, such as "uneconomic costs", "deficient loan factors", "the asserted need for increased consumption to precede lower rates", and so forth, we may as well say what these ingenious and resounding answers actually do mean. The farmer has not been fooled by these smoke-screen words of the Power Trust. He has known all along what they mean. The farmer knows they mean just what I have said, "Try and get it."

And this dilly-dally business we propose to change right now, once and for all. In this bill the Roosevelt Rural Electrification Administration is today saying to the farmers of the United States, "You want electricity, you need electricity, the Roosevelt administration is determined that you shall have electricity. Here it is."

The enacting of this rural-electrification bill into law this afternoon will be good news to farmers everywhere. It will mean new hope, added happiness, and increased prosperity to the farm families of America.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, as everyone knows, this bill was prepared by Senator Norris, of Nebraska. It provides $410,000,000 for rural electrification during the next 10 years.

As it passed the Senate, it was one of the greatest farm-relief measures I have ever known. I regret very much that it was not reported to the House just as it passed the Senate. Some very bad amendments were added by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which ought to be eliminated by all means.

At the proper time I propose to offer amendments to restore the provisions of the Senate bill. One of them would eliminate politics in selecting personnel and one would restore the provision of the Senate bill fixing the interest rate at not more than 3 percent. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce changed it to read "not less than 3 percent." Some Members seem to think that farmers are never entitled to borrow money at low rates of interest.

The other amendment would eliminate the provision inserted by the House committee to make loans to private power companies. Private power companies were not included in the bill as it passed the Senate, and, in my opinion, that provision will have a tendency to wreck the whole rural electrification program, if it is not eliminated.

This bill should never have been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but should have gone to the Committee on Agriculture.

As I have said before, the power question is one of the greatest issues now confronting us, or that will confront us for the next 25 years. The American people cannot stand, and will not stand, the enormous overcharges they are now paying in electric light and power rates.

While present consumers in the United States are being overcharged $1,000,000,000 a year for lights and power, 9 farmers out of 10 are denied the use of any electricity at all; and the few who are served by private power companies find the rates so high they cannot afford to pay them.

The best thing we can do for the farmers of this country is to provide cheap electricity for every farm home and give the people in the rural districts the benefit of the great wealth of hydroelectric energy in our navigable streams. It is theirs, it is public property, belongs to all the American people, and should be used for their benefit.

Nothing on earth would do this country more good than to put cheap electricity in every farm home. I know whereof I speak; I have had some practical experience in dealing with this subject.

A few years ago I started a movement to electrify the farm homes in my own district. It was new to us and we had no example to go by. We were entirely at sea. I called meetings in the various counties of the district and organized county electric-power associations, which we later had chartered under the laws of the State.

We purchase our power from the T. V. A. at about 6 mills a kilowatt-hour and supply it to the farmers at the following rate:

kilowatt-h
First 50 kilowatt-hours a month	4
Next 50 kilowatt-hours a month	3
Next 100 kilowatt-hours a month	2
Next 200 kilowatt-hours a month	1
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month	0.4

With a minimum bill of $1 a month.

This not only pays for the power and for the overhead expenses, but will also amortize the lines and pay for them in less than 20 years. This is all the farmers will ever have to pay for their power or their lines, and we hope to get these rates reduced as the years go by.

I know it will be charged by the opposition that we are buying power from the T. V. A. below the cost of production, when, as a matter of fact, we are paying an ample profit. Before the creation of the T. V. A. private power interests were buying power at Muscle Shoals at 2 mills a kilowatthour and selling it to us at 10 cents a kilowatthour—or a difference of 4,800 percent.

If the T. V. A. could sell all of its power, or even 80 percent of it, at the same price these county power associations pay, at the same distance from the dams, they would pay back every dollar spent on the T. V. A. in less than 20 years, and probably in less than 10 years.

Let me call your attention to the fact that with the greatest wealth of hydroelectric power on earth, the United States is lagging behind practically every other civilized country in the world in rural electrification, and she always will lag behind if she depends on private power companies.

While we have less than 10 percent of our farms electrified, France and Germany have 90 percent, Norway 90 percent, Holland and Switzerland 100 percent. Even Japan runs as high as 90 percent. New Zealand, a sparsely settled country, has 65 percent of her farms electrified, and Canada is so far ahead of us that there is no comparison.

This work of rural electrification is now going forward in 7 of the 10 counties I represent, and surveys are being made in the other 3, with a view to electrifying the whole district as rapidly as possible and ultimately reaching every farm home in the district.

My objective is to electrify every farm home in America at the T. V. A. rates. I am beginning at home, and I am glad to report that the results are most gratifying.

I sent out a questionnaire recently to see what these farmers were using and I have returns from 152 in my hand. Of these 152 farmers who are using T. V. A. power, 149 of them have radios. One hundred and thirty-eight out of the one hundred and fifty-two have electric irons, 74 of them have electric refrigerators, 34 of them have lights in their barns, 33 of them have electric ranges or stoves on which to cook the family meal, 23 of them have electric water pumps, and 28 of them have electric washing machines to relieve their women of the drudgery, the back-breaking, the youth-destroying, soul-killing drudgery that the women of this country have had to undergo since the dawn of time.

At this point I want to call your attention to the appliances used by some of these farmers, to the amount of electricity each one consumed during the month of March 1936, and the amount each consumer had to pay. I am going to number each of them so that they can be identified in my files, if necessary.

Many of you will, no doubt, be surprised to note the small amount of electricity used to operate these appliances. Some of these farmers still have the old wood stove in the kitchen and use it when the weather is cold. An electric range throws out very little heat and is, therefore, a great comfort in hot weather. Then, too, many of these farmers conserved electricity by cutting off the refrigerator in cold

Radios, washing machines, and water pumps use very little electricity—so little, in fact, that in the Province of Ontario, Canada, the Ontario Power Commission has announced that for 3 years beginning November 1, 1934, electricity would be furnished free to farmers to operate their radios, washing machines, and water pumps to provide water under pressure for household sanitary systems.

The electricity necessary to operate a modern washing machine for a family of five people will cost less than $1 a year at the T. V. A. rates, or the Canadian rates. Nothing that has ever been invented seems to save so much drudgery at such little cost.

I have before me a large number of letters from farmers expressing their gratitude for this service. I do not wish to bore the House, but I am going to read extracts from one or two of them.

Here is one from a woman who is a widow and who has a helpless son—a disabled World War veteran—and an aged, feeble aunt to care for. Her number is 14 in the list I have just submitted, and you will note that she has practically all the conveniences that electricity can furnish to a farm home. It is a little difficult to quote from her letter and at the same time eliminate the personal references. She says:

This gives me an opportunity of expressing to you my apprecia-This gives me an opportunity of expressing to you my appreciation of the service you are rendering to the rural people. As to the T. V. A., words cannot express "how I like it." I think it the greatest boon that has ever come to our country, and if you never did anything else to glorify your service, your name would go down in history for this one thing—bringing T. V. A. to our rural people. Our last month's bill was the heaviest we have ever had, as the extreme cold weather caused my take son to rural bis electric bester. extreme cold weather caused my sick son to run his electric heater.

The month to which she refers was February instead of March, as shown in the list. February is the coldest month in the year, and yet her bill amounted to only $7.67.

One man writes as follows:

In my judgment, the coming of T. V. A. power and lights into this territory is the greatest blessing in its history. Like the pioneers opened the wilderness and blazed the trail, so does T. V. A. light the way for the rural districts and make possible happier homes and a more contented people. The exodus from the country to the town should stop—it is not now necessary to move to town to secure conveniences. The rates are so reasonable and the possibilities so great that everyone should take advantage its opportunities. Instead of adding an extra expense, it enables one to make money and at the same time enjoy life. Never again should we even consider going back into the dark ages. Thanks to you and those other far-seeing men, and our great President, for the greatest forward step in the history of our rural communitie

Here is a letter from a prominent physician whom I know quite well, and who does a great deal of practice in the rural sections. Among other things, he says:

It seems to remove one from the past considerably to drive the roads at night and see the country homes all lighted up. You may be sure it is not a bad experience for me, as a physician, to go into one of these homes at night and be able to see my patient. Another noticeable thing is to travel through the country during the day and observe the signs of cleaned-up premises, painted houses, and the general improvement all around. In fact, it makes one feel that he has been transported to a new

These are just a few of the communications that come to me daily from people who are enjoying the benefits of cheap electric lights and power which we hope to place within reach of every farm home in America.

There is nothing on earth that goes into a farm homeeven a city home, for that matter-that relieves so much drudgery, brings so much comfort, or such a sense of security as do these electrical appliances, where electricity is supplied at rates the people can afford to pay.

This abundant supply of cheap electricity will double the value of every farm it touches. This $410,000,000, if properly used to build these rural power lines and supply our farmers with electric energy at T. V. A. rates, will add billions of dollars to farm values throughout the United States.

Electrification of a farmer's home makes him want to stay there. It makes his children want to remain at home. It affords them wholesome entertainment, wholesome surroundings, keeps them in touch with the world, and does away with the monotonous drudgery that has driven so many of our young people from the farms to the cities in the years gone by.

In 1928, when farm homes were being sold under the hammer, while millionaires were made on the stock exchange, and certain leaders were pointing to the feverish speculations as indications of prosperity, one farmer drew a picture for me of the conditions in his old home community that I shall never forget as long as I live. He said he was passing down the highway through the old community in which he had been reared, and saw the once beautiful farm homes abandoned. He said he paused in front of the one in which he had lived as a boy, and saw a picture of what Shakespeare once called "unfenced desolation." He said the fields were laid waste, the fences were gone, the barn was falling down, the roof of the house was caving in, and the doorsteps were gone. The yard and garden were grown up in weeds and bramble. He said he wandered in through what had once been an open gate and peered through the paneless window into a room that once contained a happy fireside, and saw the rats and mice chasing each other across the vacant floor, while from the dying top of a shade tree in the yard, in which the birds once sang, and beneath which the children had played, a lonely crow looked out over the desolate landscape and solemnly croaked his mournful message to his mate.

He was simply drawing a picture of thousands of farm homes in America at that time.

I thought of Goldsmith's immortal lines-

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, Where wealth accumulates, and men decay, Princes and lords may flourish or may fade,
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

What I want to do, and what we are doing in the T. V. A. area, is to reverse that picture and rehabilitate those homes. We want to rebuild those fences, conserve that soil, electrify that house, and make it an attractive and profitable place in which to live.

We not only want to light every room in those homes as well as the barns and other outhouses but we want to supply the electricity to pump the water, operate the radio, the electric iron, the vacuum cleaner, the refrigerator, the range, the washing machine, and all the other necessary electrical appliances at the lowest possible rates. It is the greatest opportunity that has ever confronted the farmers of the Nation.

If we would make our country strong and prosperous, and its rural homes happy and contented, we can do so by carrying out this program of electrifying every farm home in America at the T. V. A. rates-or rates the farmers can afford to pay. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose of this bill, but I see that it is different from the Senate bill, in that it permits loans to what we might call standard corporations—the Power Trust corporations. I think that if that is left in the House bill we are going to defeat the very purposes of the bill, because the ones who will get the loans at the start will be the Power Trust companies that will go into the rural areas, and you will not get the fair rates on the electricity that you will with your cooperative organizations.

My distinguished friend from Texas, Mr. RAYBURN, the chairman, said that in this bill we were not going into competition or put anyone into competition with anyone else. I think that is just what we ought to do, to have all the competition with the Power Trust that we can for the benefit of the American people—to have new companies formed that will force down the rates, not only for the farmer alone but for the city dweller.

I heard my friend from Mississippi, Mr. Rankin, refer to the farmers, but there are thousands of people living in the cities who have not as many comforts as the farmer; people who have not the radios which the gentleman referred to. I want to take care of them and see that their rates on gas and electricity come down. The only way to bring this about is to bring about competition that will force the rates down on gas and electricity.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly. Where we organized cooperative associations immediately the rates began to drop.

Mr. CONNERY. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] is going to offer an amendment to prevent the Power Trust from obtaining these loans, and I will support that amendment.

Now I know something about this power situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 5 minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. I repeat, I know something about this power situation. I made a speech 2 years ago in this House along similar lines to this plan in which I condemned the Power Trust. As I left the floor after making that speech I said to a colleague, "I have just financed my next opponent's campaign." He said, "What do you mean?" I said: "In the city of Lynn, where I was born, my father was mayor in 1912. He knew how the Power Trust controlled the city politically, and that he was taking his political life in his hands in attacking the trust. Nevertheless, he brought to Lynn an engineering expert from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to survey the entire electrical situation of the city of Lynn. The expert made a thorough investigation and then reported that the Lynn Gas & Electric Co., which has a monopoly in Lynn and its surroundings, was making a profit of over 300 percent on the rates on electricity and gas charged to the people of Lynn. He fought hard but was unsuccessful in his fight to obtain fair rates for the people. When election time came around Mayor Connery was defeated, because he had dared to fight for the cause of the people against big money. No mayor of Lynn before him or since his term as mayor has ever had the nerve to attack the Lynn Gas & Electric Co. I attacked them and other members of the Power Trust on the floor of this House, so I knew what to expect in my last election. It came. The Power Trust used every method at their disposal to defeat me, but evidently times have changed since my father's day, and the people of my district showed plainly that they cannot be controlled by the Power Trust, and returned me to Congress, for which I thank them."

So, as I say, I know something about this situation. These gas and electric companies are gold mines, exorbitant profits are made by them. Now we have a bill before us to help the farmer in rural electrification, and we want the small home owners in the cities as well to be taken care of, whether in Boston, New York, Chicago, San Francisco, New Orleans, the smaller cities, or anywhere else, but this little proposition in the House bill will stop that. It now provides that the money can go to the standard companies and Power Trust who are in power now, and they will get the money and your high rates will stay as they are, high, and if the farmer gets his electrification, he will pay the same high rate that the city dweller pays today. We want to stop that, and I do not think the membership of this House wants to play into the hands of the Power Trust by this provision in this bill. It is not in the Senate bill, and I hope it will be stricken from the House bill. There is no reason why the farmer and the small wage earner in the city should not get cheaper electricity, and cheap gas, and I hope when the gentleman from Mississippi offers his amendment that it will be agreed to by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include certain excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the remarks of the two gentlemen who have just preceded me. I hope when we reach section 4 that provision, page 14, line 6, that "persons, corporations" shall be allowed to come in and perhaps get most of this money that we are providing, that we will strike out those two words, so that the farmers back home who want to organize and come in and really get the benefit and electrify the rural communities will get the benefit of the legislation. That is the provision in the Norris bill, as it came to us from the the Senate, and this particular section was practically rewritten, and regardless of good intentions—the world is filled with them-I think we ought to strike out these two words and also approve other amendments that will be offered to this section, because I believe that gray-headed statesman in the Senate, Senator Norris, and those gentlemen who wrote that bill, knew what they were doing. The experience we have had with the Power Trust, I think, is sufficient reason for not taking any chances, and we ought not to take any chances or tempt them; we ought to place all of the safeguards around this legislation that we can to see to it that the farmer gets the benefit rather than the Power Trust. Let us not close our eyes to the fact that if we really want to electrify the farms we should write a law under which we can do it, and under such legislation leave no loopholes through which the enemy may block our efforts to really provide the farmers with electricity they can afford to buy. There is in the hearings an interesting chart showing that Holland and Germany and Sweden have electrified a large majority of their farms. They did not do it with the help and with the cooperation of the Power Trust. They did it under public ownership.

We might as well call a spade a spade and not fool ourselves about these things. If we are going to electrify these farms and if we are going to give the people in the cities in the United States cheap power, the only answer is municipal ownership for the cities, and to organize your own communities through a farmer set-up, so that the slick Power Trust crowd will have no opportunity to control the set-up and through such nonprofit cooperatives get your rural electrification from your own company. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] has just vividly called to our attention what the T. V. A. has done in that area. Similar organizations, Nation-wide, will mean the same thing for your community if we write the proper kind of legislation, which will guarantee that for your community, so that your community can organize and get the benefit of the legislation rather than the Power Trust. Have you ever heard of the Power Trust extending its lines into a rural community? The Power Trust has only skimmed the cream of the business in the thickly populated farm areas, and they have not electrified the farms otherwise, and they do not intend to unless we make them do it; and the only way that we can make them do it is through competition, and the only way any city has ever received lower rates is through competition. It has been repeatedly called to the attention of the Congress how futile our so-called State regulatory commissioners have been in securing for the consumers of electricity and gas reasonable rates based upon actual investment. Under court decisions and the many loopholes the utilities have always, through manipulation and chicanery, been able to control the situation and continue to charge unreasonably high rates for the services rendered.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. What provision is it that the gentleman is interested in having stricken out?

Mr. McFARLANE. It is, on page 14, line 6, of section 4, to strike out the words "persons, corporations." Then, with a few more amendments, you have the bill as it came from the Senate in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, of course, I am going to reply to all of these speeches when we get to the section of the bill to which they refer. I think we ought to confine ourselves to the section under consideration. I shall not object to this, but I shall object to any other speeches out of order on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Who does the gentleman think will extend these power lines?

Mr. McFARLANE. The corporations that are organized under this bill will extend the power lines. The hearings are very complete on that. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has very clearly gone into that, as to who has extended quite a number of them down in his area. For instance, under this bill, in answer to the gentleman, it will leave these authorities to extend these power lines: States, Territories, subdivisions, agencies, municipalities, peoples' utilities, and district cooperatives, and such nonprofit organizations. They will extend the power lines in that way, under this bill, through the cheap interest rates. Through these organizations they can extend these power lines so that the people rather than the Power Trust will get the benefit of lower rates. We are not going to be able to give these farmers any lower electric rates if we do not give it to them on a basis so that they can have these modern facilities and so that they can really get the benefits of it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Does the gentleman feel there are any private individuals in such a position financially as to take advantage of this act and extend power lines over long distances?

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman, I would say that the world is full of good intentions. There are plenty of the 4 percent Power Trust crowd who own 90 percent of the Nation's wealth, who have ample money to do that, but try and get them to do it. The answer is they have not done it. As long as we give them a natural monopoly on these utilities, as long as they have the power to exploit, there is no power under the sun that can keep them from exploiting the people. How can we keep them from doing it? The answer is we have not up to this time. We are not going to do it under this legislation unless we specifically write very clear provisions into same and unless we put this means within the reach of the people and allow them to set up their own organization so that they can have the benefit of it, such as they have done in all the European countries and such as they have done in Ontario where they have a 2-cent top power rate—the cheapest power rate on the North American continent for the power consumed.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MORAN. Perhaps the answer is not a theory but a matter of practice. The R. E. A. has been in business for a while. The answer to the question as to who is going to borrow this money is that 57 applications have already been made to the R. E. A. Probably some of the cooperatives.

Mr. McFARLANE, I think that partially answers the

Mr. McFARLANE. I think that partially answers the question.

In conclusion let me say that I hope that we make this legislation sufficiently clear so that the farmers of the Nation will actually get the benefit of this modern utility at low cost. The records show that about 15 percent of the farms of this Nation have electricity and water piped in the houses; 30 percent, radios; 35 percent, telephones; and 60 percent, automobiles. While in Texas we find that the farms have only 2.2 percent served with electricity, and rank forty-fifth among the States of the Nation. And in Texas on our farms only about 7 percent have radios; 15 percent, water piped into houses; 20 percent have telephones, and 55 percent have automobiles. So if we are to do justice to our farmers we have a long way to go toward providing them these modern facilities at prices they are able to afford. This legislation should go a long way toward providing the greatest modern utility, electricity, and at a reasonable rate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFarlane] has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, of course we have electricity where I come from, St. Louis. I am not only interested in seeing the people on the farm get electricity, but in St. Louis and in the other large cities of the country we are going to manufacture all the equipment that will be used by the farmers when they do get electricity.

I had a little experience along this line which makes me realize the necessity for legislation of this character. A friend of mine had a little shack about 50 miles from St. Louis, along a river-nothing but a playhouse. We used to go there, cook our own meals, wash the dishes—no ladies being present-and we would also keep the place clean. Among the jobs, we had to clean the oil-burning lamps. That is a rather delicate work, if you have lived in a city and never had to clean lamps. I would rather wash dishes than clean lamps, because I generally break the globe and then must go to town and buy another. So we got together, interviewed the farmers in the vicinity, and decided we would string some wires about 3 miles from a town so that we could get electricity. There were about 25 or 30 people there who wanted electricity. They did not have the money to pay their share to put up the poles and string the wires. As I recall it, the cost was somewhere around $2,000. The electric company was willing to put up the poles and string the wire, but they insisted the monthly bill of those using the current would contain a charge until the entire cost of installing the service was covered. As I understand this bill, it will be very helpful to people in such a position, to be able to get some money so that they can put up poles and string wires and get a service that we in the cities receive; but the point I want to emphasize, speaking from the standpoint of the interest of the cities in legislation of this character, is that our people are going to be employed manufacturing the equipment that will be used by the farmers. It is legislation of this kind that I think we should pass, where the Government is going to get its money back, and give service to the housewives in the country to which they are just as much entitled as we in the cities are. At the same time, we are helping those who are unemployed. The electrical workers in the cities, who manufacture this equipment, are a class of people where many are unemployed at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri this will also help reduce the rates in the cities all over the State of Missouri. In the State of Missouri at the present time the people are being overcharged $20,000,000 a year for electric light and power.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize the situation in Missouri, but right now I am thinking about helping these poor people in the country get something that they are entitled to that we have, and as I said at the same time helping unemployed electrical workers.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and not 1 farmer out of 10 in Missouri has electricity at the present time. This is the only way he is ever going to get it at reasonable rates.

Mr. COCHRAN. I cannot confirm the gentleman's statement, who generally knows what he is talking about, but I do hope that those from the cities will realize it is going to be helpful to us by putting people to work manufacturing the equipment they will use when they do provide electricity in the country.

Mr. RANKIN. I was not guessing at what I said. I have investigated the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochraw] has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps it is because I come from a rural section of Iowa that I am very much interested in the passage of this bill providing for additional rural-electrification programs, because I know how badly farm homes need the advantages of the commodity.

The question has been raised in this debate of how much the farmer can afford to invest in this particular program when he is at present overborrowed. The point of that debate to me, of course, is the fact that the farmer is not going to be forced to accept this project. It is a cooperative movement which, if he feels he cannot afford, he need not take, but if he feels he is going to secure enough benefit and enough profit as a result of this investment he will go into it; and thereby hangs the tale, so to speak, of this particular argument. For example, under existing rates in Iowa-I checked up on my electric-light bills a few days ago when I was back there for a brief period-under the excessive rates I am paying, the excessive rates my father is paying on his farm, our cost for pumping water for livestock is a very minimum figure, for example, about $1 per month for 200 head. This in itself when compared with the cost of pumping water with a combustion engine was considerably less. I impress upon your minds, however, that it is higher than it should be as a result of the excessive rates being charged for electric current in the State of Iowa.

My particular State has been brought into this discussion by one or two Members as being an example of a commonwealth that is not very extensively electrified in its rural sections, and this is true. The reason it is not very extensively electrified is because under present rates of 4, 6, and 8 cents per kilowatt-hour many farmers would have to pay from $12 to $14 a month for 125 to 150 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, and they cannot afford to electrify their farms on the basis of such charges. It simply cannot be done, and especially when such charges for current are coupled up with high-priced equipment and transmission lines and no way of financing either on a reasonable basis. As I understand this bill, it is intended to correct that situation in part.

Of course, in my judgment, we are going to have to go much further than it will be possible to do under the legislation we are now considering. We must eventually set up a power-development program similar to the T. V. A. in the great Mississippi Valley, where it will not be necessary to cultivate a market for cheap electricity. The farmers in that territory are thoroughly familiar with its advantages, but they must have it at a price they can afford to pay. It is impossible for them to buy current at 4, 6, and 8 cents per kilowatt-hour. This is not the first time, nor will it be the last time that I will call this situation to the attention of the Congress and the country.

I have had a bill before the House for many months providing for a Missouri Valley Authority, and I will be delighted to cooperate with the senior Senator from Nebraska in enlarging it into a Mississippi Valley Authority, as provided in his recent proposal. Within the next few weeks I will submit to this body some valuable information indicating the necessity of such a program in the great Middle West.

If we can provide the farmers of this Nation with cheap power and get it to them from the source of its production, we will have effected the most noteworthy and lasting farm relief ever extended to the producers of agricultural products.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this piece of legislation, and I want to give a little illustration showing how it will benefit people living in rural communities. I have had some dealings with the power corporation in our territory. I may say that at one time I was a member of the official body of the town of Wakefield, Mich. Their contract with the power interests expired. Another town in the same county, Ironwood, had a contract that had not expired. We were paying about 6 cents per kilowatt-hour for electricity in the city of Wakefield at the time. When we threatened to build our say that at one time I was a member of the official body of own municipal plant they cut the rate approximately in half, but still held the rate in the city of Ironwood at about 9 cents per kilowatt-hour, which rate was reduced to about 7 cents per kilowatt-hour for releasing the power company from the terms of a franchise with regard to certain street railway owned and operated by the power company.

This same power company built lines into certain rural districts and furnished power to the rural districts, but only after forcing the township officials to accept a franchise from this power company which places such a burden on the farmers that it practically prohibits them from using electric energy. Several hundred farmers in one district wish to connect up, but cannot afford to under these burdensome rates. I would like to have legislation that will break the monopoly that this power company has in this area and permit the farmers to enjoy the benefits of rural electrification. The charges are prohibitive, as is shown by the following schedule, showing rates as high as $6 per month service charge. Let us give the farmers some help by real, honest-to-goodness legislation on our part. The gentleman from Mississippi is correct in the remarks he has made, and I congratulate him.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman think this bill carries any relief for such people?

Mr. HOOK. I do.

Mr. PIERCE. I hope it does.

Mr. HOOK. It does if they will be allowed to install their own generating plant and extend their own lines.

Mr. PIERCE. Yes, but Cooke says there shall be no competing lines. He does not want to build a line or do anything where a company is already on the ground. He will tell the gentleman so when the gentleman appeals to him on behalf of a rural community.

Mr. HOOK. As I understand it, the amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] will extend this right to such communities.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Do not misunderstand, I am going to vote for this bill: but I do regret that some of these things are not written in different language.

Mr. HOOK. I trust that the bill as amended by the gentleman from Mississippi will take care of the situation by allowing the extension of cooperative lines.

Mr. PIERCE. We will not be able to take care of it until we have public ownership of lines over the country.

Mr. HOOK. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. PIERCE. When we have this country divided into six or eight districts with the public owning the power plants, we will be able to do it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Electrification Administration established by Executive Order No. 7037: Provided, That no such loan shall be in an amount exceeding 85 percent of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: And provided further, That such obligations incurred for the purpose of financing the construction and operation of generating plants, electric transmission and distribution lines, or systems shall be fully amortized over a period not to exceed 25 years, and that the maturity of such obligations incurred for the purpose of financing the wiring of premises and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances and equipment shall not exceed two-thirds premises and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances and equipment shall not exceed two-thirds of the assured life thereof and not more than 5 years. The Administrator is hereby authorized to make all such endorsements, to execute all such instruments, and to do all such acts and things as shall be necessary to effect the valid transfer and assignment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of all such obligations.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for each of the 8 years thereafter, the sum of $40,000,000 for the purposes of this act as hereinafter provided.

The Administrator shall, within 90 days after the beginning of each fiscal year, determine for each State and for the United States the number of farms not then receiving such service.

SEC. 4. The Administrator is authorized and empowered, from the sums hereinbefore authorized, to make loans to persons, corporations, States, Territories, and subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipalities, peoples utility districts and cooperative, nonprofit, or limited-dividend associations organized under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States, for the purpose of financing the construction and operation of generating plants, electric transmission and distribution lines or systems for the furnishing of electric energy to persons in rural areas who are not receiving central-station service. Such loans shall be on such terms and conditions relating to the expenditure of the moneys loaned and the security therefor as the Administrator shall determine and may be made payable in whole or in part out of income: Provided, however, That all such loans shall be self-liquidating within a period of not to exceed 25 years, and shall bear interest at a rate not less than 3 percent per annum: Provided further, That no loan for the construction, operation, or shall bear interest at a rate not less than a percent per amum: Provided further, That no loan for the construction, operation, or enlargement of any generating plant shall be made unless the consent of the State authority having jurisdiction in the premises is first obtained. Loans under this section and section 5 shall not be made unless the Administrator finds and certifies that in his judgment the security therefor is reasonably adequate and such loan will be repaid within the time agreed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wadsworth: Page 14, line 14, after the word "loans", insert the words "shall not in any case exceed 85 percent of the actual construction cost of the project and."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment I have just offered is adopted the sentence will read:

Such loans shall not in any case exceed 85 percent of the actual construction cost of the shipment and shall be on such terms and

And so forth.

The amendment is offered in conformity with my suggestion made during general debate on the bill. It is offered in the interest of sound business practice. It is consistent with the provisions relating to the loans which the R. F. C. may make under this same bill. The R. F. C. may lend up to 85 percent of the face value of the security offered by the Administrator to the R. F. C., and the amendment which I have offered would conform with that and provide that the Administrator, in making a loan for the building of a transmission line, shall be restricted to 85 percent of the cost of the line. This is what we do in all other Government lending activities. This leaves the same cushion for the Government in case of loss; otherwise there is no cushion whatever, and such loss as may be sustained must be borne by the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is unfair to the Government, and I think it is not unfair to the prospective customers and these smaller cooperatives or other concerns which build lines.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. That would not apply in a case where the borrowing authority had other assets that the Government could come back on. It would be just where it was, a raw plan to build a line with no assets whatever behind it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my understanding; and, of course, I base the understanding on the testimony of Mr. Cooke before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which he repeatedly stated that the sole security of the Government in these transactions would be the line itself, making it perfectly obvious that if anything happened to the line or if the project lost money and could not pay interest to the Administrator, much less the amortization payment, the Government would stand the loss. This should be entitled "A bill to guarantee everybody against loss except Uncle Sam."

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Mis-

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think his amendment should be entitled "An amendment to kill the bill"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it not a fact that Mr. Cooke stated before the committee that such an amendment would simply mean killing the bill? If he did not say that, I think the chairman stated it in his presence.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To tell the honest truth, I do not recall that Mr. Cooke said anything of that kind. He may have. If he did express such sentiment, it is purely an opinion. My opinion is, if this service is so attractive to rural communities, and I think it is, they should be willing to pay a part of the cost. I live in a rural community myself and use it in part.

Mr. RANKIN. What rate does the gentleman pay? Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot remember now, but I am satisfied

Mr. RANKIN. Are the gentleman's neighbors satisfied?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am. If this thing is so attractive to rural communities and, as the gentleman from Mississippi says, is going to double the value of farm property, then I think the people would be willing to put in 15 percent of the cost.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated in my opening remarks this morning, I think we might as well strike the enacting clause out of this bill as to adopt the amendment just offered.

In these 85-percent loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation they are lent on a going business. In the situation we are approaching by this bill you cannot get the farmers to put up $15 out of every $100 to start this business, and under State laws and under good business practice, if these people are as wise as we think they will be, they will certainly make provision for the hazard that the gentleman from New York talked about earlier in the day and talks about at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the loans made on the sort of set-up which will be approved by the Rural Electrification Administrator will in 95 percent of the cases pay out. Of course, there is no class of business in the world that is successful 100 percent, and in which there are not some losses.

I want to say to the House now-and I believe this fullybelieve the expenditure of this money will change the horizon for these people. It will pull them out of the darkness into the light. I think it would be money well spent by the United States Government to electrify a million homes in this country if they never got back one dollar. [Applause.] I do not make this statement, however, as begging the question, but I make it because I believe it is a fair statement and one that can be justified. I also believe these rural electrification districts will be as self-liquidating and as self-sustaining as any other business organization in the country; therefore I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were-ayes 14, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RANKIN: Page 14, line 6, after the word "to", strike out the words "persons, corporations,"

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply restores the language of the Norris bill as it passed the Senate, and I submit that the amendment ought to be adopted.

There ought to be no doubt as to whom this money is going. If you begin lending to private corporations, they will do with it just what they are doing with their own money now, and that is building a few scattering lines out through the rural sections and paralyzing and preventing real rural electrification. They are doing it in Tennessee; they are doing it in Alabama and all down through that country. They call them "spite" lines, the object of which is to paralyze rural electri-

Down in Mississippi they have gone out and told them, "We have the power; we are going to get this money that has been appropriated and we will build your lines", and wherever they have gone with that poisonous propaganda they have failed to get any rural electrification at all. They have demoralized the people and misled them to such an extent that they could not organize or did not organize, and therefore they have been shut out up to the present time. We are now fighting to overcome that influence.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Have they not done that right along?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; as I say, they are doing it now and they are today using the courts of the country in every State of the Union, rushing into the Federal courts and trumping up every conceivable scheme to enjoin and prevent any kind of electrical development that does not bring money into their pockets.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Would not these farmers' organizations be corporations just like a utility company?

Mr. RANKIN. I understand they would be corporations, but not private corporations. They would be non-profitsharing corporations.

This amendment is simply restoring the language in the Norris bill, and it cannot hurt anything because it will expedite the passage of the bill through conference.

Now, they say here, "loans to persons".

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. RANKIN. In just a moment.

I have gone through this fight from one end to the other. I have gone into many of these rural districts and fought this battle out, and if you were to leave the word "person" in here, it would give one man in a community an opportunity to get the money to build a line to his house and leave his neighbors out, and the power companies will go to this man and tell him to do that and say, "Why should in New England to create a cooperative organizati you help to carry these poor fellows along", which would to take advantage of these rules and regulations.

put them in the same position as the neighbors of the gentleman from New York, who gets no power at all, while the gentleman enjoys such power, even though he does not know what the rates are. This would tend to block this program in every State of the Union, and I want to tell you gentlemen that you have a battle, every one of you. The gentleman from New York does not have a battle because he is not interested, it seems, in whether his neighbors get electricity or not. He is not enough interested to even know what rates he pays.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield to the gentleman if he will tell me what 40 kilowatt-hours a month cost him in his own

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not going to have any condition placed upon me. I just beg of the gentleman to be accurate in his observations concerning the gentleman from New York. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not say the gentleman said it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is one matter that in the committee was considered long and considered well. I think that every member of the committee finally came to the conclusion that this is a wise and fair provision to put in the bill.

As I tried to point out earlier in the day, there are so many rural communities in the country that cannot possibly qualify, that cannot possibly convince any sane director of rural electrification in this country, that they have enough to bring into existence a cooperative or a corporation that can live, much less ever pay itself out and make itself a self-liquidating proposition, that these words should stay in the bill.

Many of the sparsely settled communities within 5 or 10 miles of a community in which there is a private power plant can, with this loan from the Government, get rural electrification, whereas they never would get it otherwise.

What we are after here is to bring about electrification of the rural districts of the country and not because somebody passed a bill in the Senate to follow that language. I have as much respect for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] as anybody on the floor of this House, but we are here to legislate as a House of Representatives and not to follow the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate or the Senate or any one man in the Senate.

I think I can state that those who will be in charge of this activity believe that this provision will bring about as much rural electrification or more than the original provisions of the bill so far as that is concerned.

I therefore trust, in the interest of rural electrification of the country, in the interest of fair play, in the interest of orderly procedure of rural electrification, in the interest of nonprofit corporations and power companies, that this amendment will be voted down. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. My friend from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] I always listen to with great attention. He always makes a strong argument. It seems to me today, however, he is off on the wrong foot, because the farmers of the United States under the present situation in this country will never get electricity from the power companies, and if you allow and encourage the Power Trust companies to build their lines into the rural communities, the only result will be that they will continue to charge exorbitant rates to the city dwellers and force the farmers to pay those same high rates.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts. Mr. HOLMES. I want to ask my friend a question, and that is, if he studies the bill as we have who have served on the committee, you will realize that if this amendment is adopted there is only one thing that will come of it, and that will be that the farmers will get no relief whatever.

They will get no relief because there is not mileage enough in New England to create a cooperative organization sufficient

Mr. CONNERY. I think the gentleman is in error there. Plenty of cooperatives will spring up to challenge the Power Trust if given a fair opportunity. The gentleman knows from his experience with the power companies in our section that if these companies go out into the farming districts, into the rural communities, they will continue to charge their exorbitant profits. So I believe that the passage of this amendment is vital if we are to get decent rates on electricity for all of the people.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman that there was a community served by a private corporation in my county in Mississippi, and what did they do? They built a little line out into a small community and they charged $3 to $4.75 for 25 kilowatt-hours a month, where the T. V. A. rates for the same amount would be $1.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I support the commendable purposes of this bill. I oppose the pending amendment as detrimental to its purposes.

Let us look at the practical situation we face. Under the terms of this bill, the farmer has two options to get rural electrification. One is through financing him by the Government. The Government will furnish the money to build the rural lines but on condition that the farmer will pay back to the Government the total investment, with interest, assume the hazards of ownership, management, and of the investment, and also pay the operating cost of the business.

The construction cost to the average farmer will be about $330. If we can give the farmer the service he needs and save him the necessity of that capital investment, he is better off.

The bill as it now stands also provides another way for farmers to secure rural electrification. The Government may loan the necessary money to a private company to provide the rural line. In that case it will be the company that becomes responsible for repayment of the loan, the hazards of ownership, and management. The farmer will become responsible only for his monthly service bill. In many cases this method of financing will be to the economic advantage of the farmer, rather than the other method. Many farmers will be in position to assume responsibility for their monthly service bills who cannot see their way to assume the 100-percent debt and responsibility of ownership.

Those who support this amendment are trying to deny the farmer one of the two methods this bill offers for his relief. The bill does not propose to force either method on the farmer. We want him to have a chance to use either method that he decides will best serve his needs. Why deny a farmer a right to decide for himself whether he prefers to invest $330 in a local company, besides paying operating expenses, or whether he prefers to get electric current simply by paying monthly charges.

This talk about excessive charges by the private companies is irrelevant. The utility commissions in the States will fix the rates the farmer will pay on either kind of line. The same authority is going to fix the rate in either case. All this amendment will accomplish will be to deny many farmers of the country rural electrification.

Look at the background behind the situation. The investments in these rural extensions are on the border line of safety. The private companies have not built the lines because they did not see enough profit to pay them to go. In this bill we offer the inducement of long-time loans at cheap interest. If that is sufficient inducement for a cooperative company to go in, it may also induce the private corporation to go in and save the farmer from the necessity of becoming part owner in a business he must finance on a 100-percent loan basis and in which he is inexperienced.

The proposal is that men shall organize their own little company, perhaps 50 or 100 users on the line, possibly with only $25,000 of capital. They are inexperienced in the business. In many cases they will find much grief. They will have to employ men of skill to carry on the work or pay for their own inexperience. The overhead may be high in proportion to their investment. Suppose they select a 3 percent. That is the whole story of this proposition.

manager of the company that has 100 users and the manager's salary is only $100 a month. That will make a charge of $1 a month against every user on that line. Ordinarily the private company owns the central station and financing a small branch line is simple for it. The private company gets wholesale prices on its supplies. It has experienced engineers, construction and operating crews. If the private company will do the right thing it can do the job better and cheaper than the cooperative.

What are we going to do? Insist on that high overhead charge being imposed on the farmer whether he wants it or not, or are we going to leave it an open choice for him to decide? The bill proposes to force nothing upon farmers. This amendment, offered in the name of the farmer, will simply deny rural electrification to many farmers without conferring benefits on anyone.

Many of these small lines will, within a few years, be swallowed up as links in larger lines. Some will be unduly expensive, others will become antiquated. Many of these small independent lines are temporarily necessary, but when final liquidation time comes, in some instances at least, if not in many, the users on private lines will be at an advantage. It will then also be easier for the Government to collect its bill and depart.

Cooperative or public ownership is frequently desirable, but only where for the best interest of the users.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were-ayes 41, noes 53.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. RAY-BURN and Mr. RANKIN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported ayes 49, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 14, line 20, after the word "not", strike out the words "less than" and insert in lieu thereof the word "exceeding."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this merely restores the language of the Senate bill, which provides that this money shall be loaned to these rural power lines at not more than 3 percent. In the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce it was changed to read "not less" than 3 percent. My amendment would restore the Senate language. You will observe that on page 15 the committee left the Senate language in section 15 where it provides that on these appliances the money is to be loaned at a rate not exceeding 3 percent.

Mr. RAYBURN. That was an oversight, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Holmes], who offered the original amendment, understood that it extended to the other.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the oversight was the other way around.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it was not.

Mr. RANKIN. What I am trying to do is to correct what I say was an oversight.

Mr. HOLMES. That change was made in both sections 4 and 5.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I will say that it was an error on the part of the committee. The gentleman who put this bill through the Senate has been intensely interested and insistent on this proposition, and I think he is right about it, and this rate ought to be limited to not more than 3 percent, so that we will know what these farmers will have to pay.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the committee has a very good reason for changing the Senate language. Under present conditions we think that 3 percent is all that will be charged, but we do not want to put the Government in the position where it will have to pay more than 3 percent for money which it will compel them to lend out at less than

Mr. WHITE. Did this Congress put in that same kind of | a limitation in the R. F. C. bill that we passed the other day?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know about that. I am operating on this bill only at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Administrator is authorized and empowered, from the sums hereinbefore authorized, to make loans for the purpose of financing the wiring of the premises of persons in rural areas and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances and equipment. Such loans may be made to any of the borrowers of funds loaned under the provisions of section 4, or to any person, firm, or corporation supplying or installing the said wiring, appliances, or equipment. Such loans shall be for such terms, subject to such conditions, and so secured as reasonably to assure repayment thereof, and shall be at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 percent per annum. interest not exceeding 3 percent per annum.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Holmes: Page 15, line 15, after the word "not", strike out the word "exceeding" and insert in lieu thereof the words "less than."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will say the committee accepts the amendment, in order to save time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we do not accept it. I propose to vote against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Holmes].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. For the purpose of administering this act and for the

SEC. 6. For the purpose of administering this act and for the purpose of making the studies, investigations, publications, and reports herein provided for, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as shall be necessary.

SEC. 7. The Administrator is authorized and empowered to bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or other sale, or otherwise to acquire, property pledged or mortgaged to secure any loan made pursuant to this act; to pay the purchase price and any costs and expenses incurred in connection therewith from the sums authorized in section 3 of this act; to accept title to any property so purchased or acquired in the name of the United States of America; to operate or lease such property for such period as may be deemed necessary or advisable to protect the investment therein, but not to exceed 5 years after the acquisition thereof; and to sell such property so purchased or acquired, upon such terms and for such consideration as the Administrator shall determine to be reasonable.

No borrower of funds under section 4 shall, without the approval

No borrower of funds under section 4 shall, without the approval of the Administrator, sell or dispose of its property, rights, or franchises, acquired under the provisions of this act, until any loan obtained from the Rural Electrification Administration, including all interest and charges, shall have been repaid.

Sec. 8. The administration of loans and contracts entered into by the Rural Electrification Administration established by Executive Order No. 7037, dated May 11, 1935, may be vested by the President in the Administrator authorized to be appointed by this act; and in such event the provisions of this act shall apply to said loans and contracts to the extent that said provisions are not inconsistent therewith. The President may transfer to the Rural Electrification Administration created by this act the jurisdiction and control of the records, property (including office equipment), and personnel used or employed in the exercise and performance of the functions of the Rural Electrification Administration established by such Executive order. lished by such Executive order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rankin: Page 17, line 4, after the word "order", insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 9. This act shall be administered entirely on a nonpartisan basis, and in the appointment of officials, the selection of employees, and in the promotion of any such officials or employees, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. If the Administrator herein provided for is found by the President of the United States to be guilty of a violation of this section, he shall be removed from office by the President, and any appointee or selection of officials or employees made by the Administrator who is found guilty of a violation of this act shall be removed by the Administrator."

creating the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Tennessee Valley Authority is the most effective and the most valuable organization, so far as the people are concerned, connected with this Government. It has been more free from politics and has selected the most capable men. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] wrote that provision in the Tennessee Valley Authority law. That is where it came from, because it worked so well there. We discussed this proposition, and he said he was going to put it in the bill, and I agreed to support it, because I think it will free this organization from certain political patronage that would do it more harm than good.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the proceedings, but I do think, in all deference to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the distinguished Member of the other body, that this is the most ridiculous provision I ever saw written into any bill. If this provision is adopted, every time anybody is appointed to any position in the Rural Electrification Administration, whether it be under civil service or out, some constituent of some Member of the House, Republican or Democrat, would always be coming and laying the charge that it was a political appointment. There could not possibly be one, in my opinion, where that charge would not lie against the man who was appointed and against the people who may have recommended him.

I do not know anything about this proposition about the Tennessee Valley Authority. I did not know there was any such provision as this in the bill. I know that the Senator from Nebraska had been talking about it for a good while, but I did not think either the House or the Senate had ever adopted the proposition.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. It will be much more injurious for them to make charges and be able to prove them than if they should make them when there is no truth in them. They have made such charges with reference to appointments in the Tennessee Valley Authority and they have been able to disprove it in every instance.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have had very little cooperation from those in authority as far as jobs are concerned in Tennessee Valley Authority, and I do not like them myself as far as I am concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. I have had wonderful cooperation from the T. V. A. in getting cheap power to the people in the Muscle Shoals area, and I like them very much. They have done a wonderful job and, in my opinion, their organization is as free from politics as any I have ever known.

If you fill this organization with political appointees, I fear the farmers who need this rural electrification will suffer the consequences.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were ayes 56 and noes 59.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. RANKIN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were-ayes 60, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

(Mr. Holmes asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Administrator shall present annually to the Congress not later than the 20th day of January in each year a full report of his activities under this act.

SEC. 10. In order to carry out the provisions of this act the Administrator may accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services of Federal, State, and local officers and employees as are available, and he may without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws applicable to officers and employees of the United States appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys, engineers, and experts, and he may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as he may find necessary and prescribe their duties. The Administrator is authorized from sums. by the Administrator."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is merely restoring the language of the Senate bill. This provision is in the bill lawbooks and books of reference; directories and periodicals; travel expenses; rental at the seat of government and elsewhere; the purchase, operation, or maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; and printing and binding) as are appropriate and necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The Administrator is authorized and empowered to extend the time of payment of interest or principal of any loans made by the Administrator pursuant to this act: Provided, however, That with respect to any loan made under section 4, the payment of interest or principal shall not be extended more than 5 years after such payment shall have become due, and with respect to any loan made under section 5, the payment of principal or interest shall not be extended more than 2 years after such payment shall have become due: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any obligations or the security therefor which may be held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the provisions of section 3.

SEC. 12. Sec. 13. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Under the rule the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SUTPHIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3483) to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 447, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is considered as ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Wadsworth moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:
On page 10, line 23, strike out "10" and insert "5."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to re-

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wadsworth) there were—ayes 44, noes 92.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the majority leader think it would be well to use some of these extra days to consider omnibus bills on the Private Calendar? We are in the fourth month of our session and have passed but one omnibus private bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree, of course, that Members are interested in the consideration of the omnibus private bills, but the gentleman knows such bills can be called only on certain days under the rules of the House, and there has been no delay this session of Congress. We have been working here busily practically every day except Saturday and have adjourned then only for the convenience of the Members.

The rules provide that on the third Tuesday of each month this calendar shall be called, and I assure the gentleman I shall exercise every power I may have to see that it is not interfered with and that the full day may be devoted to this calendar.

I may say further to the gentleman that if we can find opportunity, although it will take unanimous consent or a special rule, to have an extra day for the consideration of omnibus private bills I would be glad to lend my efforts in that direction. This is the only assurance I can give the gentleman.

Mr. BIERMANN. The point I want to make is that on the third Tuesday of the first month we passed over the Omnibus Private Bill Calendar because of the death of a

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope we are not going to have any more dead kings this session.

Mr. BIERMANN. On the third Tuesday of the second month the whole day was devoted to some personal matters; and on the third Tuesday of the third month we passed upon precisely one omnibus private bill and that was defeated. There are many important matters in these private bills. Unless we can get some extra days to consider them we shall pass on these bills so late that the other body cannot act on them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assure the gentleman I am in the fullest sympathy with the provisions of the new rule which seeks to afford the opportunity of passing on these private bills. I assure the gentleman further that I shall exercise my best judgment and discretion to see if we cannot get an extra day or two for it.

I want to say to the gentleman that the only reason we are adjourning over tomorrow is out of deference to the request of many Members of Congress. Tomorrow is Good Friday, an important religious anniversary, and many of the Members want to go to their homes. This is the only reason I am asking unanimous consent to adjourn over tomorrow and Saturday. Of course, the gentleman would not have a right to call up these omnibus bills tomorrow under the rules, anyway.

Mr. BIERMANN. The majority leader then will, if it is convenient, give us an extra day on these omnibus bills?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will, because I am in sympathy with the Members on that proposition, and I want all of those bills cleared up before we adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Alabama that a bill carrying funds for storm and flood sufferers has just come over from the Senate-

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know what the gentleman has in mind, and before I make the motion to adjourn, the Speaker. I am sure, will recognize the gentleman from Maryland to make a unanimous-consent request in reference to that bill.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman knows I am intensely interested in that bill. The people of Tupelo, my home town, have suffered from a tornado and are badly in need of this assistance to help rebuild their homes. I have remained here to try to get this measure through before we adjourn for the week end. I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the majority leader, if it is not possible to get that bill up tomorrow in some way?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not see how it is possible. The only way it can be brought up for consideration is for the bill to go to conference. It will take some time for the conferees to agree on a bill, because there are sharp differences between the House and the Senate on some features of the bill. May I give the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] the assurance that I am just as much interested in that bill as he is. I had a visitation in my own district. not nearly as bad as in the gentleman's district, and I want to do everything I can. I am sure the conferees will try to reach an agreement on the bill, so that we may get to a vote on it some time next week.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Alabama that in order for the bill to go to conference and be ready to report back to the House by the first of the week, a unanimous-consent request will have to be propounded? May I request the gentleman from Alabama to withhold his request to adjourn over until the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] submits the unanimous-consent request to send the bill to conference?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I gave the gentleman the assurance that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough] would have an opportunity to propound his unanimousconsent request.

Mr. RANKIN. But if the gentleman insists on submitting his unanimous-consent request to adjourn in advance, and then someone should object to this bill going to conference, we would have no assurance that the bill would be read for a vote the first of the week. It will take but a moment to submit the request.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say there is no disposition over here to object to either request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I say to the gentleman from Alabama that I have a very urgent resolution which I would like to present this afternoon. May I ask him not to move to adjourn until I may have the opportunity to present the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

COMMERCIAL AIRPORT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO submitted further conference report on the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, several Members want to extend their remarks on the rural electrification bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 11968, relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill which the Senate raised from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. REILLY, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Mr. Hollister, and Mr. Wolcott.

BARBARA BLACKSTROM

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4387) for the relief of Barbara Blackstrom, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom, of Muskegon, Mich., for damages resulting from injuries sustained in falling from an for damages resulting from injuries sustained in falling from an unguarded spot on the lighthouse maintained by the Government at the entrance of the channel leading from Lake Michigan into the Muskegon Lake Harbor on July 7, 1934: Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

"Sec. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the cases of claims over which such court has jurisdiction, under the provisions of paragraph 20 of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Haines, for 3 days, on account of important business.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 248. Joint resolution to provide for participation by the United States in an inter-American conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936; to the Committee on Foreign

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6297. An act for the relief of Leon Frederick Ruggles: and

H. R. 6982. An act to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.
Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. TABER. I cannot withhold it.

Mr. PATMAN. Will not the gentleman let us get permission to extend our remarks?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Texas obtained permission for all Members to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I ask the gentleman from New York to withhold that a moment in order that I may present a resolution?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. We have an emergency matter

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know whether the gentleman knows what I have in mind or not, but I did not object to the unanimous-consent request to adjourn over until Monday because I thought I would have an opportunity to present this resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us have the regular order, Mr.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. [After counting.] Ninety-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, on Monday, April 13, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

769. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1936, in the sum of $5,000 (H. Doc. No. 441); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

770. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting for the consideration of Congress deficiency estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1935 and prior fiscal years in the amount of $71,846.05, and supplemental estimates of appropriation for the fiscal years 1936 and 1937 in the amount of $823,682.72, in all $895,428.77, together with a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 442); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

771. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting for the consideration of Congress supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1936, amounting to $53,287, together with a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 443); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 10, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, met at 12 o'clock meridian, in accordance with the order adopted on the 6th instant prescribing the hours of the daily sessions.

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. RANDOLPH PERKINS, of New Jersey, and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, accompanied by the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Elmore Whitehurst, and by Thomas M. Mulherin, special agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, with his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., and R. O. Cullen, Esq., of Miami, Fla., associated with Mr. Hoffman, appeared in the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms by proclamation will open the proceedings of the Senate sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

On request of Mr. ASHURST, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, for Thursday, April 9, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Capper	Hale	Metcalf
Ashurst	Caraway	Harrison	Minton
Austin	Carey	Hastings	Murphy
Bachman	Clark	Hatch	Murray

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankheap], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent from the Senate because of illness; that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] is absent because of illness in his family; and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holf], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. Long], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Moore] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement stand of record for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Are counsel on the part of the respondent prepared to proceed?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, the managers, I understand, have something to put in.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I am asking per mission that there be incorporated in the RECORD, for the convenience of the members of the Court, title 28 of the United States Code, which has to do with Federal judges practicing law. It is very brief and will serve the convenience of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). There is no objection on our part.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

United States Code, title 28

SEC. 373 (Judicial Code, sec. 258). Practice of law by United States judges: It shall not be lawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law. Any person offending against the prohibition of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor (R. S., sec. 713; Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, sec. 258; 36 Stat. 1161).

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now wish to call Mr. Sweeny for further cross-examination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the witness is in the gallery not expecting to be called. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Mr. President, as I understand, there is a stipulation that the carbon copy of a letter which I hold in my hand, in the absence of the original letter, may be introduced. It is signed by Mr. Bert E. Holland.

We introduce this copy in evidence as the original letter. It reads as follows:

MANAGERS' EXHIBIT A-23

DECEMBER 23, 1929.

A. L. RANKIN, Esq.

Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla.

DEAR MR. RANKIN: I have been recently informed that you have filed an answer in behalf of myself and my cotrustees, Whitfield W. Johnson and Catherine Sugden, to the counterclaim of Harold A. Moore in the Whitehall foreclosure matter.

I am at a loss to understand your action in this respect, inasmuch as it seemed clear to me that we had a definite understanding before the hearing opened at Miami on October 28 last that you were no longer to represent me or my cotrustee in this matter.

However, in order that there may be no further misunderstanding as to whether or not you are to continue to represent us, please be advised that you are not to represent us in any way whatsoever in the above matter.

Under these circumstances, I feel that you will desire to with-draw your answer filed in our behalf to the counterclaim of Harold A. Moore and that you will wish to advise us that this has been done.

Yours very truly,

For Self and Cotrustee.

We introduce also the receipt for registered article no. 211029 and also the return receipt. We ask that the letter and receipts be introduced in evidence and given an appropriate exhibit number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be admitted and appropriately marked.

(The document was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-23.")

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MARTIN SWEENY

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will hand you, Mr. Sweeny, a telegram dated March 24, 1928, addressed to you at the Whitehall and signed by W. J. Moore. It is a copy of that telegram.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I think, under the rules that have been observed, the managers should have an opportunity to examine the documents before they are offered in evidence.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). These are the ones that were in the files, Mr. Manager, which I presume you looked over last night.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. But we cannot tell by looking at the back of the telegram what is written in it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Pardon me, please. I should have handed it to you.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I am not as familiar with the file as are my associates, but it seems to me, from this telegram and from what I understand counsel for the respondent proposes to offer, it might be just as well to settle now the scope of the inquiry.

This telegram, as I construe it and from what I understand to be the contents of the other documents which counsel for the respondent proposes to offer, tends to extend the scope of the inquiry into the bankruptcy matter and probably into the question of the management and policy and conduct of the Moores, who financed the construction of the Whitehall Hotel.

It is now noted that the witness who is now before the Court, Mr. Martin Sweeny, is most familiar with the reasons which prompted him in whatever he had to do with the initiation of the proceedings with which Mr. Rankin was associated and out of which the Whitehall matter has arisen; that the introduction of documents now tending to go beyond the scope of the Whitehall receivership would at least go beyond any necessity in the situation for the introduction of documents which lead back into the management of the Moores.

We have endeavored, and I say this in no spirit of criticism, to cut as nearly to the bone as we could the presentation of facts before the Court. It does not seem to me that it would be helpful to the Court to go into the realm into which we believe this testimony proposes to lead. As I said, we might as well determine now the scope of the inquiry which the Court desires to have.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I thoroughly agree with the suggestion about the procedure that we should take up and dispose of the matter now. I also agree and have agreed and have attempted to conserve the time that we have been given here so as to do everything we possibly could to hasten the trial along, and that at the sacrifice of substantial interests of Judge Ritter.

Judge Ritter is charged here with a conspiracy. He is charged with conspiring with the gentleman now in the witness box, with Mr. Richardson and others, to maintain and have brought into court a champertous suit. If this were in an ordinary court, and if we were hewing to the line, I would be entitled to a demurrer on that count because there has not been one syllable of evidence that connected Judge Ritter with anything this gentleman did or any efforts that he made to get into court to conserve the property or for some unworthy object, such as has been charged to the witness now in the box, and others.

This is not going into anything about the former bankruptcy. The first telegram merely is coincident with some other matters connected with that matter. We are not going into that matter for the reason that a great deal of this article was devoted to charges against Judge Ritter about that bankruptcy, and there has not been a syllable of evidence produced here to warrant the going into it, so we have allowed our witnesses to separate on the proposition. But what I claim I have a right to do is to introduce these papers in evidence. If I am not allowed to do that, as we have introduced such evidence heretofore, then I respectfully urge upon the Court that on a vital matter, which is still in the case, Judge Ritter is to be deprived of the benefit of this testimony.

These letters I have taken out of a great file. Some of them are referred to in the letters introduced by the honorable managers. Others of them are correspondence between this gentlemen now in the witness box and Mr. Bemis, whom the managers brought into the case. I have taken from the file only those things which bear directly upon the fact that there was nothing champertous in this and nobody did anything that he was not entitled to do. I have taken out of the file enough of the letters to show the facts when they are read with the letters which have been introduced in evidence and which, unexplained, might lead to an inference that there was something wrong about the evi-

I have taken out of the file these letters that bear directly upon the matter. I have not only submitted them to the other side, but I have submitted the entire file to the other side. Still it is said the gentleman now in the witness box knows all about it. If the letters are admissible themselves to tell the story, I can do it in half the time I otherwise could. We have the letters and other correspondence taken from the file, beginning with this telegram. This telegram shows that on March 24, 1928, Mr. Moore himself, controlling all these mortgages, had this concern put into bankruptcy. It follows the story that has already been told by certain witnesses. It comes down to the time when the bankruptcy was over, and the letters from him and the letters between the parties show that the efforts were to subject the property to the second mortgage with the first mortgage still being out.

It all goes to the very heart of the matter of the alleged conspiracy, but that is not on the part of Mr. Sweeny. It is not on the part of any person named in this article, but it is to prevent the entire loss of that property. I think this correspondence will show it. I think in common fairness these letters ought to go in with the other telegrams and letters which have been introduced without objection on our part, assuming that these would be allowed to go into evidence.

That is all I can say. I say most sincerely and earnestly if this is not permitted to come in evidence, the managers will have the advantage of the small amount of that correspondence with no explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair ask the managers on the part of the House, aside from the time which may be taken on cross-examination of the witness, what harm these letters would do if admitted in evidence?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we have seen the other letters and documents which counsel for the respondent proposes to offer. Under the statement of counsel, especially with regard to the telegram which has just been offered, we would not insist upon the objection, but the managers are under the impression, to be candid with the Court-and I do not know how far these other documents attempt to gothat we were going into the conduct of the Moores, to try the whole question of the conduct of the Moores, whereas in the view of the managers and in the light of the evidence which has been introduced, it has seemed to us that the whole question turns upon whether or not there was, in the institution of the suit before Judge Ritter, with regard to the testimony which has been offered, champertous conduct and whether or not there was collusion or cooperation by Judge Ritter in connection with the conspiracy which we allege.

The witness is on the witness stand who knows what were the motives that prompted him to attempt to have the suit initiated by Mr. Rankin. He can testify to those facts; and we had hoped to avoid any confusion that would arise with reference to the transaction of the Moores in financing this hotel.

In other words, it is our position that regardless of what was done by the Moore's, whether right or wrong, in financing this hotel, that could not be material in the determination of whether or not Judge Ritter participated in a conspiracy under which the suit was brought in his court, under which Holland was not permitted to withdraw, and under which these fees were paid, in which we charge Judge Ritter to have participated.

If the Court would like to have the testimony, we have not any objection to it. I just had the notion that it would take us into a field into which this inquiry would necessarily lead and it would not throw any light upon the question at

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the objection of the managers on the part of the House is that the evidence is immaterial, outside the issue, and would unnecessarily prolong the trial.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Substantially that, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the Chair has once before expressed himself with reference to the jury that is trying this case. If you desire to put this evidence in the record, the jury will be able to determine whether or not it is necessary.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I think so. We have no concern about the attitude of the Senate; but if testimony should be offered, and it should seem to raise a question, it might be necessary for the managers on the part of the House also to go into that field; that is all. We do not insist on any other ground. We are not afraid to have the testimony go in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question of whether or not they wish to go into this matter, in view of the statements of the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, for the present we will not insist upon the objection, in view of the statement of counsel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well; read the telegram. (The telegram was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 23.") Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The telegram is dated March 24, 1928, and is as follows:

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 23

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 24, 1928.

MARTIN SWEENY, The Whitehall:

Thanks for signing extension agreement on first-mortgage bonds. Thanks for signing extension agreement on first-mortgage bonds. Stop. After thoughtful consideration of all aspects of the White-hall situation, on the urgent advice of Roberts, Fordham and Shutts, and Bowman, we have instructed Shutts and Bowman to at once file suit to foreclose third mortgage and to ask to have Bemis appointed receiver for property. Stop. I think you should at once telephone Cramer of this suit and also advise him of Nelson's judgment and the exact situation with reference to the Reison's Judgment and the exact situation with reference to the garnishment suits so that he can take such action as he sees fit. Stop. Please show this telegram to Bemis in order that he may be advised in the matter. Stop. Please advice me by telephone what action Cramer says he is going to take.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any other evidence from this witness?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I desire to read these letters as we go along. Do you wish to look at them?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Go ahead, Judge. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Of course, these are conceded. These were included in the stipulation upon yesterday, Mr. President, so I shall not stop and ask the witness about each

MARTIN C. SWEENY, Esq.,

% The New Worden Hotel,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Dear Martin: I am enclosing my check for $1,000, which is 66% percent of the money that I have received personally for services rendered for Whitehall since April 1, as I have been charging $500 a month for my services; and as you and Ed are partners, you are entitled to your share without any arguments.

Also enclosing copy of other letters for your information.

I am not coming to New York for any conference with Mr. Moore. I, of course, am glad to have any conferences you wish, but before I argue any question with him I would like to have something before me in some form as to what he proposed to do, and then I can accept it or reject it. I am not "cocky" or "quarrelsome", but I do not propose to be led into any new game where we do not have control, at least, of the operation and where it will not be necessary for us to put up a single dollar.

Up to the present time I have heard nothing of the checks we were supposed to get. Glad you are having a vacation this week. Please let me know how things are coming along.

Sincerely (Signed) H. E. Bemis.

Sincerely.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). This paper, dated July 9, 1929, is a copy of an announcement made to the holders of firstmortgage bonds. This comes, now, right to July 9, 1929. Without reading all of it, I will read the following:

An opportunity will now be given to the holders of the second-mortgage bonds to take over the property, providing they are able to offer a basis for doing so which will be accepted by the

In the meantime I will direct my best efforts toward securing a tenant who will lease and operate the hotel for the coming season. The net income derived from such a lease, after payment of taxes and insurance, will be paid to the holders of the first-mortgage bonds on amounts now due them.

I should like to have that marked as an exhibit.

(Mr. Walsh, of counsel, then offered in evidence and read the following letter, which was received in evidence and marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 26.")

JULY 5, 1929.

Franklin P. Smith, Esq.,

Lake Forest, Ill.

Dear Mr. Smith: I wish to thank you for yours of the 1st instant with enclosure of A. B. & M. Co.'s circulars, etc., and I have thought for some time, if all the bond business that these people have been handling along the lines of Whitehall proposition, that Mr. Moore and his cutfit would be marvels in order to make the continuous period desired to their creek. to make a success and continue paying dividends to their stock-holders.

As I stated to you and also to others, I feel that Moore's outfit are in every way responsible for the present Whitehall conditions from the fact that they did the financing for the building, dictated the operation to the extent of interference in good, recognized principals of operating a hotel, as well as to dispose of nized principals of operating a hotel, as well as to dispose of operating moneys.

If Whitehall had been conservatively financed, constructed, and operated, it could pay not only interest but amortization and show a profit to the stockholders on $2,500,000. This has been demonstrated by our receipts. If the bond people from date would wipe out the second mortgage, which they are directly responsible for, and turn the property over to Mr. Sweeny and myself to manage, we can pay to the first-mortgage bondholders their interest and their amortization, and I am personally convinced that there should be a first-mortgage bondholders' committee formed and the receivership brought about so that the first-mortgage bonds can be protected.

I have people who would undertake this matter, providing there mortgage bonds can be protected.

I have people who would undertake this matter, providing there was any possible way for us to get hold of the list of the first-mortgage bondholders. Perhaps with your connections in Chicago, you may have some way of getting hold of this list; if so, I am prepared to go ahead with the proposition. I wish you would consider this letter personal and confidential.

Mrs. Bemis and I anticipate getting away to Europe on August 3, returning October 1, and we hope to have a good vacation.

Kind regards to you and your family, beg to remain,
Sincerely yours,

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I ask counsel for the respondent if he will not consent to the entire letter of July 9 going into the RECORD?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I shall be very glad to have that done. I thought I would save time, because I was confining it to the mortgage proposition.

(Mr. Walsh, of counsel, then read the entire letter, as follows:)

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 27

[Copy]

JULY 9, 1929.

To the Holders of First-Mortgage Bonds Secured by Whitehall Hotel, Palm Beach, Fla.:

On June 3, 1929, the Whitehall Hotel property was sold by order of the United States District Court, and at the solicitation of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. was bid in by one of its officers. As trustee for the holders of the first-mortgage bonds, I have now taken possession of the property and am holding it for their benefit and protection.

In order to get this property out of the bankruptcy court and thereby save the bondholders the heavy fees, which the trustee in bankruptcy and his attorneys were charging, as well as to save the fees of counsel representing me as trustee for the bondholders, it was necessary to arrange a settlement with the trustee in bankruptcy, which provided for the payment of 10 percent of the amounts due the unsecured creditors, and for the payment of the fees of the trustee in bankruptcy and his attorneys. Now, however, all claims against the property other than those due under the first- and second-mortgage bond issues and taxes for 1928 have been wiped out.

I am informed that the hotel had a successful season during the past winter. A final accounting by the trustee in bankruptcy has not been made, but I am advised that the earnings were sufficient to pay the cost of repairing the damage done by the tornado in September 1928, the expenses of the administration of the trustee in bankruptcy, who has now been dismissed, and his attorney fees, the fees of the attorneys representing the trustee for the first-mortgage bondholders during this litigation, the 10-percent settlement with the unsecured creditors as above referred to and to pay a very substantial sum on the past-due interest on the first-mortgage bonds which accrued prior to November 15, 1928.

An opportunity will now be given to the holders of the second-

An opportunity will now be given to the holders of the second-mortgage bonds to take over the property, providing they are able to offer a basis for doing so which will be accepted by the first-mortgage bondholders.

In the meantime, I will direct my best efforts toward securing a tenant who will lease and operate the hotel for the coming season. The net income derived from such a lease, after payment of taxes and insurance, will be paid to the holders of the first-mortgage bonds on amounts now due them.

FLORIDA EAST COAST HOTEL Co., FLAGLER SYSTEM, Palm Beach, Fla., July 18, 1929.

Palm Beach, Fla., July 18, 1929.

MARTIN C. SWEENY, Esq.,

The Berkshire, 21 East 52nd St., New York City.

Dear Martin: Just in receipt of yours of the 16th regarding Whitehall matters. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into any discussion with Mr. Moore on the Whitehall matters, as I can readily see that there will be a lot of discussion that will be of no value whatever to me, and I expect to be very busy during the few days I am in New York and do not promise to attend any meeting, because my time will be taken up first with our hotel matters with Mr. Kenan and Mr. Haines.

I wish to make this suggestion regarding the handling of operation and maintenance of Whitehall for this coming season, which to my mind is less complicated and ought to be satisfactory to Mr. Moore and the present trustee. I would suggest that the trustee employ you, Ed and myself to operate and maintain Whitehall for the trustee until the end of the operating season until all the accounts are closed, etc., about May 15th, 1930, but we be employed on the same salaries as we received last winter and to receive at the end of the operating season, as a bonus, 10% be employed on the same salaries as we received last winter and to receive at the end of the operating season, as a bonus, 10% over and above the operating expenses, operating expenses to be based on labor, provisions, and supplies and everything that is usually charged to regular operation.

With the above plan, it does not seem that the trustee would be criticized by the bondholders; there will be no occasion of forming any company or going to any unusual expenses, simply go ahead and operate the property under agreement with the trustee, the trustee to advance such moneys as necessary to maintain and open the hotel, and we could operate for the trustee in the same manner we did last winter. I wish you would suggest this plan to Mr. Moore, as I believe it will relieve the situation and certainly could not be any criticism by the bondholders or others, as the trustee should have perfect right to go ahead and employ managers to get as much out of the property as possible for the bondholders, and I am sure we feel we would not only like to help the trustee and Mr. Moore but also do everything we can for

I wish to work along with you, Mr. Moore, and the trustee, but if we are going to work anything out of Whitehall we may be obliged to go back to the court later, and if so I believe my plan is the cleanest, fairest proposition for all concerned and could not be criticized by the court, and we will be operating the property in just the same manner as the court operated it this past season, only under a different trustee.

I think that every dollar that can possibly be earned on Whitehall should be returned to the trustee to protect the first and second mortgage bonds, and as I wrote you before, I am willing to give 100% service to such an end, although I feel that we should be well paid for our services on the basis I have suggested. I am perfectly willing you should talk this matter over with Mr. Moore and show him my letter, as you know there is no disposition on our part to think that Mr. Moore or anyone else "is trying to rob me." If we operate the property for the trustee, we should have a thorough understanding and complete agreement of just how we are to operate, and after this agreement has been once determined we should go ahead and operate without any interference. Please think this over and drop me a line before I leave here the 27th. here the 27th.

Kind regards. Sincerely,

(Signed) H. E. BEMIS.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The next letter I desire to offer is dated July 24, 1929.

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 29

JULY 24, 1929.

Mr. H. E. BEMIS,

Florida East Coast Hotel Co., Palm Beach, Fla.

DEAR MR. BEMIS: I did not have any chance yesterday to talk to

Dear Mr. Bemis: I did not have any chance yesterday to talk to Mr. Levy as at luncheon hour he had some people with him, but will try to contact him before you reach New York.

In the afternoon Mr. Moore called me up and gave me the enclosed schedule he had been working upon. As you will note from this set-up, he is not a director or an officer of the company in name, but has two directors representing him and also has Mr. Fordham in as an officer at $5,000 per year, which, of course, goes to him; and then I see Mr. Bemis is only here for $7,500. He said, "Yes; but this is only for a 6 months' season, and naturally he would get paid for looking after the property for the other 6 months." He also told me that he doubted very much whether he could be in New York next week. So when you get to New York you and I will sit down and decide just what we ought to do.

Very truly yours.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. There is no signature, but I observe "MS: BT", so I take that to be yours, Mr. Sweeny.—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer the letter dated July 31, 1929, and ask that it be appropriately marked.

(The letter was offered in evidence, marked "Respondent's Exhibit 30", and was read by Mr. Walsh, as follows:)

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 30

JULY 31, 1929.

Mr. H. E. Bemis, 2 West Forty-fifth Street,

New York City.

New York City.

Dear Chief: I am enclosing herewith a schedule, and if this meets with your approval and you will write me a letter stressing the point that we are willing to operate Whitehall for the bondholders and give them the first $200,000 earned to cover the interest on the mortgage and that we are willing to operate the property and take our chances of earning our salaries after this amount has been paid. And in consideration of this that we would want 50 percent as a bonus of any money earned after the $200,000 and salaries have been paid. That you believe, in view of the fact that we have spent 5 years in building up a clientele and taking care of the property, that the stock should be divided as outlined. Furthermore, we are using our name in securing credit for all the renewals besides the goodwill which we have established in Florida. I will then send the letter immediately to Mr. Moore for his reaction.

reaction.

Yours very truly.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I believe we agreed in our stipulation that where there is no signature and these initials appear at the bottom, it is Mr. Martin Sweeny's.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The next letter I offer is dated August 1, 1929, on the letterhead of the Florida East Coast Hotel Co., Flagler System.

(The letter was offered in evidence, marked "Respondent's Exhibit 31", and was read by Mr. Walsh, as follows:)

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 31

FLORIDA EAST COAST HOTEL Co., FLAGLER SYSTEM, New York City, August 1, 1929.

Mr. MARTIN SWEENY,

Mr. Martin Sweent,

Managing Director, The Berkshire,

21 East Fifty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Martin: I have given a great deal of thought to the operation of the Whitehall property for the coming operating season, and I have considered as carefully as possible all the different propositions that have been suggested by you and Mr. Moore.

I am enclosing a plan which I think would be entirely fair to the first bond and mortgage holders, to the property, and to ourselves; and I am perfectly willing to join you, Ed, and Mr. Moore on this plan and the schedule which I am enclosing. While I do not wish to appear arbitrary in the matter, I am not willing to go ahead with any further connection with the operation of Whitehall, only on the basis of the schedule I am enclosing.

As I have already stated, I feel that this schedule is fair to all interested parties; and, further, the fact that the success in operation would be entirely due to you, Ed, and myself; and also the fact that we will not receive any moneys for services until after sufficient money has been earned and put aside; that is, $200,000, to pay next year's interest on the first-mortgage bonds, taxes, and insurance.

and insurance.

I feel that this plan and schedule which I am submitting ought to be acceptable to the first bond and mortgage holders and to the trustees of the bonds; and if the first-mortgage holders, the trustees, and Mr. Moore, and yourselves are agreeable to my proposition, you are authorized, as far as I am concerned, to go ahead on the basis of the schedule I am submitting.

If the proposition is accepted, I am prepared to subscribe and pay for my one-third of the $25,000 capital stock at any time after October 1st.

Yours very truly,

(Copy sent to Ed and Mr. Moore today.-H. E. B.)

Mr. Manager HOBBS subsequently said: Pardon me, Mr. Walsh. Are you not going to read the schedule set out in the letter you have just read?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not the schedule.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. It is right there.

"Respondent's Exhibit 31." It is as follows:

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. Hoffman says he thinks he can find it, and I will read it. I did not have it with the letter.

Mr. Manager HOBBS subsequently said: Mr. President, we had asked that the schedule attached to the Moore letter be read in connection with the letter so as to show what he was talking about when he spoke of the three high-priced properties. We ask that that go in as a part of the exhibit to which it was originally attached.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is perfectly satisfactory. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the schedule will be read in connection with the letter.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offer the following schedule in evidence, and ask that it be attached to the letter marked

The company will operate Whitehall from December 1 to May 1, pay all expenses of labor, supplies, transportation, advertising, publicity, and necessary replacements of china, glassware, linens, silverware, and furnishings for said operating period; also upkeep of building and grounds during operating period.

At the end of the operating season the company will pay to the bondholders the first $200,000 of earnings. If there is a surplus above this, the salaries above then to be paid. The balance, if any, above this to be divided as follows: Fifty percent to the bondholders and 50 percent to the operating company.

Owner to pay all maintenance of buildings and grounds and put buildings and grounds in condition for operation. This will require $15,000 on November 1 to paint old Whitehall and put in additional planting to replace trees and shrubbery lost in the storm of last year; also taxes, fire insurance, and all improvements that would be considered capital expenditure.

I now offer a letter on the paper of the American Bond & Mortgage Co. dated August 29, 1929.

(The letter was offered, marked "Respondent's Exhibit 32", and was read by Mr. Walsh, as follows:)

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 32

AMERICAN BOND & MORTGAGE COMPANY,
AMERICAN BOND & MORTGAGE BUILDING,
Chicago, Ill., August Twenty-ninth, 1929.

Mr. MARTIN SWEENY

Berkshire Hotel, 21 E. 52nd Street, New York City, N. Y.

My Dear Martin: I expect to go to New York next week and will see you for a final conference before I do anything definite regarding Whitehall, although I must say I am not hopeful of accomplishing anything if Bemis is to remain in the picture, owing to his seeming indifference and the wide divergence in our views with reference to a working agreement.

According to Mr. Bemis' letter, it seems that he has the idea that under any other than his and your management, Whitehall cannot be made a success and this I believe accounts for his extraordinary demands. I do not agree with his idea in this regard at all, for I believe there are plenty of men available who can make a success of Whitehall.

During the past five years we have had to take over ten hotels which we are now operating and with all of them we are meeting with much better success than their former owners and with some we have been quite successful under very adverse conditions, for nearly all of them, were very much run down at the time we took them over. To illustrate: Longwood Towers in Boston was turned over to us under a cloud from previous mismanagement, but it is now distinctly on the up-grade to such an extent that its future is assured. The Park Central in New York had a bad start under the management of the original owners, but under our supervision, notwithstanding the unfortunate Rothstein incident, it is making good. The Mayflower at Washington has been very successful, although local hotel men freely expressed the opinion before we opened it, that owing to the over-supply of hotel rooms and to other unfavorable conditions in Washington, that it was doomed to failure and that we could not keep it open for ninety days, but today we have the cream of the business in Washington and it has a world-wide reputation as being the best managed and best equipped hotel in the country.

equipped hotel in the country.

In the operation of these 10 hotels I have been brought into close contact with every phase of the hotel business and have had to make it a study and am therefore conversant with the general requirements for their successful management and the best methods for procuring business.

I feel that our present organization is qualified to take over any hotel proposition and that it can make as great a success of same as anyone else can.

In conducting our hotels I have come in contact with a great In conducting our hotels I have come in contact with a great many hotel managers, and I have found that nine out of ten of them think and claim that people come to the hotels under their management owing to their personal magnetism or because of personal friendship for them, but which I have found by experience is true to only a very limited extent. My own experience has demonstrated that what the public wants from a hotel is efficient management reflected in courteous treatment and good service and are not very much concerned as to the personnel that supplies it.

I did not ask you and Mr Bemis to join with me in a new com-

I did not ask you and Mr. Bemis to join with me in a new com-pany to lease Whitehall because of a feeling on my part that it could not be made a success without you, but for the following

First, that owing to the fact that you boys had invested a large sum of money in the hotel and had lost same thru the bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings, I thought that all of you would appreciate an opportunity to make some of your money back.

Second, I did not want Bemis or you to be able to claim that I had frozen you out of the proposition, although I believe nine out of ten men would have done so under all the circumstances of the case, and in offering you a participation in the new proposition I feel I have done a fair and decent thing by all of you.

If eel I have done a fair and decent thing by all of you.

If what I have offered does not appeal to you and Bemis as being sufficient remuneration for your services, of course, you are at liberty to reject it, but I feel that I have offered all the proposition will bear. The fact that what I offered has to be divided between three persons instead of one is unfortunate, for as I view it, a hotel as small as Whitehall does not require three high priced men for its successful management.

In view of the fact that Mr. Bemis states in his letter that unless his proposition is accepted he is not willing to be further identified with the operation of Whitehall, I must govern my future actions accordingly, because I cannot wait until his return on October 1st to negotiate further with him, but before taking the matter up willing to give you and Ed. an one-returning to with others I am willing to give you and Ed an opportunity to join with me. Pending my arrival in New York I would like to have you and Ed consider doing so, and if you are willing I will make you a proposition which I hope you can entertain.

With kind regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

WM. J. MOORE.

Dear Mr. Moore: Yours of the 29th ult. received. You need not arrange any time to see me, for the reason that I deeply resent your letter, which is impregnated with imputations that I should play false to a friend and a business associate. That may be a method that some people employ in business, but money does not now, and never has, meant enough to me to sell my honor, not alone to play false to an associate. alone to play false to an associate.

(The letter was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 37" and was read by Mr. Walsh, as follows:)

American Bond & Mortgage Co., Chicago, Ill., September 14, 1929.

Mr. Martin Sweeny,
Berkshire Hotel, 21 East Fifty-second Street,
New York City, N. Y. My Dear Martin: I desire to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 5 and in reply will say that you have placed a construction upon my letter of August 29 that was never intended or thought of by me, namely, that you should play false to a friend and business associate.

friend and business associate.

In writing you as I did, I assumed that Bemis meant what he said in his letter to you that on any other basis than that stated therein, he would not be further interested. His letter, taken in connection with a statement that he made to me shortly before the bankruptcy proceedings were started, to the effect that he went into the Whitehall deal to help you and Ed, and that he was more concerned in seeing that you and Ed got your money out than he was in saving anything for himself, led me to infer from his letter that he was withdrawing either for the reason that financial returns were not interesting, or that he wanted to leave you and Ed free to act as you saw fit.

It is my understanding that Mr. Bemis is a well-to-do man and can afford to lose what he put into Whitehall, but you have told me that the situation with regard to yourself and Ed is quite different and that you cannot afford to take a loss. It has always been my desire to have Mr. Bemis in on the proposition, but if he cannot see that it is worth while for him in a financial way, because your half under my proposition would have to be split three ways, does not make my proposition inequitable or unfair, and especially so, in view of the fact that under our original set-up that was all you boys were to receive from the propo-ition.

I hope the foregoing will make it clear that you have placed a wrong interpretation on my letter, and I would not have asked you and Ed to join me, if I had not considered that Mr. Bemis in writing you as he did, and then going away to Europe, had not definitely and deliberately withdrew himself from further participation in Whitehall if his proposition was not accepted by us. The unfortunate situation that has existed between you and Ed and Bemis and myself ever since I first mentioned to you in the spring of 1928 that, in my opinion, the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. could not pay its unsecured debts and would have to go into bankruptcy, has been, the unwarranted suspicion that in advising bankruptcy proceedings, I had an ulterior motive from which I would derive a personal benefit at the expense of yourself, Ed, and Mr. Bemis. The real facts are that I have been actuated only by a desire to do what I thought was best for all parties concerned. It has been a guiding principle in my business life to be loyal to my business associates, and no one who has been associated with me as a partner can point to a single act of mine that was not made in the belief on my part that it was for the best interest of my partners as well as myself. was for the best interest of my partners as well as myself.

In conclusion will say that I have been in New York only 1 day

In conclusion will say that I have been in New York only I day during the past 30 days, and I made no effort to see you for the reason that a contemplated change in our business may change the personnel of the parties with whom we will have to deal concerning Whitehall, and until this is determined and their wishes concerning the property has been ascertained, further negotiations will have to be suspended. Will see you as soon as I know anything definite regarding the property.

Yours very truly,

W. J. MOORE.

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Mr. Sweeny, the letter of August 29 contains a suggestion by Mr. Moore that in his judgment Whitehall Hotel was not large enough to require the services in a managerial capacity of three high-priced men. That would eliminate Mr. Bemis, as you understood?-A. Yes.

Q. And that you regarded as reason for the statement about having played false to your associates?-A. Yes.

- Q. Mr. Bemis was operating three other hotels in Florida at that time?-A. Operating the Royal Poinciana at Palm
- Q. Was that the only statement in the letter at which you took offense?-A. No: I took offense that he wanted to separate me from my chief.
 - Q. Mr. Bemis?-A. Yes.
- Q. You considered if you and your brother were employed to operate the hotel and Mr. Bemis was not employed that it would be some reflection upon you if he would agree to that arrangement?-A. No; but we started in together, and the three of us put our money in before Mr. Moore came along.
- Q. Well, your going in would not make it necessary to sacrifice any money that was put in by Mr. Bemis, would it?-A. Yes; it would, in my estimation.
- Q. I do not seem to be able to find the letter that I wanted to inquire about, but you remained in that hotel all the time, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. The trustee that is referred to in this correspondence was Mr. Richardson, was it?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You served during the time that Mr. Richardson was trustee in bankruptcy, I believe?-A. I do not catch the
- Q. You served in a managerial capacity during the time Mr. Richardson was in charge of the hotel as trustee in bankruptcy?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. I believe Mr. Moore was in charge for a while, and there was a trustee operating under that arrangement, was there not?-A. No. sir.
- Q. The arrangement which Mr. Moore wanted to effect was to set aside $200,000 to pay the interest on the firstmortgage bonds, was it not?-A. I believe that was our arrangement, that we would set aside the first $200,000 to pay the interest and taxes.
- Q. What was the arrangement with reference to the rest of the income?-A. As to the rest of the income, after we had taken $200,000 and set it aside, we were then willing to divide up, not charging anything for salaries unless we earned $200,000. After the first $200,000 we were then to divide it 50-50.

Q. You were not to charge any salary but were to take 50 percent of all the hotel earned?-A. Above $200,000.

- Q. And Mr. Bemis was insisting that there ought to come out of the additional earnings of the hotel the cost of maintenance and repairs, and so forth, was he not?-A. I do not recall.
- Q. Was not the difference between you and Mr. Moore rather a difference between what you and your brother and Mr. Bemis as managers were requiring to be taken from the assets of the hotel and the amount which Mr. Moore was insisting should remain unexpended in that direction and go to the bondholders?-A. No; we were further apart than that always.
- Q. What were you apart about? What was the matter with the arrangement?-A. On the question of salaries, management, and duration of the term.
- Q. What was the dispute with reference to the salary that you and your brother and Mr. Bemis were insisting upon and what Mr. Moore was willing to grant?-A. We made a proposition that we would not accept any salary unless we earned a certain amount of money.
- Q. What did he insist upon?—A. He insisted upon a different company where they would get 50 percent of stock and allocate to us 50 percent.
- Q. He wanted to organize an operating company?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was to be done about the bond interest necessary to take care of the bonds?-A. Well, if they earned it they were to pay it. We were willing to do the other way. We were willing to pay the interest before we took any salary. if it was earned.
- Q. You would have had to pay the interest on the bonds in order to keep going, would you not?-A. If we kept going:
- Q. It was understood by you and Bemis and Moore and everybody that the interest on the bonds would have to be paid out of the earnings of the hotel?-A. Yes, sir.

RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I hand you a document that came in your files and ask you to state what it is.—A. This is a statement showing our operating profits from Whitehall before interest, depreciation, and taxes received in 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will hand the paper to the managers before I offer it.

FURTHER REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. This letter of September 14, 1929, written by you to Mr. Walter Richardson is one of the letters in this file, is it not?— A. (After examining letter.) It is.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We would like to offer this letter in evidence.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Has it not been read in evidence once?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. No, sir. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good; but let me see if it has not been read in evidence.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I should like permission to ask the witness a question while counsel for the respondent is examining the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Proceed.

Q. I notice for the season 1928-29 the estimate of net income from operations was $316,000. That represents considerably the highest receipts during the period covered by the inventory, does it not?-A. May I see the statement, please

Q. Yes.

(The statement was handed to the witness.)

A. That statement was made out the 23d of May 1929 and it was after our operation of that year. Our estimated income was practically about what the statement shows.

Q. That was the high or peak of the Florida boom and Florida patronage, was it not?-A. That was a very good year.

Q. It "busted" right at the end of that year, did it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you started back there in 1928 you did not have the same condition?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the peak?—A. We have not had as good a year since that time.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I desire to read this letter in evidence, it being manager's exhibit A-24:

Mr. WALTER RICHARDSON.

Mr. Walter Richardson,

Murray Building, Palm Beach, Fla.

Dear Walter: As I wired you yesterday, I think it preferable to wait until Mr. Bemis returns before taking any action. However, I wish to call your attention to one thing, and that is that Mr. Bemis and I own $34,000 worth of the second mortgage bonds.

Would it not be possible to bring a bankruptcy proceedings through the second-mortgage bonds? If so, we could give some other person $1,000 worth of these bonds and the three of us file a petition. This is just for you to think over until you arrive in New York, for you say you will be here when Mr. Bemis arrives. With kind regards. With kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. You signed that letter, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What you were seeking to do, as I understand, was to get out from under the operation of the court—either the bankrupt court or any other court-and allow you and Mr. Bemis to manage the hotel under the trustee named in the bond-issue mortgage or deed of trust, and that was your proposition as outlined in these several letters, was it not?-

Q. What was it?-A. My proposition was to try to protect the people who invested their money on our reputation.

Q. I understand that, sir. Your idea was that the way to do that was to permit you and Mr. Bemis and your brother Ed to continue to manage the hotel under the guaranty that you set up without any court proceedings; was it not?-A. No. We had spent 5 years building up the clientele, and we thought we could make more money than any other

Mr. Manager HOBBS. And I agree with you. I am not saying that you could not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I submit several inquiries. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the questions propounded by the Senator from Texas.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

Did you recommend Mr. Rankin to Mr. Holland as attorney to foreclose the mortgage?

A. Yes.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

If you did recommend him, had you had any prior conference or agreement with Mr. Rankin to do so?

A. No, sir.

The legislative clerk read the next question propounded by Mr. CONNALLY, as follows:

If you recommended him, why did you do so?

A. I recommended him because he was the attorney of my chief, Mr. Bemis.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Did you not also have in mind that he was recommended to you by Mr. Walter S. Richardson, who asked you to do so?-A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Sweeny, you were seeking to operate the hotel because you knew that you could produce more business through it, and more net money to the operation, than anyone else; and you were seeking to do that for the benefit of the first bondholders and the others, whose money had been invested largely upon faith in you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a means to that end, was it or not your idea that the operation should not be under a court proceeding, but should be independent of that, by agreement?-A. Well, I cannot answer that question. It was largely through Mr. Bemis that this was handled, and I did not do it.

Q. You knew that court proceedings would be costly, did you not?-A. I knew it; yes, sir.

Q. And was it not your idea, when you stated in these letters that you would operate under the trustee, and made this proposition to Mr. Moore, that you would do it without any connection with a court proceeding or court supervision?-A. Do you want me to answer that question?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. Mr. Bemis thought it would be less costly operating under a court than under the Moores.

Q. But you stated in these letters that you wanted to operate without a court proceeding and under the trustees named in the bonds, did you not?—A. If we could. Mr. Manager HOBBS. Yes, sir. That is all, sir.

FURTHER RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. What was Moore to do, according to his proposition, for which he was to get 50 percent of the capital stock as reorganized?-A. Give us advice.

Q. That is all; do nothing at all in Florida?-A. No. sir. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who is the next witness? Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will call Mr. Brodek if I may. please, Mr. President.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF CHARLES A. BRODEK

Charles A. Brodek, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Please state your name to the Court.-A. Charles A. Brodek.

Q. What is your profession, please?—A. I am a practicing attorney in New York.

Q. Are you a member of a law firm there? If so, state the name and address of the law firm .-- A. I am the senior partner in the firm of Brodek & Eisner, 72 Wall Street, New York City.

Q. You are the Mr. Brodek who has been mentioned in the letters that were produced here, I take it, in regard to the Brazilian Court litigation in Florida?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You brought these letters here under a subpena from the Government, did you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also testified, did you not, in the investigation by the House committee?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Brodek, for the purpose of saving time, please state in your own way the character of the litigation, the amounts involved in it, and the change, if any, that took place during the progress of the litigation, if it is a fact that it did so, changing the services to be performed .- A. In the summer of 1927, as secretary and attorney for the Mulford Realty Corporation, I purchased an issue of bonds on the Brazilian Court Hotel at Palm Beach. The total issue was $270,000, and the price I paid was 50 cents on the dollar, plus an arbitrary figure of, I think, fourteen or fifteen thousand dollars, which I assume was to pay counsel for the committee. Our purchase was made from a committee, headed by Mr. Roosevelt, which had been organized to accept the deposit of these bonds. The committee delivered to us practically the entire issue, and we paid them $149,500. We then retained the law firm of Ritter & Rankin to prosecute a foreclosure of the mortgage in connection with which the bonds were given.

A retainer agreement was made with that firm, acting by Mr. Ritter, in the early part of September 1927, and the agreed fee was $4,000. The original agreement was limited to a foreclosure of those bonds.

A foreclosure was instituted by Mr. Ritter about the middle of September 1927, and I then was informed that the foreclosure had been preceded by another foreclosure on behalf of a man named D'Esterre, who claimed that he held a $70,000 mcrtgage which was prior in effect to the $270,000, because his action alleged the deed to the property and the trust deed under which these bonds were issued had been delivered in escrow, and that the deed and the $270,000 mortgage had been released from this escrow through fraud, and with the knowledge of the original trustee under our mortgage, Miller & Co. He therefore alleged in this separate action that our mortgage was subordinated to his $70,000. That was an entirely new development.

Furthermore, in our foreclosure D'Esterre intervened and filed an answer, in which he set forth, in substance, the same claim of priority to his $70,000 mortgage as against our $270,000 mortgage that he had based his independent action on.

In the D'Esterre action Ritter & Rankin appeared and made motions under the practice there to strike out the complaint, or to set it aside or to dismiss it as by demurrer, and after rather lengthy proceedings, and elaborate ones, the D'Esterre action failed on demurrer.

But D'Esterre then continued in our foreclosure action, and Mr. Ritter made various motions to strike out that cause of action; the motions were granted and D'Esterre amended—granted, amended, and so forth—and ultimately the court, perhaps being tired, permitted the answer to stand, and then Mr. Ritter had to go through a trial on the facts, to wit, whether in fact the mortgage we bought had been released from escrow by fraud to the knowledge of the old trustee.

On a trial of that issue the court found that our mortgage had been released in 1925, long before we had anything to do with it, had been released in violation of the escrow, and that the original trustee, Miller, or Miller & Co., had had knowledge of that release. But the court held, on a sort of supplemental pleading which Mr. Ritter interposed in our behalf, that notwithstanding those facts our mortgage stood up as a first lien because D'Esterre was estopped from asserting his lien as against ours.

Q. That explains that, I think, fully, down to the time before the appeal was taken, and before the judge went on the bench.

I will ask you whether or not all of the proceedings in that case, court appearances and everything else, were or were not attended to by Judge Ritter before he went on the bench?—A. So far as I know, the case was exclusively in his charge, and we looked upon him as our attorney.

- Q. Your client was whom?—A. The Mulford Realty Co., the purchaser of the bonds.
- Q. And the president of that is who?—A. Vincent S. Mulford.
- Q. Subsequently was there an additional fee agreed upon and paid in addition to your original fee? After this new suit developed and the case went through, was there an agreement for a further fee?—A. Yes, sir; an agreement, in a sense, that a further fee was asked for and allowed by us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send forward a question at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

How much was your mortgage, and what was the fee charged by and paid to Ritter & Rankin?

A. Our mortgage was $270,000, and the court foreclosure fee was $4.000.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. And was there an increase made in that afterward and agreed upon?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you recall the circumstances of Judge Ritter being paid $2,000 in addition by Mr. Mulford?—A. Yes, sir. The payment was made by me.
- Q. And how much was that?—A. Two thousand dollars in March 1929.
- Q. Was an additional allowance made thereafter by Judge Chillingworth, bringing that fee to $8,000—that is, $4,000 for Judge Ritter and $4,000 for Mr. Rankin?—A. Yes. I think in one of the subsequent proceedings in that foreclosure case there was an allowance for attorneys' fees of $8,000.
- Q. That was for the disposition of the case in the lower court, was it not?—A. I believe so; yes, sir.
- Q. Was an appeal taken in that case?—A. There was an appeal taken by D'Esterre.
- Q. And who handled that appeal on your behalf?—A. Mr. Rankin.
- Q. Did Judge Ritter have anything whatsoever to do with that case after he went upon the bench?—A. Not at all.
 - Q. That you know?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We object. We object to that as calling for an unwarranted conclusion and opinion of the witness, and as being highly leading and suggestive.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. To your knowledge?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think that is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may answer so far as he personally knows.

A. I know of no further services rendered in that case by Judge Ritter after his elevation to the bench.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will get you to state whether or not a fee was paid to Mr. Rankin for attending to the case throughout the appeal.—A. There was; yes, sir.

Q. And when the case was finally adjusted, how much of a fee was paid him for the appeal?—A. $2,500.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness, gentlemen.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, you are the gentleman to whom the letter I now hand you, which has been marked "Managers' Exhibit H-1", was addressed by Judge Ritter?—A. Yes, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE-RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire if it is convenient for counsel to suspend now? Only 2 minutes remain until 1:30 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It is perfectly convenient.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, suspend its session under the order, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business, in order that a message may be received from the House of Representatives.

Thereupon, the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, suspended its session to meet, under the order, as modified, prescribing the hours of the daily sessions, at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., and the Senate, in legislative session, received a message from the House of Representatives and transacted other legislative business, which appears elsewhere in the Record of today's legislative proceedings.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

At 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halstead L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, reassembled.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Revnolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	Lewis	Robinson
Austin	Couzens	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Davis	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Barbour	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead

Byrd	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Byrnes	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Capper	Hayden	Overton	Wheeler
Caraway	Johnson	Pittman	White
Carey	Keyes	Pope
Clark	King	Radcliffe

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of certain Senators and the reasons therefor as given by me upon a pre-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Counsel may proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We will recall Mr. Brodek. CROSS-EXAMINATION OF CHARLES A. BRODEK (CONTINUED)

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Were you a witness before the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee in the investigation of this matter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you testify as follows in response to the following question by Mr. TARVER?-

Do you know of any reason why this payment of $2,000 was made to Judge Ritter individually instead of to the firm of Ritter & Rankin, and why Mr. Rankin was not issued a similar check for the amount of $2,000 to take care of his interest in the fee which had been earned by the firm?

Mr. Brodek. So far as my knowledge goes, all of the proceedings in those two cases which I have briefly outlined were taken care of by Mr. Ritter. It was a case in which he was individually and solely in charge of the litigation, and I believe that in his firm, and it so happens in my firm also, certain cases are allocated to a partner who is entitled to the entire fee in the case.

Did you so testify?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it true that Mr. Ritter had taken charge individually and solely of the litigation?-A. So far as I know, that was a fact; yes, sir.

Q. I show you what purports to be a copy of a letter dated March 13, 1929, addressed to Hon. Halsted L. Ritter, and ask if you wrote that letter and sent it to Judge Ritter?-A. I did.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I offer the letter in evidence and ask that it be marked as an exhibit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, the letter will be admitted and appropriately marked.

(The letter was marked "Managers' Exhibit A-25.")

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. It was you who sent Judge Ritter the $2,000 referred to in the correspondence here in evidence, was it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was a check of your firm, was it not?-A. Yes, sir. Q. What was the name of your firm?-A. Brodek, Raphael & Eisner.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I desire to read the exhibit which has just been marked "Managers' Exhibit A-25."

Mr. Manager PERKINS proceeded to read the letter. During the reading of the letter-

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Pardon me for interrupting. I do not think any of that letter should be read that throws no light on the subject, but only that part which refers to this matter.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. You mean the middle paragraph?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not think any of it ought to be read except the part relating to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no means of passing on the matter because he has not seen the letter.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I thought the managers might decide which part of the letter is proper.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I shall try to skip the part that counsel does not like.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It is not because I do not like it, but because it is not material.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Well, the part that is not ma-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why cannot the whole letter be read?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If anyone wants it read it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You may proceed.

(Mr. Manager Perkins resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which, in full, is as follows:)

EXHIBIT A-25

MARCH 13, 1929.

Hon. HALSTED L. RITTER

United States District Judge, Miami, Fla.

DEAR JUDGE RITTER: First let me convey my heartlest congratulations on your elevation to the Federal bench. I had not noticed any reference to the appointment in the New York papers nor had I heard of it through any other source, so I trust you will accept

I heard of it through any other source, so I trust you will accept my belated good wishes.

As you know, there are four vacancies on the Federal bench here. The appointments by President Coolidge were all pretty good, but are apparently unacceptable to President Hoover. I hope that New York will be as fortunate in the appointments by President Hoover as Florida was in your appointment.

I believe that Mr. Mulford will be back in a few days. While he has a gay habit of turning things over to me, at heart he feels better satisfied if I confer with him, and I hope it will be agreeable to you to let this matter rest for a few days until I can see him.

I know that you did an immense amount of extra work and that

I know that you did an immense amount of extra work and that it was all well done and with most satisfactory results, so that you can be assured that there will be no difficulty about compensation insofar as I am concerned.

With best wishes for a distinguished career on the bench, I remain, Sincerely yours,

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You sent that letter to Judge Ritter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Brodek, was that letter written in response to the one in which the judge asked for an extra fee of $2,000?-A. I believe it was; yes, sir.

Q. Did you later have some correspondence with Judge Ritter? I show you what purports to be a copy of a telegram taken from your files, dated April 10, 1929, and ask you if you sent Judge Ritter that telegram?—A. No, sir; that is a misprint for "Rankin." Albert L. Rankin, that should have been. That telegram was sent to Mr. Rankin. That is a misprint. I find that in several of my letters at that time, by reason of the rather similar names, I called Mr. Rankin "Albert L. Ritter."

Q. The telegram was sent as shown on the copy; was it not?-A. Yes, sir; to the Comeau Building, which is Mr. Rankin's office in West Palm Beach; and this telegram was received by Mr. Rankin.

Q. Mr. Brodek, what I wanted to get an answer to was the telegram which was sent addressed to "Albert L. Ritter, Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla."?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And signed "Charles A. Brodek"?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, I offer this in evidence.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not think it is admissible with that explanation; but let it go in.

(The document was market "Exhibit A-26.")

The WITNESS. That is an obvious misprint by my secretary.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, the witness is volunteering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness has a right and should be given the privilege of explaining if there was an error.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, I show you a copy of a letter on the letterhead of Brodek & Eisner, dated April 10, 1929, addressed to Mr. Albert L. Ritter, Comeau Building, West Palm Beach, Fla., in re Brazilian Court, beginning "Dear Mr. Ritter", and ask you if you the sent the original of that letter?-A. I sent that letter.

Q. Has that the same explanation?—A. Exactly the same. At the time of the retirement of Judge Ritter from the case in March 1929 I evidently, in dictating, inadvertently dictated the old name, "Ritter", with whom I was accustomed to correspond in this case, and it slipped through in that way. Those are simply inadvertences. Those letters and telegrams were intended for and were received by Mr.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, in view of the explanation, I will not offer this letter.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. Mr. Brodek, you are secretary and attorney for the Mulford Realty Co.?-A. Yes, sir.
 - Q. And also a director of that company?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That company was a holder of quite a good deal of property in Florida, was it not?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Did you not testify in the proceedings before the subcommittee as follows:

Mr. Brodek. I happen to be a director of the Mulford Realty Corporation. I should know more about its investments than perhaps I do, but my recollection is, Mr. Chairman, that in 1927, which is the time you are referring to, the Mulford Realty Corporation owned some real estate in Palm Beach, which included or a citrus grove. It also had a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia. It also owned the largest stock interests in the E. Day Co., an Indian River citrus grove, but outside of those items its securities were almost entirely New York Stock Exchange securities.

Is that correct?-A. That was my testimony from recollection; and I think further on in my testimony I referred to it as guesswork. Since that time I have refreshed my recollection, and I find that in 1929 and 1928 the Mulford Realty Corporation had very insignificant holdings in

- Q. Have they not owned the Brazilian Court Hotel?-Yes, sir.
- Q. That is the hotel on which the $270,000 mortgage was?-A. Yes, sir. I thought you were referring to other holdings than that hotel; and in 1929 they did not own the hotel
- Q. Well, did the Mulford Realty Corporation have a $270,-000 mortgage on the hotel which was in contest?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And it also owned an interest in the Palm Beach Bus Service Co.?-A. No, sir; no, sir.
- Q. It had no interest whatever in that company?—A. It had a loan to a Mrs. Paschal for ten or eleven thousand dollars, and as collateral it had some stock in the bus company and in a ferry company, both of them very insignificant companies, which have since, I think, passed out of existence.
- Q. Did it own a citrus grove, or have an interest in a citrus grove?—A. They had about a 10-percent interest in one citrus grove, the E. Day Co., and owned no other citrus grove or interest in any citrus grove.
- Q. What was the Olympia Improvement Corporation?-A. It had stock in the Olympia Improvement Co., or association, of a face value, I think, of fifty or sixty thousand dollars, which was practically worthless, and shortly thereafter was written off as worthless.
- Q. When was it written off as worthless?-A. I do not know the exact time, but I should say a year or two after 1929
- Q. Mr. Brodek, I show you exhibit 44, being minutes of a special meeting of the stockholders and directors of the Palm Beach Bus Service Co. held on the 17th of February 1930, and ask you to examine it and see if that does not refresh your memory as to the holding of the Mulford Realty Co. in that corporation.

(The document was exhibited to Mr. Walsh, of counsel.) The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may examine the paper and answer.

(The witness examined the document.)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if it is not improper, I venture an inquiry as to the materiality of this testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to answer the question. He has not seen the paper, and no objection has been made to the materiality of it.

Mr. KING. I understand; but it is an inquiry into the Mulford Holding Co. and whether or not it had any large interests in Florida.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. One of the charges in the impeachment accusation is that the Mulford Holding Co., which gave the $2,000 check to Judge Ritter at that time, had large interests in Florida which were in the same jurisdiction as

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; the witness may answer the question.

The WITNESS. May I have the question read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read the question, as follows:

Q. Mr. Brodek, I show you exhibit 44, being minutes of a special meeting of the stockholders and directors of the Palm Beach Bus Service Co. held on the 17th of February 1930, and ask you to examine it and see if that does not refresh your memory as to the holding of the Mulford Realty Co. in that corporation.

A. It does not, because I have in my possession, at least outside, the certificate of stock in the name of Mrs. Paschal, endorsed in blank and attached as collateral to a note for ten or eleven thousand dollars. This stock never appeared on the balance sheet of the Mulford Realty Corporation.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, at this point I am going to object to all of this as going into a collateral matter. It has nothing whatever to do with the body of the accusation here.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, it is not my intention to pursue the matter further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair respectfully suggests to the House managers that mere collateral matters should not be permitted to take up the time of the Senate.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, I show you what purports to be a copy of a letter written by you to Mr. Rankin, and which has been marked "Managers' Exhibit A-22." Will you please see if you wrote such a letter to Mr. Rankin?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has that letter been exhibited to counsel?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. It has been exhibited to counsel, and has been marked in evidence as an exhibit.

A. That is a copy of a letter I sent on the date mentioned to Mr. Rankin; yes, sir.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. I call your attention to the concluding paragraphs of the letter, which are as follows:
- I may consider it advisable for you to come to New York to discuss this matter after Mr. Mulford returns. I do not think it necessary for you to come here in his absence.

Before I see Judge Ritter I will familiarize myself with the authorities cited in your letter, so as to be posted as to the strength of D'Esterre's legal position.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as in no way binding upon Judge Ritter.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I expect to follow that by another question.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). If you are going to follow it by a question which will make it admissible, of course, I shall wait until you do.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I think counsel is under a misapprehension. This is a letter which is already in evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the manager on the part of the House state that he expects to connect the letter with Judge Ritter?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; you may proceed. By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, this letter says that before you saw Judge Ritter you would familiarize yourself with the authorities cited in Mr. Rankin's letter, "so as to be posted as to the strength of D'Esterre's legal position." Did you later see Judge Ritter in New York? When I say "later", I mean after August 28, 1931.-A. I did.

Q. On how many occasions did you see him there?-A. ! After the date of that letter?

Q. After August 28, 1931.—A. Once; when he was sitting in the Federal court in the southern district in the place of Judge Mack. That was in the month of September 1931.

Q. Did you not see him at your office? Did he not call at your office once?-A. He called at my office once, but that may have been long before this letter.

Q. After this letter did you not meet with Judge Ritter and your client, Mr. Mulford, together in New York?-A. Yes; I invited Judge Ritter and Mr. Mulford to lunch at the Bankers' Club, and we had a brief little lunch there.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Take the witness.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I see the letter, please? I have been trying to carry it in my mind, but I should like to see it.

(A letter was handed to Mr. Walsh.)

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I have one more question to ask. By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, did you or did you not know that Judge Chillingworth, sitting in the circuit court of the fifteenth judicial circuit of the State of Florida, made an order, dated June 8, 1929, allowing to Ritter & Rankin, attorneys for the complainants "in the above styled case", the case being Trust Co. of Georgia v. Brazilian Court, for the payment of the sum of $2,500 to be credited upon the sum heretofore decreed and allowed as attorneys' fees?-A. I do not remember receiving a copy of that order. I received some of the papers in that suit, but comparatively few.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Take the witness.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Brodek, did the letter which was just shown you refer to the matter of settling that case? Can you carry it in your mind, or do you?-A. Yes; I remember that letter quite distinctly, Mr. Walsh.

Q. What called it forth? What was the meeting to be about?-A. In the latter part of August 1929-no; 1931-I received a letter from Mr. Rankin in which he said, in substance, that D'Esterre's attorneys on the appeal had cited four cases on the question of estoppel.

Q. Then it was about a proposed compromise, was it?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, we think the witness ought to be allowed to answer.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good. I will let him go ahead. What I wanted to find out was whether it was about a compromise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands. the question submitted to the witness was what the conference was about. In the view of the present occupant of the chair, it is not necessary, in order to answer that, to give the history of the controversy. It seems to the Chair that the witness could say what the subject matter of the conference was. Then, if counsel wish to develop it further, they may do so.

A. The answer to that question is that there was no conference.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. That is what I am asking; was it to talk about a proposed settlement?-A. It was intended to be, but by reason of the fact that I examined those cases, which had terrified Mr. Rankin, I felt there could be no settlement; we were just as sure of our victory after reading those cases as we were before, and I did not discuss the propriety or advisability of settlement with Judge Ritter at that time.

Q. So that there was no meeting, such as is suggested there, at all?-A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I object to the leading character of the question. The witness is highly intelligent, and there is no necessity to lead him.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Was there any such meeting?-A. No, sir; there was a lunch, that is all.

Q. Was there a conference about a settlement?—A. No. sir. I think I may have said to Judge Ritter something to any reason for being scared. We are just as strong as we were before." The only thing was to have the appeal disposed of quickly, I think I told him, because it had been hanging fire over 4 years.

Q. Very well. It was not discussed, was it?—A. No.

Q. Did Judge Ritter give you any counsel or advice about it at all?-A. After he was on the bench?

Q. Yes .- A. Never.

RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Brodek, it is true that you met with Judge Ritter, and then you later called in the client, Mr. Mulford. Is not that true?-A. No. I had Judge Ritter and Mr. Mulford at lunch at the Bankers Club on two occasions-in September 1929 and September 1931-and one of those luncheons-I am frank to say I do not remember which one-was preceded by a momentary meeting in my office. I think it was the 1929 one, because he was sitting in Brooklyn, and he blew in one day to say "Hello", and I said, "You will have to have lunch with Mulford and me some day", and that took place in my office, and then a few weeks thereafter we actually did have lunch, in 1929, and again we had a lunch in 1931. Those are the facts.

Q. When you say "we", you mean Judge Ritter, Mr. Mulford, and yourself?—A. Correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the witness be excused from further attendance?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, so far as the managers on the part of the House are concerned, the witness may be excused.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). He may be excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The witness is excused.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF VINCENT S. MULFORD

Vincent S. Mulford, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You are the Mr. Mulford who has been mentioned here in the Brazilian Court case?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. The owner of the bonds?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am going to bring you right to the time when you saw Judge Ritter and had a discussion, or had a talk, about the payment of some money. Were you in Miami shortly after the time he went upon the bench?-A. No. sir.

Q. Were you there prior to the time when he went upon the bench?-A. I never saw him in Miami.

Q. In Palm Beach?—A. West Palm Beach.

Q. At what date did you see him in West Palm Beach?-A. The latter part of March, I think. I have the date here.

Q. Give us the date, please.—A. It is on the check I drew. It was in March 1929. I have forgotten the date. The check you have.

Q. At that time did you make him a payment on some account?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the payment you made him?-A. It was a complete settlement of the original agreement to pay him $4,000 for acting as attorney in the foreclosure of certain bonds of the Mulford Realty Corporation.

Q. Had all of that work been performed prior to the day you saw him?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how much was the check?-A. Nineteen-hundredand-some-odd dollars.

Q. How was it divided? Was it partly for fee and partly for expenses?-A. There was an account rendered to me showing that amount due for the original $4,000 agreed upon, plus disbursements.

Q. What arrangement did you make with him about that, if any?-A. I just got a complete-

Q. Did you pay it?—A. Yes; he gave me a statement of the account and I gave him-drew a check on the Park Bank.

Q. Did you have a talk with him about a further additional fee in the Brazilian Court matter?-A. Yes, sir,

Q. As a result of that, did you agree to pay him any additional fee?—A. No, sir. He outlined the unusual work that had been entailed in the additional court action which was the effect that "Rankin seems to be scared, but I do not see | never anticipated when the original agreement was made, litigation, to a further payment.

Q. Did he so state to you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say about it?—A. I told him that I was not competent to judge legal services, that any compensation he was properly entitled to that would be agreed to by my New York counsel I would acquiesce in, and suggested that he outline his work and write direct to Charles A. Brodek and state his case.

Q. Was $2,000 additional paid him?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it paid him for any service of any character performed after he went upon the bench?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did it all refer to the Brazilian Court caseservices which were rendered in that by the firm of Ritter & Rankin prior to his assumption of the bench?—A. Yes, sir. I might add, however, that the firm was Ritter & Rankin, but I only recognized Judge Ritter as acting for us.

Q. He did the work in the case?—A. As far as I know;

I was never there.

Q. And it was carried in the name of Ritter & Rankin, was it not?—A. That was the firm name; yes, sir.

Q. And that was the account of Ritter & Rankin?-Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Mulford, when you spoke of an original agreement did you not refer to the fact that you had an agreement to pay Ritter & Rankin $4,000 for foreclosing the mortgage?-A. Yes.

Q. So that at the time you saw Judge Ritter at West Palm Beach the understanding was that the $4,000 would be the complete fee they would receive for the services rendered in that case; is that not true?—A. That was the original agreement; yes.

Q. And so at the time of the writing of the letter by Judge Ritter, in which he requested an additional $2,000, he had no legal claim against you, or the Mulford Realty Co., for the money, did he?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as calling for an improper conclusion of the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that calls for a conclusion. It is for the Court to decide.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Upon the sending to Judge Ritter of the check for $19,000, did that completely discharge your obligation to him for his services in that connection?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that for the same reason. Let the witness state what it was. He has stated it, and let the Court draw its conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness may say whether he did.

A. At the time I was under the impression that that was all the legal obligation, but I finally recognized an obligation that he was entitled to more money, because when the original agreement was made it was only our idea that it would be an ordinary foreclosure. We never anticipated 2 years of litigation, which is, from an ultimate point of view, very astonishing.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. At the time you authorized the payment of the additional $2,000 to Judge Ritter did you know that on March 11, 1929, he had written Mr. Brodek saying, "I will, however, be consulted about matters by him until it is all closed up"?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that. The letter is in evidence. It shows for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He may answer that, whether he knew at the time he paid the additional $2,000. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the inquiry is material it is proper for him to answer.

A. Why, I have no recollection of it distinctly, but I take it for granted that my attorney would call it to my attention. Is that the letter that Judge Ritter wrote?

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. It is, Mr. Mulford; yes .- A. Well, on that particular and felt that he was entitled, because of this long-drawn | I had been in the habit of doing once or twice a week for twenty-odd years, and I have no recollection of the letter.

Q. You have no recollection of having seen the letter before you made the payment or authorized the payment?-A. I have no recollection of that. I know I lunched with him, and he told me that he received the letter, and that it was his belief that the request for the additional $2,000 was not only fair but modest, and I told him we would send him a check. Now, I do recall-I am pretty positive I never saw the letter, because I asked him if he would answer the letter and send his own check, which I would reimburse him, or send the Mulford check the next day. I have no clear recollection of what happened to the letter except what I am trying to remember now.

Q. Do you recall meeting with Mr. Brodek and Judge Ritter in New York on two occasions after the judge went on the bench?-A. Well, I have forgotten one. It has been called to my attention that it was twice I met him for lunch.

Q. Do you know as a matter of fact that the firm of "Ritter & Rankin" appeared on the record in the case of Trust Co. of Georgia, complainant, against Brazilian Corporation until the conclusion of the proceedings?-A. I know nothing about it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

A. All the legal matters were handled by Brodek, and I never followed them.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. You may be excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Call the next witness.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I desire to submit a letter and a statement to these gentlemen that we have been having testimony about. I should like to introduce it at this point. It is Judge Chillingworth's letter to Mr. Rankin stating that the suit had been settled. I mean that his decision was ready.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do you desire to read it or just state the substance?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I desire to read it. It is a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have reason for it, which will develop.

(The letter was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 40.") Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I read the letter as follows:

> C. E. CHILLINGWORTH, CIRCUIT JUDGE, West Palm Beach, Fla., March 2, 1929.

A. L. RANKIN, ESQ.,
Messrs. Winters, Foskett & Wilcox,
Morey Dunn, Esq.,
J. W. Salisbury, Esq.,
West Palm Beach, Fla.
Gentlemen: With reference to the ease of Trust Co. of Georgia of all v. Brazilian Court Building Corporation et al., I enclose GENTLEMEN: With reference to the ease of Trust Co. of Georgia et al. v. Brazilian Court Building Corporation et al., I enclose herewith copy of finding that I desire entered in the final decree. You may leave the spaces blank for the insertion of the various amounts as I am not yet satisfied as to the exact amount which will be fixed in a few of the instances. The receivership should be continued until further order of the court, with the funds derived from the receivership to be applied as the court may hereafter direct. The usual provision may be inserted to permit the bondholders to apply bonds on their bid at the sale.

Will you prepare a final decree and serve notice on all course!

Will you prepare a final decree and serve notice on all counsel as to the time of its presentation, so that any other matters to be determined in connection herewith may be disposed of at that time?

Very truly yours,

(Signed) C. E. CHILLINGWORTH.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Attached to this letter is a proposed order by the court. I am introducing that for the reason that the date is significant—March 2—because the final order was not made until several days after that time. I should like to call Judge Donnell.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF E. B. DONNELL

E. B. Donnell, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. State your name, please.—A. E. B. Donnell.

Q. And your profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Have you held any judicial office in the State of Floroccasion I met Mr. Brodek at lunch at the Bankers' Club, as | ida?—A. I was circuit judge at one time.

- Q. Of what district?—A. Fifteenth judicial circuit of Florida.
- Q. Does that include West Palm Beach and Palm Beach?—A. It does.
- Q. Does it also include Miami?—A. It did not. It had just been taken away from that just before I was appointed.
- Q. To bring you to the question: You were one of the attorneys who signed the affidavit that was filed when the final decree was made in what we have been calling the Whitehall case?—A. I am.
- Q. I will get you to state whether or not before you signed that affidavit you made a careful investigation as to the work that had been done in the case, the property involved, and all other matters which were necessary for you to give your attention as an attorney at law, as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of that fee?—A. I had gone over the record and had talked to Judge Rankin and investigated the case some.
 - Q. Did you go through Judge Rankin's file?-A. Yes.
- Q. I am going to ask you this question first, please. Has it been the custom, or is it the custom down there and the practice in foreclosure cases to allow a fee for conserving the assets and bringing them into the jurisdiction or purview of the court in which the proceeding is pending?—A. I do not think that is generally the custom; no.
- Q. You do not think that is generally the custom?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. I will go now to the reasonableness of the fee, or unreasonableness of it. After you made that investigation, did you come to a conclusion as to what would be a reasonable fee?—A. I did.
 - Q. What was your conclusion?-A. $75,000.
 - Q. Are you still of that opinion?-A. I am.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

- Q. Judge, did you or not base your opinion to some extent upon the statement made to you by Judge A. L. Rankin as to the voluminousness of his labors?—A. Naturally, I suspect I did. I talked with him.
- Q. Of course, and, Judge, naturally you were influenced in your opinion, were you not, by the statement Judge Rankin made to you that this fee of $75,000, which he suggested the amount of to you, was agreed upon, and agreeable to all of the other attorneys in the case?—A. I fancy I was somewhat influenced that way, because I think he said that.
 - Q. He told you the amount of it, did he not?—A. Yes.
- Q. And he told you it had been agreed upon?—A. I am pretty sure he did.
- Q. Yes. Now, then, Judge, I want to ask you this question: Did he tell you that he had solicited one of the interveners in that case to intervene?—A. He did not.
- Q. Did he tell you that one of the interveners was his brother-in-law, and owned no bonds, though Rankin, in verifying the petition for intervention, swore that he did own bonds?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object. That is no basis for fixing the fee, if Your Honor please.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the object of the question is to test the facts and circumstances upon which this witness reached his conclusion. The Chair thinks the manager has a right to ask the witness that question.
- A. I do not think I ever heard of just what you stated to me before you stated it.
- Q. Did he tell you that Mr. Bert E. Holland, the client that you originally were supposed to represent, had been solicited to employ him by Walter S. Richardson?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did he tell you that Mr. Bert E. Holland had discharged him and asked him to stop the suit and to proceed no further?—A. No, sir; he did not.
- Q. Did he tell you that he had wired Mr. Holland that he would not ask for a receivership in his name?—A. How is that?

- Q. Did he tell you that he had wired Mr. Bert E. Holland that he would not ask for a receivership in his name; that is, in the name of Mr. Holland?—A. No, sir.
- Q. Did he tell you that the purpose of the intervention was to thwart the will of his alleged client, Mr. Bert E. Holland, and prevent him from dismissing the suit?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as mere argument.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the manager's question is argumentative in form.
- Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not intend it to be so.
- Q. And so that was the basis of the affidavit that you signed largely on information that was given to you by Mr. H. L. Rankin, and none of these other things that have been hypothesized were stated to you?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as being involved and argumentative.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is not argumentative. The witness may answer.
- A. The basis on which I made the affidavit was stated to the defense counsel. I will go over it if you wish.
- Q. I would a little prefer, if you do not mind—and I will be glad to let you answer in your own way—to ask you another question.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness has had the opportunity of answering questions as to what facts he bases his opinion upon. The manager has asked him as to whether certain alleged facts were communicated to him at the time, and the Chair thinks that the witness has supplied the information.
- Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg the President's pardon. I was simply saying that I did not care to have him rehash that.
- Q. Judge, there is one other question I should like to ask you. The affidavit which was presented to you was drawn by Judge A. L. Rankin, was it not?—A. It was drawn before it was brought to my office.
- Q. Then you simply inserted the amount after you had reached the conclusion that, in view of the facts you have stated and the investigation that you made, it was a fair fee?—A. I think I must have inserted it. I agreed to it, anyway. I do not know whether it is in my handwriting or not.
- Mr. Manager HOBBS. Thank you very much. You may stand aside.
- Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to submit a
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington submits a question which the Secretary will read.
- The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Bone, as follows:
- Upon what did you base your conclusion that the services rendered were actually worth $75,000? I am referring to the actual labor performed by the attorneys.
- A. Upon the amount involved, the results obtained, and the actual time put into it. That would be the main basis. There might have been other things in my mind at the same time.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further questions, the witness is excused.
- Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I desire to propound a question.
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas submits a question which will be read.
- The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McGill, as follows:
- In your judgment, in such a case would a fee of $90,000 have been excessive or unreasonable?
- A. In answering that question I would say that probably at the time I made the affidavit I might have thought it excessive. At the present time I doubt if I would, owing to the ramifications that have been gone through with this thing. [Laughter in the galleries.]
- The PRESIDING OFFICER. Occupants of the galleries will preserve order.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Donnell, I wish to ask you a question. In computing this fee, did you consult the fee schedule of the Palm Beach Bar Association?—A. Yes. We have a schedule that is followed sometimes, and I did look at it at that time.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Call Mr. Fleming.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF FRANCIS P. FLEMING

Francis P. Fleming, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. State your name, please.—A. F. P. Fleming.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. Jacksonville, Fla.

Q. What is your profession?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. How long have you practiced that profession?—A.

Something more than 40 years.

- Q. I should like to ask you as to whether or not there is a custom founded in law in your jurisdiction where an allowance is made to an attorney for what is called a "conservation fee", that is, for bringing the property into court, including real estate and cash or any other property?—A. That is general. It has happened several times in my own experience.
- Q. Did you go through the files in this present case, Mr. Fleming?—A. The case of the United States against Judge Ritter?
- Q. No, sir. I mean in the Whitehall case.—A. No, sir; I have never examined those files.
- Q. Where did you get the information as to what was done in the case? I am going to ask you about the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the fee.—A. I obtained that mostly from the public press and partly through the impeachment articles. I have been reading the impeachment articles.
- Q. I will have to put my next question in a hypothetical form. The mortgage which secured the bonds amounted to $2,500,000, and in the final decree there was an upset price of $1,500,000. There has been introduced in evidence, Mr. Fleming, a list showing the papers that were filed by counsel for the complainant, the papers that were filed by all others, the entire proceedings in the case. I wish you would look that over before I ask you the hypothetical question.

(The list was handed to the witness and examined by

A. I have looked over the sheets, Mr. Walsh.

Q. Has the bar association any rule as to the percentages of fees with reference to the amounts of property involved?—A. Well, there has been a sort of understanding for many years that 10 percent is the fee. Of course that is not true of large amounts, Mr. Walsh.

- Q. Having stated to you the value of the property and the amount of the mortgage on it and everything which was done in connection with it, that is, as expressed by the list which I handed you, and the result of the case, I will ask you to state whether or not you believe $75,000 was a reasonable fee?—A. It would seem to me that the work covered a considerable period of time, involved the actual management of the hotel property, the filing of the foreclosure, the sale and the consummation of the sale of the property, and I do not regard $75,000 as an unreasonable fee.
- Q. In passing upon a fee of that kind would the fact that the parties, all of the parties, to the proceedings agreed upon a fee be a moving element in the allowance by the court?—A. I should think that would be almost controlling. If the lawyers on both sides agree on a fee and they are lawyers of standing in the community and at the bar at which they practice, it would seem to me in the very nature of it that the judge signing the decree would fix the fee as agreed upon.

Q. Have you been acquainted with Judge Ritter since he has been on the bench down there?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. What is his reputation for integrity and being a fair and honorable jurist?—A. I think his reputation for integrity is excellent. I think he is believed to possess three qualities which, to my mind, go to make an excellent judge.

He is honest. He has common sense. He has courage. In a case of any importance there are almost certain to be lawyers on each side who will present the law accurately, carefully, and fully to the judge. If the judge is honest, if the judge has common sense, and if the judge is fearless, he will make a fine jurist.

Q. Is or is not that the sort of judge that Judge Ritter has been?—A. That is my opinion of Judge Ritter.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may cross-examine.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Do you consider A. L. Rankin a $90,000-a-year man?—
A. It is difficult for me to answer that question. I have met him only once or twice and I am not familiar with his practice nor the value and extent of his clientele.

Q. Is it not true that under the Miami fee bill, which I presume is the one you were referring to—is that right?—A. No; not exactly. There has been a general understanding in Florida that somewhere around 10 percent is a reasonable fee, but not in cases involving large amounts.

Q. Has not it been the history of the first $5,000 that the fee is somewhere around 5 percent?—A. Oh, certainly; when we get into the millions 10 percent is not the percentage.

- Q. I am asking you, to test your familiarity with the fee bill, if it does not provide 10 percent on the first $5,000, 5 percent on the next $10,000, 3 percent on the next $20,000, 2 percent on the next $40,000, and 1 percent on the balance?—A. I am entirely unfamiliar with the Miami fee bill. While I try some cases before the Miami bar and practice in the Miami division of the Federal court, I have never been a member of the Miami bar. I live nearly 400 miles from there.
- Q. Where do you live?—A. Jacksonville, Fla., in the northern end of the State.
- Q. The testimony you give is as to fees at Jacksonville?—A. I am somewhat familiar, generally speaking, with fees throughout the State of Florida. I practice in nearly all parts of the State of Florida, not so much, of course, as I have in my home city of Jacksonville.
- Q. Do you know what the fee bill is at West Palm Beach?—A. No, sir; I do not.
- Q. Do you know what the fee bill is at Palm Beach?—A.
- Q. You say you do not know the fee bill in vogue at Miami?—A. I do not.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I submit a question for the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington submits a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Schwellenbach, as follows:

Would the fact that other lawyers, who may approve the amount of a fee, are to share a part of the fee be taken into consideration in the weight to be given to their approval of the fee?

A. That it seems to me would be entitled to some consideration provided the judge knew it. If the judge was unaware of any such fact, it seems to me it would have no weight with him at all.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

- Q. But supposing he did know and knew the fee was to be split with at least two or three other lawyers in the case?—
 A. If it were proper to allow a fee to be split with two or three other lawyers in the case, that, in my opinion, would increase the size of the fee. I think two lawyers usually get more than one lawyer gets.
- Q. If $75,000 was a proper allowance for A. L. Rankin's services, you think the fact that he was going to give a large part of it to other lawyers in the case would increase his fee?—A. It might. These are very difficult questions to answer unless you have the complete record before you and know why it was going to be split.

Q. If his services were worth $75,000, that should have been the allowance, should it not?—A. Yes; it seems to me it should have been.

Q. Ought the fact that he was going to give away a part of that fee increase that amount?—A. If other lawyers are entitled to some of the fee allowed for payment to Rankin, certainly the fee should be increased if the court approves payment of part of that money to other lawyers.

Q. Let us go to the conservation fee. You say in your experience you have known conservation fees to be allowed?—

Q. Do you mean to say you have known them to be allowed in mortgage-foreclosure cases?—A. Yes; where the proceeding was taken by a creditor's bill and afterward converted into a foreclosure proceeding, I have known of such allowances.

Q. In every single case where that was allowed there was a recovery of concealed assets or assets which were being dissipated by waste, which were recovered by the efforts of the creditors' bill or the attorney for the petitioner?—A. No; I do not think so, because sometimes a conservation bill is filed and the assets or property or funds are brought into the possession of the court where I have heard of no effort to conceal or hide that property or assets.

Q. Can you cite a single case in any appellate court dealing with the Florida locus in quo in which such a fee was allowed in a foreclosure case?—A. Not in an appellate court; no.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I would like that the witness have reread to him my question, and particularly have called to his attention the latter part of my question, in view of his testimony that the controlling thing with reference to the fee was the fact that it was approved by all lawyers in the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question submitted by the junior Senator from Washington will be read again to the witness.

The legislative clerk again read the question propounded by Mr. Schwellenbach, as follows:

Would the fact that other lawyers, who may approve the amount of a fee, are to share a part of the fee be taken into consideration in the weight to be given to their approval of the fee?

A. Answering particularly the latter part of the question, I should say "yes."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question, which I desire propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question submitted by the senior Senator from Washington will be read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Bone, as follows:

Would the value of the work performed be your test of the size of the fee, or would the number of attorneys also influence your views as to the size of the fee?

A. It seems to me in fixing a fee there should be considered the amount of time involved, the value of the services of the lawyer or lawyers, the number of lawyers, and the results obtained for the fund or for the clients. All those things go, in my mind, to make up what should be the amount of the fee allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question submitted by the Senator from Tennessee.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

Do you give it as your opinion that a fee should be increased because all the lawyers in the case participate in it?

A. It seems to me that the more lawyers there are in a case, provided a fee is to be allowed to them, the larger the fee should be. I do not undertake to say that the lawyers in this case should have been allowed a fee out of the fund in court. I have not made a sufficient examination of the records to express an opinion on that,

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a question which I wish read to the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question submitted by the Senator from Texas.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Connally, as follows:

Have you ever served as receiver or attorney for receiver, master, or referee, or other position under appointment or approval by Judge Ritter?

A. I have not served in any of those capacities.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Fleming, I would like to resume my cross-examination and suggest to you, as an element, whether your opinion as to whether or not a conservation fee might be allowed with propriety in any given case is dependent upon whether or not there was any conservation of assets. Is not that true?—A. When a property or assets or funds are brought into court, that, to my mind, carries with it a conservation of the property. The mere fact that the court has taken possession of it through a receiver, to my mind, indicates that the fund or property will be conserved, and the services should be paid for.

Q. Conservation for whom?—A. For whomever the court may determine later on is entitled to it or the income from it.

Q. Then in a mortgage foreclosure case the beneficiaries of the mortgage, or, in other words, the bondholders, are the ones for whose benefit the property is alleged to be conserved, are they not?—A. Not entirely so at all, because in almost any property there are persons other than the bondholders who have an interest. The laborers, employees, and officers almost always have claims. There are tax claims to be asserted. There is the question of operating the property to be considered. The bondholders, of course, have a primary lien at the time the court takes possession. That lien is often supplanted by the issuance of receiver's certificates to serve some purpose which the court may determine is of more importance than the primary lien.

Q. So you think that the operators of the hotel, and the laborers around the grounds, and everybody of that sort, should be considered as the beneficiaries of the conservation?—A. They are always considered as the beneficiaries of the conservation.

Q. Do you think that the lawyers involved are?—A. Are what?

Q. Are beneficiaries of the conservation, or should be so considered?—A. Why, no; not at all.

Q. All right, sir. Then I am asking you in this particular case if it be a fact, as shown by the evidence in this case, that not one dime of any of the money that was taken in by Walter S. Richardson as receiver of the Whitehall property ever reached a single bondholder, would that make any difference to you?—A. That is not necessarily controlling. The court may determine what should be done with those moneys. I have been involved in receiverships where not any money ever went to the bondholders.

Q. Now I will ask you, please, sir, if the fact that the upset price fixed in this case was a million and a half dollars, to be paid either by the surrender of the bonds or cash, would make any difference in your calculation as to the amount of the fees to be awarded?—A. It does not matter to my mind whether it is to be paid by surrender of the bonds or to be paid in money. I see very little difference. As a matter of fact, it was paid in bonds. The bondholders did get the property.

Q. Certainly; but they had a mortgage on it to start with; did they not?—A. Quite true.

Q. They had a right, under their trust deed, to take possession of it; did they not?—A. I doubt that. They had a right to have a receiver appointed; but an old-style foreclosure is unknown at the Florida bar.

Q. Suppose, though, sir, that by agreement the property had been turned over to and was in the possession of the trustee under the first-mortgage bond issue?—A. That is not recognized in Florida. In the Florida courts that has not been recognized. When it has been done in a foreclosure proceeding, or a conservation bill has been brought, invariably the property has been taken away from the trustee and possessed by the court.

Q. So although the bonds were worth or might have been selling for 1 cent on the dollar, or 2 cents, or 3 cents, all that the bondholder had to do was to surrender his bonds at par, although they were selling at 1; it would make no difference in the amount of the fee to be allowed, in your opinion?—A. I am sorry; I cannot follow that. I understand that there was a foreclosure proceeding had and an upset price of a million and a half dollars was fixed. The property was sold for that price and the sale was confirmed.

Q. But the upset price was fixed in that decree at bonds surrendered or cash. Now, I am asking you if the fact that those bonds were greatly depressed in value, and were selling at 3 or 4 cents on the dollar, would make any difference in your calculation as to the amount of the fee to be allowed?—A. Well, if the bonds had no value at all, and simply a million and a half dollars of face value of worthless paper was to be turned in, of course, it would.

Q. Suppose they were selling at 3 or 4 cents on the dollar. Would that reduction of the amount of the upset price influence you?—A. The fact that the court fixed an upset price of a million and a half dollars in cash, or a million and a half dollars of bonds, would lead me to believe that the bonds were not selling at 3 or 4 cents on the dollar, or, if they were, that they had a far greater value. I know something about the Whitehall property; I have known it for some years; and certainly it is worth, I should think, around a million and a half dollars.

Q. But, I am asking, would the fact that that upset price was payable in cash or by the surrender of bonds have any influence in the amount of the fee, in your judgment?—A. It would.

Q. One other question, please, sir; and that is as regards the solicitation of a client by one attorney, and that the trustee in bankruptcy, to be permitted to institute a suit in his name, and the suggestion of Mr. A. L. Rankin as one of his attorneys. If that be the fact, would that influence your decision with regard to the allowance of a fee to A. L. Rankin?—A. Who solicited it?

Q. I am asking a hypothetical question. If the evidence shows that Walter S. Richardson, the trustee in bankruptcy, while such trustee in bankruptcy, schemed to find a plan and a client, and recommended the employment of A. L. Rankin, would that make any difference in your testimony as to what fee he was allowed?—A. Well, it is very difficult for me to follow you in your question. I do not see what what Richardson does has to do with the amount of the fee to be allowed Rankin.

Q. I am asking you, sir, if A. L. Rankin himself is shown by the evidence in this case, after his client, Bert E. Holland, as trustee, had discharged him and had telegraphed him not to file the suit, and had asked in open court that the suit be stopped or withdrawn—if, after that or before, in anticipation of it, A. L. Rankin himself intervened, swearing to the bills for intervention himself in behalf of a man who owned no bonds, but who Rankin swore did own bonds, for the purpose of thwarting the will of his client, Bert E. Holland, would that make any difference in your opinion as to whether or not he was entitled to a fee?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that question on the ground that it is a pure argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is argumentative in form. The manager must be familiar with the rule. He may state a hypothetical case to the witness and ask his opinion on it. The witness has answered. There is no occasion for argument between the witness and the manager. Will the manager state his hypothetical case?

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. I am simply asking, sir, if Mr. A. L. Rankin himself solicited an intervener to intervene, and if that intervener authorized Mr. A. L. Rankin to file an intervention in his behalf, which intervention was sworn to by Mr. Rankin for the purpose of holding in court a case which the client in chief had stated in open court he desired stopped or withdrawn, would that, in your opinion, make any difference as to the allowance of a fee to Mr. A. L. Rankin?—A. It might or it might not. After a property is brought into court the complainant alone has no right to go into court and insist upon dismissal. That property is in the hands of the court. It is up to the court to determine whether the property shall be released or not. If an intervener comes in, the intervener has something to say about it. It is not solely at the discretion of some individual as to when he will start a case and persuade a court to take possession of property and then go into court and say, "Now, Judge, turn it loose; I am through." That cannot be done.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. You may take the witness.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I have one question which I should like to submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana propounds a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Minton, as follows:

Would there, in your opinion, be anything objectionable to attorneys for a bill and cross-bill sharing a total fee where they were seeking the same result by different courses, and the main objective was reached by agreement and the fixing of one fee which they shared?

A. In my opinion, that is not objectionable.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington submits a question, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. Bone, as follows:

If you have not thoroughly familiarized yourself with the record and the extent of services rendered, upon what do you base your conclusions as to the fairness of the fee of $90,000?

A. This statement of what was done in regard to the file indicates to my mind that there was a great deal of work in the case. The initial work was done on October 11, 1929. The concluding entry is February 5, 1935. It would seem to me that covering that period of years, there being something more than nine sheets of documents filed, indicating that a great deal of work was done, and having in consideration the value of the property, and realizing that the bondholders did obtain the property by foreclosure, it seems to me that the fee was a proper fee.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I call the witness' attention to the fact that, as I read the charge, the $75,000 fee was allowed in December 1930, and the witness is referring to work done in 1935. They certainly could not look ahead 5 years and anticipate the work.

The WITNESS. Apparently the final decree in the case was dated December 24, 1930. The order for confirmation was dated April 7, 1931. It would seem to me that that would be about the conclusion of the work. That order of confirmation occurs about half way down on page 7. Nearly all of the work indicated by these sheets was done before that order of confirmation was obtained.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask you just one other question.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Put in the hypothesis that those services were required to be performed by the attorney for the plaintiff as they appear there, and before the matter was closed: Was it or was it not something that can reasonably be anticipated in all those cases?—A. Mr. Walsh, that may be true. Usually, when the decree of confirmation is obtained, you have to wind up your receiver's account, and that is usually the only thing to do in a foreclosure.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I am just giving you the testimony in the case; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] submitted two questions. By inadvertence only one of them was read. The clerk will read the second question submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Bone, as follows:

When the bankruptcy proceedings are concluded, and there remain assets in cash which are merely sufficient in amount to pay counsel fees of the size you approve, do you think a Federal court is justified in awarding these entire remaining assets to counsel?

A. It may or may not be. I have known foreclosures in which it was necessary for the bondholders who purchased at the foreclosure sale not only to turn in their bonds for cancelation but also to provide a very considerable amount of cash out of their pockets to pay the expenses of foreclosure, which include counsel fees. In large foreclosures that is usually the rule.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all; thank you. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Call the next witness.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF SIMON P. ROBINEAU

Simon P. Robineau, having been first duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Your name is S. P. Robineau?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your profession?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Where do you practice your profession?—A. Miami, Fla.

Q. How long have you been at the Florida bar?—A. Twenty-one or twenty-two years.

Q. Are you familiar with the property known as the Whitehall property?—A. I am.

Q. How long have you been familiar with that property?—
A. Ever since I have been in Florida.

Q. Are you familiar with the fees usually paid in foreclosure proceedings?—A. I am.

Q. I will ask you whether or not you have gone through the entire file in this case from beginning to end as produced by the clerk here.—A. I looked through the file. I have not scrutinized every paper in it, but I know what is there.

Q. I will not go all over this, if you know it, but do you know the upset price that was placed on that property?—A. A million and a half dollars.

Q. And the amount of the bonds secured by the first mort-gage?—A. Two and a half million.

Q. Taking into consideration all of the facts in connection with this case, the value of the property, the amount of work performed, and the upset price, all these elements, I will ask you to state whether or not, in your opinion, $75,000 was a reasonable fee in that case?—A. Considering the fact that it also involved some other attorneys' fees, I think it was.

Q. You looked into it, did you not, and saw that an answer and cross-bill were filed in the case by other parties?—A. I understand, for a substantial part of the litigation, it was a controverted case; yes.

Q. Have you looked at the papers enough to know just what the contest was between the parties?—A. Yes; it was a contest between the trustee claiming the right of possession and a bondholder claiming the right of foreclosure irrespective of the trustee.

Q. Are you familiar with other fees which have been paid in foreclosure proceedings in the State of Florida; I mean that have been allowed by the court in the State of Florida?—A. Familiar rather from hearsay than from definite personal knowledge, general statements about the bar that such and such a fee had been allowed in such and such a matter.

Q. So that you know in that way about the amount of fees that are usually paid in foreclosure cases in Florida?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you about the conservation fee. Is there such a thing known to your practice as a conservation fee as distinguished from other work being done in the case; and if so, state what the conservation fee is?—A. There is a thing that is known as a fee given to counsel for bringing property into the jurisdiction of the court, and set aside for distribution among a class of litigants, all who share in the particular fund, and if that is to alter the original aspect of the case, it is considered a special service, or additional service, for which fees are allowed.

Q. Suppose that in a case, in addition to the real property involved and the personal property located within the building, upon the real property, we would say that there was brought into the fund the sum of $203,000 as assets to be administered by the court; would you or would you not say that $15,000 was a reasonable conservation fee in such a case?—A. I did not quite catch the sum that had been brought in.

Q. Two hundred and three thousand dollars in cash.—
A. I would say approximately 5 percent would not be unreasonable. That is about that, I think.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Mr. Robineau, you understand, do you not, or is it A. Only frotrue, that the lien held by the bondholders on a piece of proceeding.

property attaches itself also to money received as a revenue from that property?—A. I think there is a provision in this particular trust deed that entitles the trustee in possession, or the trustee of the rents and profits, if and when he comes into possession, he has a lien on it; yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, what service—actual service—does a lawyer render who brings a suit to foreclose on a hotel property, if at the time of that suit there happens to be in the bank $250,000 upon which that hotel property is checking? What extra service does he render, what extra work does he do to bring in the money that he does not do to bring the property itself, the corpus of the property, the real estate, under the jurisdiction of the court?—A. It all depends on who has the right to the money. If the

Q. I am asking, What does the lawyer do in addition? What work does he do that entitles him to take money away from the bondholders, as conservation service? What does he conserve?—A. In this particular case there was a question of the right of possession, as I understand it; the man who had foreclosed under the third mortgage was in possession of this property and claimed the immediate right to usufructs and rents and profits of the property. If I interpret the file I have studied and the bill of complaint properly, this was an effort to take it away from that particular person and to place it so that the court could bestow it on the first bondholders and not leave it in the hands of the men who had foreclosed under the third mortgage.

Q. Did not the money follow the property in possession and in foreclosure?—A. You mean as a result of this case?

Q. As a matter of fact, in this case.—A. I think in this case, as a result of the litigation, it eventually did come into the possession of the first bondholders. Had the case not been brought, and brought through a receivership, it would have remained with the people who had the title and the right of possession and operation of the hotel.

Q. If a suit had not been brought, there would not have been anything done about it, would there?—A. Quite right; and if the suit had not been brought in a particular way it would not have ended with the man in possession retaining the money.

Q. Was that matter litigated in Judge Ritter's court in the sense of having any lawsuit or trial in the court?—A. I understand that there was a receiver appointed, who immediately took possession of the property and thereby made the funds available that were yielded through the operation into his possession for distribution among the first bondholders. I understand that occurred.

Q. As a matter of fact, the things that were done in that case were the filing of a bill, the filing of a final decree, preparation of the bill, filing it, and preparation and filing of the final decree. The rest of the papers you looked at were incidental, were they not?—A. As I recall it, there was an original bill filed, motion for receiver, intervener's bills, adopting the allegations of the main bill of complaint, various other actions taken by the defendants, then the receivership came on, and a lot of papers filed in connection with it. I would suppose that an attorney who was representing the complainants would pay attention to every piece of paper that was filed in that case and pursue it, and if it jeopardized in anywise his theory, or the theory of the case, or the rights of his clients, he would interpose objections, or even his tacit acquiescence would certainly have involved some legal service.

Q. In that particular case there was a receiver, was there not?—A. I think so.

Q. And the receiver had his own counsel, did he not?—A. Yes. I understand he had counsel appointed representing the two contending factions in the case.

Q. They were paid for, of course, out of the assets of the business?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you know Mr. Rankin?—A. I know him now. I never knew him until I was subpensed here in this matter.

Q. Do you know how much he received for his own part?—A. Only from what I have read in connection with this proceeding.

- Q. How much was that?—A. I understand something less than $50,000. Twenty-five thousand dollars went to counsel for defendant, I think. The $50,000 that remained, I think he divided it with various other people, like Mr. Metcalf and, I think, with the receiver and one or two other people. I do not know. I believe that somewhere in the neighborhood of thirty-some-odd-thousand dollars plus the $15,000 that had been awarded theretofore.
- Q. Do you think that $50,000 was a reasonable amount of money for the court to take away from the assets of the corporation and turn over to Judge Rankin for the services he rendered?—A. Let me say to you, in my judgment, the matter of attorney's fees in foreclosure proceedings is not a matter of law at all, nor is it a matter within the judgment of the court as such. The matter of attorney's fees are allowed entirely based upon a contract, and when a contract says it shall be a reasonable fee it means just what it says. The only people who need to determine the reasonableness of that fee, in my judgment, are the people parties to the contract; and when they all get together and say, "This is agreeable to us", I do not think the judge had anything to do about determining the reasonableness of it, because there is no contest on reasonableness.
- Q. I did not ask you about the judge's opinion. I am asking you whether or not you think $50,000 was a reasonable amount of money to take away from the bondholders and turn over to Judge Rankin for his services rendered in this case.—A. As I understand it, the committee of the bondholders representing every bondholder, the trustee, and everybody in the case agreed to it; but, irrespective of that, I think $50,000 would be a reasonable fee.
- Q. For Mr. Rankin in this case?—A. For the attorney for complainant, whether it be—
- Q. I asked you the question, for Mr. Rankin in this case?—A. Whether it be Mr. Rankin or not. Mr. Rankin means nothing to me. I am merely discussing it as the attorney for complainant.
- Q. You will not answer my question?—A. Yes. I think it is all right for Mr. Rankin if he is the attorney for the complainant.
- Q. Very well. You testified, I believe, that it is not an unusual custom in the Florida jurisdiction for separate fees to be allowed for conservation in foreclosure suits?—A. I do not know about the frequency. I say that those circumstances arise unusually, but they have arisen; and, when so arisen, such fees have been allowed, and there are precedents for it.
- Q. In what case that you know of has the fee been allowed and approved by any appellate court in Florida—allowed for conservation in a foreclosure suit?—A. I am mindful of the Supreme Court case in which the trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund of Florida were involved, in which it was said there was a fee allowable for having brought certain funds into the custody of the court. I think there is a ruling by Judge Call, of the Federal court of our district, in which he sustained that principle. I think there are other precedents with which I am not familiar. I have not briefed the point specially, except casually looked through one or two cases that have been cited since I have been here.
- Q. Have you fully examined the files in this case?—A. I said I looked through the file. I did not scrutinize everything there; no, sir.
- Q. Are you one of the attorneys connected with the Trust Co. of Florida?—A. No.
- Q. You were the attorney for Eaton & Sterns?—A. I was appointed by Eaton & Sterns to do a special job on tax matters; yes.
- Q. You received a fee in that case?—A. I did. I think it was $2,100.
 - Q. Not $11,000?-A. No.
 - Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all; thank you. Call Mr. Bert Winters.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF REST WINTERS

Bert Winters, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Your name, please?-A. Bert Winters.
- Q. And where do you reside?—A. West Palm Beach, Fla.
- Q. And your profession?—A. Attorney at law.
- Q. Were you one of the attorneys who made affidavit to the reasonableness of this fee in the Whitehall case which was filed at the time the final decree was taken or under consideration by Judge Ritter?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you familiar with this case? Where did you live, did you say?—A. West Palm Beach.
- Q. Are you familiar with the property known as the White-hall Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. How long have you known it?—A. Fifteen or sixteen years.
- Q. Are you acquainted with the mortgages that were on it at the time of this proceeding?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you acquainted with the price that was fixed as an upset price?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you familiar with the work that was done in that case by the attorneys?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Are you familiar with the contentions that appear in the pleadings—that is, the bill that was filed by the plaintiff, and the answer, and the cross-bill that was filed by certain others of the defendants, and the interventions that were had in that case?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Were you afterward the master in that case?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. I will now ask you, with the knowledge that you have of the elements which I have submitted to you, whether or not in your opinion $75,000 was a reasonable fee in that case.— A. It was.
- Q. Are you acquainted with the custom or practice or law in that jurisdiction for allowing fees to attorneys for conserving assets and bringing them into litigation?—A. I know there is such a procedure or such a practice occasionally. It is not the usual practice.
- Q. It is not universal. A case has been mentioned here called the Highland Glades drainage district case; and it is a case—I suppose I may detail enough of the evidence to draw the witness' attention to it—in which an order was made by Judge Ritter in Brooklyn in September of 1929. Are you familiar with that case?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. In what way did you become familiar with it, Mr. Winters?—A. We represented a client that owned $145,000 of bonds of the district, and we intervened in the proceedings that were instituted against the district by other bondholders.
- Q. Did you see the application that was being made to Judge Ritter for an order?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. It was for the settlement, was it not, of certain taxes against that property by the drainage district?—A. It was.
- Q. And whom did you represent in the case?—A. Spitzer Rorick Trust & Savings Bank, Toledo, Ohio.
- Q. What was their interest? Were they tax-bill holders?—A. They held $145,000 par value of the drainage district bonds.
- Q. Were you familiar with the order that was made in that case by Judge Ritter in Brooklyn?—A. I was.
 - Q. Was the order carried out?-A. It was not.
- Q. I do not desire to go into details, but somebody involved in the controversy objected to the settlement, did they not?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. That is, somebody on the tax-bill side of the case—what you would call the plaintiff's side?—A. No.
- Q. Bondholders?—A. No; the defendant objected to the settlement, and our client objected to the settlement.
- Q. And the settlement did not go through?—A. It did not go through.
- Q. And the defendant became insolvent, I understand, and none of this was collected. Is that correct?—A. I do not understand.
- Q. I say, did or did not the defendant—that is my information, and I wish to verify it if it is within your knowledge—afterward did the corporation become solvent so that nothing at all was collected?—A. The corporation that was proposing to buy the lands upon which the taxes were to be compromised and paid became insolvent and were not able to go through with the purchase of the land, is my understanding.

Q. Why was it necessary to go to Judge Ritter in Brooklyn for that purpose?-A. The Highland Glades case had extended over a considerable length of time. There were one, if not two, other interveners besides our client. The plaintiffs in the case were insisting that the bonds held by themwhich were of a first issue; our bonds were of the second issue-were insisting that their bonds of the first issue were prior to our bonds and were entitled to receive all of the tax payments that were made until their bonds had been paid.

Q. How long had this been under the jurisdiction of Judge Ritter?—A. For several months, at least; possibly more than a vear.

Q. It has been said here that there were two other judges in that district; and a certain conclusion was drawn or imputation placed upon the fact that this was done by Judge Ritter outside of his district; and the parties went there, or did not go there necessarily, on account of the other two judges. What are the facts about that?-A. I do not recall of my independent recollection at the time whether other judges were in the district or not.

Q. Assume that they were.-A. It is immaterial, for the reason that we stipulated with the attorneys for the trustee of the district that the order might be presented to the judge outside of the district.

Q. And what was the reason for that agreement, briefly?-A. Primarily, we doubted if any other judge would have entered an order authorizing the compromise of taxes on a drainage district without going into all of the details of the organization of the district, and the parties, and the suit, and the questions that were involved in the suit that was pending before the court.

Q. So that it was on account of the length of time it had been in court and the information gained by Judge Ritter that another judge would not have had?-A. Yes; that was our idea at the time; and also we thought that Judge Ritter understood the case well enough to know that the order would be entered promptly authorizing the settlement of the taxes. We appreciated the element of time as entering into the bringing about of the settlement.

Q. In your opinion, was it a sort of order that another judge, a stranger to that case, would have signed if you had asked him to do so?-A. I do not think another judge would have entered the order except upon an extended hearing, and possibly not then.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The managers may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Winters, your firm did not think it was the kind of order that should have been entered by any judge, did it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took an appeal from it, did you not?-A. Over my protest.

- Q. I am asking you about your firm .- A. I am simply giving you the idea, our firm's idea, but our client, unfortunately, did not agree with us as to what was the thing
- Q. And after you had filed your assignment of errors and got the consent of Judge Ritter to take an appeal, he vacated his order, did he not?—A. Yes, sir; upon the stipulation of the parties that it should be done.
- Q. Your firm entered a motion to vacate that order, did it not?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And Judge Ritter twice made orders denying it?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And then you filed exceptions, and another party filed exceptions and assignments of error and got permission to appeal, and then he vacated his order, did he not?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that. Q. On the stipulation of the parties that it should be

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that now as going into a collateral matter. This is only introduced, as I understand, for the purpose of showing that Judge Ritter was in Brooklyn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness has already answered the question.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I thought that the objection might be a warning.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege and inquire if my conduct has been unseemly?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Oh, no; the Chair thinks not. Proceed with the witness.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I will be very happy to have some other manager on the part of the House conduct the examination if any such insinuations as that are going to be cast. or the Chair agrees with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the manager of whom he is complaining?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Of the insinuation cast by opposing counsel.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I do not recall any insinuation. I did not intend to insinuate anything, Mr. Manager. If I did, it was far from my thought to do so, and I apologize for it.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I beg pardon, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remark to which, the Chair assumes, the manager is referring was the allusion of the counsel of a warning to the managers.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, perhaps I should not have said that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the remark to be humorous.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should not have said it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the manager that he proceed.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Thank you, sir.

Q. Mr. Winters, in the Highland Glades Drainage case the order which was signed was a reduction in behalf of four taxpayers on over 12,000 acres of land which they owned and against which taxes for many years had been duly and legally assessed in the sum of twenty-seven-thousand-andsome-odd-hundred dollars, which they actually owed under this valid assessment, to $16,000, was it not?-A. That is right, Mr. Hobbs, except the conclusion that the taxes were validly assessed. The taxpayers were questioning the validity of some of those taxes. The issue had not been raised in that case; but the properties had been sought to be sold for the payment of the taxes, and the landowners were threatening to raise that issue in the event an effort was made to sell their property for those taxes.

Q. Mr. Winters, at the time you signed this affidavit which was presented to you by Judge A. L. Rankin, in which affidavit you stated that you thought $75,000 was a reasonable fee to be paid him for his services in the Whitehall case, you were not told, and neither did you know, that an allowance of $15,000 had already been made, did you?-A. No, sir.

Q. You were totally ignorant of that fact?—A. I was.

Q. And you thought that $75,000 was to be his total fee?-A. I thought $75,000 was the fee to be allowed for the foreclosure of the mortgage.

Q. Mr. Winters, you were the special master appointed in this case?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did a whole lot of work?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You became quite familiar with it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you, Mr. Winters, if it is a fact or not that not one dime of the money which was taken in by Walter S. Richardson ever went into the coffers of any of the firstmortgage bondholders?-A. Some $19,000 was paid over to me by Mr. Richardson.

Q. Paid over to you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether or not that was afterward added to the $300,000 first mortgage which was put on the Whitehall Hotel property by the bondholders' committee and distributed, not to the bondholders, but to the bondholders' committee and their attorneys?-A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. And to a noncontributing-A. It was not. That | money that was paid to me was distributed by me to the bondholders—the nondepositing bondholders.

Q. Oh, to the nondepositing bondholders; yes; and one of those participants was Mr. Walter S. Richardson, was he

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that as being entirely immaterial and in no way binding upon Judge Ritter, unless it was shown that he had some knowledge of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the manager insist upon the question?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I think it is very material, if the Presiding Officer please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is its materiality?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. The materiality is that Walter S. Richardson, while trustee in bankruptcy of the Whitehall property, bought, either in his own name or in his wife's name or the names of other close relatives, some of these bonds, to wit, $38,300 or $48,300-I forget which. He bought them in at varying prices at less than 10 cents on the dollar, and then, on the upset price being fixed, he got 60 cents on the dollar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the manager whether he expects to connect these transactions with Judge Ritter?

Mr. Manager HOBBS. In the second article of impeachment in this case we aver that there was a conspiracy between Walter S. Richardson and-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; go ahead.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Is that a fact?—A. I am afraid my memory is poor.

Q. Thank you, Mr. Winters. I beg your pardon. Was or was not Walter S. Richardson, or his wife, either or both, a beneficiary of this distribution to the noncontributing bondholders?-A. They were; yes.

Q. Do you know of the price Walter Richardson paid for those bonds?-A. I have no idea.

Q. He was the owner of $48,300 worth, or his wife was, or relatives were-

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object to that, and I must insist upon that objection, if the Presiding Officer please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds, in view of the statement just made by the manager that the question is relative to the charge of conspiracy.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We would also like to have it held relevant on the issue of the validity of the upset price.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the witness may answer the question.

A. $48,700, I think, was the total amount of the bonds.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Mr. Winters, would it make any difference in your opinion as to the fee Mr. A. L. Rankin was entitled to in this case, if any, that Walter S. Richardson solicited a client for Mr. Rankin to start this case and then solicited the employment of A. L. Rankin?-A. I have not been able to see anything improper in Mr. Richardson bringing business to Mr. Rankin.

Q. Would it change your opinion any as to the champertous nature of this proceeding if it be a fact that Mr. A. L. Rankin himself solicited an intervener, to wit, his own brother-in-law, who did not own any bonds, to prevent the dismissal or withdrawal or stopping of the Whitehall foreclosure suit by the order of his client Mr. Bert E. Holland?-A. I would think that Mr. Rankin would have considerable latitude in assisting his clients in the protection of their investments.

Q. But suppose his client was Mr. Bert E. Holland, and suppose that Mr. Holland had told him that he no longer desired him to represent him, and asked him for a bill for his services?-A. In that event, I would regard Mr. Holland as no longer his client.

Q. If that were the only client he had except the interveners, and if he solicited his brother-in-law to act as one of the interveners, Rankin stipulating and swearing in an affidavit to the bill of the intervener that he owned $3,800 worth of bonds when he, Rankin, knew he had never paid one cent for them, and that they were deposited in Rankin's hands simply for the purpose of intervention, would you think that smacked of champerty?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I object. Champerty is well understood as to its meaning, and it has been charged. It is not charged that it "smacked of champerty." I object for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question should go to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the fee. The Chair suggests that the testimony be confined to that point.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I was asking, if these facts were true, if that would make any difference in his opinion as to the fee; at least, I meant to ask that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection to that.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. What is your answer?-A. I would say that if Mr. Rankin was guilty of champerty in the case he would not be entitled to any fee at all.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. That is all.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. If he was guilty of champerty, the law provides a proper proceeding, does it not, to dismiss him from the case and the professional organization provides disciplinary action upon the matter?—A. That is my understanding; yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The document I hold in my hand is the order signed in Brooklyn on the 24th of September in the drainage district case. I hand it to the managers for their inspection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make inquiry as to whether or not counsel desires the order printed in the

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). All this is about is that on that day the order was signed, and it shows or tends to show the reason for that visit and contradicts the claim of the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection on the part of the managers, the document will be printed in the RECORD. Does counsel desire an exhibit number for the document?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; we offer it in evidence and ask that it be given an exhibit number.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Chair if all the exhibits counsel are introducing are to be printed in the daily RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BONE. I am wondering how we may later scrutinize them if counsel are going to rely on them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Some of the exhibits are being ordered printed and others are merely introduced in evidence for the use of counsel upon argument and consideration of the court.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I had supposed that all correspondence would be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumes that all documents and correspondence which have been read or which have been ordered printed have been or will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think perhaps a mere reference to this order would be sufficient to advise those of the Senators who have not heard it. However, as to this particular order, I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the document, marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 41", was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 41

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida in chancery. C. O. Kuehne, Arthur H. Zellar, and T. J. Grace, complainants, v. Highland Glades Drainage District, a Public Corporation Organized and Existing Under the Laws of the State of Florida, defendant. Order authorizing receiver to settle taxes of Geer, Malcolm, and Chillingworth

This cause coming on to be heard upon the petition of S. J. Tucker, as receiver of Highland Glades Drainage District, defendant in the above-styled cause, for an order authorizing him as such receiver to accept the offer of H. O. Geer, F. B. Malcolm, and C. C. Chillingworth of the sum of sixteen thousand ($16,000.00) dollars in full settlement of the due and unpaid drainage taxes legally levied against the lands owned by them in said district, and it appearing to the court that it is to the best interest of all concerned that the said offer of Geer, Malcolm, and Chillingworth of the sum of $16,000.00 as a settlement of said taxes be accepted, and the same petition and the matters set out therein being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises: It is therefore therefore

Ordered, adjourned, and decreed, That the said petition be granted, and that the said S. J. Tucker as such receiver be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to accept the offer of the sum of $16,000.00 cash made by the said Geer, Malcolm, and Chillingworth in full settlement of all of the drainage taxes legally levied against the lands owned by Geer and Chillingworth, H. G. Geer, H. G. Geer, and F. B. Malcolm, amounting to 12,247.64 acres, up to and including the drainage taxes for the year 1928, and upon the receipt by the said S. J. Tucker of the said sum in cash, that he be and is hereby authorized to have such receipts issue to them as may be necessary to carry out this order.

Done and ordered this 24th day of September, A. D. 1929.

(Signed) Halsted L. Ritter, Judge.

[Endorsed on back:] "Filed, Miami, Fla., October 8, 1929, Edwin R. Williams, clerk; Palmer Rosemond, deputy clerk."

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We doubt if this particular order taken out of its context would be admissible. We should like to have the entire series of documents relating to it noted, with the privilege of referring to them by counsel or any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel or the managers will have to present the documents and have them identified; otherwise the Court and the Chair will have no means of knowing what is presented.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). My point is that the contents of any other documents are not material. This order is offered merely for the purpose of showing the visit to Brooklyn, and having the date upon it and the signature of Judge Ritter shown, that it may throw some light on the occasion or the reason for the visit. To go into the elements of controversy between the parties or the pleadings, I think, is entirely immaterial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If counsel will submit a request to the Chair, the Chair will refer it to the Court. What is the request?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I make a suggestion? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. If counsel will state and will agree that the total amount of taxes assessed is $27,000, and that this was an order entered dealing with that assessment, I think that will answer the purpose.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). To shorten the matter, I still maintain it is wholly material; but let it go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers are submitting a statement in the nature of a stipulation. What the Chair is interested in is whether counsel agree to the statement made by the managers?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I agree that the documents may go in. I do not agree to the verity of anything in them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The documents may be received with the statement agreed upon and with the statement of counsel.

The witness is excused.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF SYDNOR J. TUCKER

Sydnor J. Tucker, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. State your name, please.—A. Sydnor J. Tucker.

- Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Tucker?-A. West Palm Beach, Fla.
- Q. And your profession?—A. I am at present general manager of the Everglades Club at Palm Beach.
- Q. Have you been engaged in the practice of law?-A. I have not.
- Q. We have here an order which shows upon its face that it was granted by Judge Ritter on the 24th day of September 1929. Were you present at the time the order was signed?-A. I was.
 - Q. Where was it signed?—A. Brooklyn, N. Y.

- Q. At what place in Brooklyn, N. Y.?-A. The Federal courthouse.
- Q. Who accompanied you, if anyone, to the Federal courthouse when this order was signed?-A. A. L. Rankin, my
- Q. Did you hear the conversation that took place between the judge and Mr. Rankin while you were there?—A. I did.
- Q. Were you there during the entire time covering the visit made to Judge Ritter?-A. I was.
 - Q. And did you see him sign the order?-A. I did.
- Q. I will ask you whether there was any conversation between Mr. Rankin and Judge Ritter referring to a suit over the Whitehall property.-A. There was not.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all. Take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

- Q. Mr. Tucker, were you with Judge Rankin during the entire time he was in New York or Brooklyn?-A. No; I was there with him the entire first day and part of the
- Q. What you mean to tell the Court is that you were present in the courtroom at the time the order was signed?— A. I was.
- Q. Did you go with Judge Rankin at a later time on a visit to Judge Ritter?—A. Judge Ritter, Mrs. Ritter, and Mr. Rankin had dinner with me that night, the same night on which the order was signed.
- Q. Who went with you and Judge Rankin to New York?— A. When I got on the train I found Walter Richardson was on the train. I did not know, before that, that he was going.
- Q. Did Mr. Rankin and Mr. Richardson confer about the Whitehall matter on the way to New York?—A. Not in my presence.
- Q. Did they confer in New York about the Whitehall matter?-A. Not in my presence.
- Q. And your testimony is that Judge Rankin did not confer with Judge Ritter about that matter while you were with him in New York?-A. That is right, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. That is all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all; thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are you through with this witness?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; you are excused, Mr. Tucker.

Call Mr. George W. Coleman.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF GEORGE W. COLEMAN

George W. Coleman, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. What is your name, please?—A. George W. Coleman.
- Q. And your profession?-A. Lawyer.
- Q. Where do you practice law, Mr. Coleman?-A. West Palm Beach, Fla.
- Q. How long have you been engaged in the practice of law at Palm Beach?-A. Since 1916.
- Q. You are one of the attorneys who made an affidavit as to the reasonableness of a preliminary fee in this case, or a - fee in this case of $15,000, are you not?—A. I am.
 Q. Are you acquainted with the practice or the custom of the law of allowing a conservation fee in your territory down there?-A. I am.
- Q. Before you made that affidavit were you familiar with the law governing this matter?-A. I think so.
- Q. I will get you to state whether or not, in your opinion, $15,000 was a reasonable conservation fee.-A. I think it was a reasonable fee.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. Mr. Coleman, under the procedure in Florida a receivership in connection with foreclosures is the usual thing, is it not?-A. It is.
- Q. Is it the usual thing in foreclosure suits for the attorney to be allowed a conservation fee?-A. No; I would not say it is the usual thing; no.

- Q. How frequently have you known it to occur in your immediate jurisdiction?-A. Within my knowledge, in four or five cases.
- Q. Are those ordinary foreclosure suits?—A. Usually not; usually where there is foreclosure of a trust deed, and some circumstance entering into it that would require or allow for a conservation fee.
- Q. In a foreclosure suit where there are some money assets that belong to the property sought to be foreclosed, and no other thing is done with reference to the money by the attorney bringing the foreclosure suit except to bring the suit, under the Florida practice would he be entitled to a conservation fee?-A. Well, that would depend on the circumstances.
- Q. I have given you the circumstances.—A. You recited some of them; yes. I do not think, under some conditions, that a conservation fee would be warranted.
- Q. Would it be warranted under any circumstances such as I have stated?-A. I think so.
- Q. What circumstances?—A. Where bondholders would come into court and conserve assets, and bring the assets into the jurisdiction of the court; where a trustee is not acting properly, or there are allegations against a trustee.
- Q. Now can you answer my question? I will put it again: Where a foreclosure suit is brought, a bill is filed, and nothing further is done by the attorney filing the bill other than to file the bill, is any conservation fee to be allowed in that circumstance?-A. There might be, under those circumstances; yes.

Q. You are familiar with the circumstances under which Judge Rankin made his application?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were the circumstances in that case that entitled him to a conservation fee?—A. As I recall the circumstances in that case, there was a bill filed by a group of bondholders. They got the jurisdiction of the Federal court and brought into the corpus of that estate a considerable sum of money. I examined the copies of the court files, not the originals themselves, and examined the petition of the solicitor for the complainant, setting forth the services that he had performed up to the time that I made the affidavit.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington submits a question, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. BONEl, as follows:

What do the records in this case show as to the basis for the allowance of the preliminary fee of $15,000? Is there a reference in the order indicating that it was allowed for "conservation" of

A. The records in this case show that at the time the affidavit was made, there had been some one-hundred-odd papers filed in the cause—a bill of complaint, one or two amendments to the complaint, petitions for interventions, and several papers in connection with the appointment of a receiver. The petition filed by the solicitor for the plaintiff alleged the bringing into the corpus of that estate of some $237,000 besides the physical property itself; and the petition and the order set forth clearly that it was a conservation fee, a preliminary fee for conserving the assets of the estate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I again ask the witness if he will recite the language of the order indicating that this was a conservation fee. He has stated a conclusion. I desired to know what language was in the order indicating that it was a conservation fee.

The WITNESS. I do not recall the wording of the order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the order has been read and introduced in evidence, and is in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, at this point may I let the witness read the order, so that we may all have an understanding about it? You have no objection, I know. You do not want to have any misunderstanding.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Do you want the witness to read it aloud, or to read it for his own information?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). To read it aloud, in answer to the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington ask that the order be read?

Mr. BONE. I do not ask for the reading of the entire order, but merely that particular language which identifies it as an authorization of payment for conservation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I understand that the order is not long; and, if it is not, I should like to hear it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; let the witness read the order, unless there is objection.

(The witness read as follows:)

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida in and for Miami Division. No. 678-M Eq. Bert E. Holland, Catherine Suyden, a Widow, and Whitfield W. Johnson, as Trustees, plaintiffs, v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co., a Florida Corporation, et al., defendants; A. H. Hill, Eugenia J. Schopps, and A. W. Kirkland, interveners. Order authorizing Walter S. Richardson, as receiver, to pay fees to A. L. Rankin, as attorney for plaintiffs and interveners.

Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause for an order fixing a reasonable compensation for their attorney, A. L. Rankin, for services rendered plaintiffs, interveners, and all first-mortgage bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., in conserving, bringing into court, and creating assets for benefit of all said first-mortgage bondholders, and the same being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises: It is therefore the premises: It is therefore Ordered, adjudged, and decreed, That the said petition be, and the same is hereby, granted, and that the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) is hereby fixed as a reasonable compensation for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for conserving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hands of the receiver, and the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver, be and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the said A. L. Rankin, as such attorney, out of the funds in his hands as such receiver, the said sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000), which is herein fixed and allowed.

Done and ordered at Tampa, Fia., this the 5th day of July A. D.

Done and ordered at Tampa, Fla., this the 5th day of July, A. D.

ALEXANDER AKERMAN United States District Judge.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. From what source did the attorney, Mr. Rankin, bring this money into the custody of the court?-A. As I recall it now, from the operation of the hotel during the season just ended. The affidavit that I signed I think was in May.
- Q. Did not that money come into the custody of the court along with the hotel from the operation of which it was earned? Did Mr. Rankin do any particular and additional thing to bring that money in?-A. I do not know what he did. I went over the files and I discussed the matter-
- Q. If you did not know what he did to bring it in, how do you know it was worth $15,000 to do it?—A. I say, I was basing my affidavit on the files and records themselves, and what he told me had been done in connection with it.
- Q. I am trying to find out what you know Mr. Rankin did, other than to file the bill that brought the money into the custody of the court, to entitle him to $15,000?—A. It is my recollection that just at the time, or prior to the filing of the bill an inferior mortgage, a third mortgage, had been foreclosed, and the property was in the hands of a trustee who had bid in under that foreclosure. It was then operated for that season, and at the end of that time these funds had accumulated and were in the hands of the receiver. I think he was appointed under this suit and took possession thereof.
- Q. But the question I ask is, Did not the money follow the hotel into the custody of the court?—A. In this case?
 - Q. Yes.-A. Yes. sir.
- Q. Then what, in addition to filing the suit, did Mr. Rankin do to bring this money in that entitled him to have $15,000 out of the property?-A. Nothing except to file the suit, have a receiver appointed, contest the intervention or aid in it, whichever was necessary.
- Q. You did not make a statement in regard to the reasonableness of the final fee that was allowed, did you?-A. I did not.
- Q. Do you know how much that amount was?-A. As I recall, it was $75,000.
 - Q. Making a total of $90,000?-A. Yes.

Q. The facts in the case should show that the suit was initiated by Mr. Rankin, representing, or claiming to represent, Mr. Bert E. Holland; that he and his associates became uneasy with reference to the regaining of jurisdiction because Mr. Holland was trying to get out of the suit, and they began to look about to find some additional bondholders for whom they could intervene, and whom they solicited for the privilege of representing them in that court in order to prevent the dismissal of the suit that had been brought in the name of Mr. Holland in the first instance, would you consider that Mr. Rankin and his associates were entitled to be allowed one single cent by the court if the court knew those facts or had reason to believe them?-A. I would not.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This witness is excused for the term?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). So far as we are concerned. DIRECT EXAMINATION OF JOHN P. STOKES

Mr. John P. Stokes, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Your name, please.—A. John P. Stokes.
- Q. Are you a practicing lawyer?-A. I am.
- Q. In Miami?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What is the name of your firm?-A. Loftin, Stokes & Calkins.
- Q. Is it a fact or not that this firm for many years has represented the Flagler estate and the Florida East Coast Hotel Co., of which Mr. Bemis in his lifetime was general manager and vice president?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. In 1929, Mr. Stokes, and prior to October 1929, were Messrs. Bemis and Sweeny engaged in a controversy with the Moore interests to gain control of the Whitehall Hotel?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Did you or did you not have many conferences with Mr. Bemis on the subject?-A. Not many, but some.
- Q. Did your firm act as attorneys for the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. at the time of these proceedings?-A. Yes.
- Q. Had you done any business with them in that particular line prior to that time?-A. Not for that company.
- Q. Did anyone wire you to attend the hearing in Judge Ritter's court on the appointment of a receiver?-A. Yes.
 - Q. Did you so attend?—A. I did.
- Q. Did your firm file an answer to the bill of complaint admitting the charges of fraud and concurring in the appointment of a receiver?—A. Yes.
- Q. Did you report to Mr. Bemis from time to time on the subject?-A. I did.
- Q. I will ask you whether or not during the year 1929, and up to December 1930, notices of hearings, motions, and other papers were served on your firm in connection with this case?-A. Yes.
 - Q. Were there few or many?-A. Many.
- Q. I will get you to state whether or not the final decree was sent to the firm of Loftin, Stokes & Calkins before it was presented to the court.—A. It was.
- Q. Did you read that decree, and did you discuss it with Mr. Bemis?-A. I did.
- Q. Was it signed by a member of your firm at the final meeting in Judge Ritter's chambers on the day it was signed. December 24, 1930, if that is within your knowledge?-A. I was not present, but I understand it was by B. R. Coleman, of our firm, who was present on that occasion.
- Q. Did he have particular charge of that matter?-A. He did.
- Q. You have known Judge Ritter ever since he has been on the bench down there?-A. I met him shortly after he was appointed. I had no acquaintance with him prior to that time.
- Q. What is his reputation for honesty, integrity, and as a jurist in that neighborhood?—A. Well, I have heard reports both ways about him since this case came up.

- Q. Prior to this time?—A. Prior to that time I had never heard his reputation for integrity brought in question. When I say "this case" I mean the activities that resulted in this case.
- Q. The first hearings were in 1933, were they not?—A. No; I think it was prior to that time, but it was a result of this Whitehall matter. I think the suit was filed to upset that decree, and that is the first time I ever heard his reputation questioned.
- Q. The Kirkland case: You knew that in the Kirkland case it was expressly stated in the bill that the judge was entirely blameless in the matter?-A. No, sir; I do not recall that I read that bill.
 - Q. You did not read the bill?-A. No.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all.
 - Mr. Manager HOBBS. No questions.
 - The WITNESS. May I be excused permanently?
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I think so; yes. You may be, so far as we are concerned.
 - Call Palmer Rosemond, please.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF PALMER ROSEMOND

Palmer Rosemond, having been duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows:

- By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. What is your name, please?—A. Palmer Rosemond.
- Q. And where do you reside, Mr. Rosemond?-A. Miami, Fla.
- Q. Do you hold any official position down there?-A. Deputy clerk, Miami Division, United States District Court, Southern District of Florida.
- Q. How long have you held that position?—A. Since 1927, July.
- Q. I will get you to state whether or not you received the bill of complaint in the case entitled "Bert E. Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building and Operating Co."?-A. I did.
- Q. I will get you to look at the paper which I now hand you and state what it is, first handing it to the gentlemen on the other side.—A. This is a photostatic copy of progress docket of the case of Bert E. Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building and Operating Co. et al.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer that in evidence, and ask that it be given the appropriate number as an exhibit for the respondent.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 43.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It will not be necessary, I believe, Mr. President, to print this in full in the RECORD; merely the title of the case, the identifying title, and the first entry on the right-hand side of the document under the heading "Filings—Proceedings."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The Chair is informed that the exhibit number is 43. The Chair understands that only the portion which was read by counsel is to be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have not read it yet, Mr. President. It is the first line. I want him to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You want the witness to read it?

- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. I only read the heading. Mr. President.
 - A. Do you mean the first line of the progress side?
 - By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. The filing, please. Go ahead and read.—A. (Reading:) October 11, 1929. Bill of complaint for foreclosure, appointment of receiver and other relief.
 - Q. When did you receive that bill?-A. October 11, 1929. Q. And did you or did you not immediately file it?-A.
- Yes. Q. Put it on the calendar?-A. Yes, sir; put it on the - docket. Q. Put it on the docket, I should say. How did it come to
- you?-A. By mail-morning's mail.
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

Cross-examination by Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. Mr. Rosemond, when you received this bill of complaint, from whom did you receive it?-A. Mr. Rankin.
- Q. Was there any communication which accompanied that bill?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Will you state its substance? I believe it is already in the record.—A. I have recently read the letter, and he requested that I suppress publication.
- Q. Is that a usual thing to happen in your court?—A. Not
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May I ask the manager a question?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes.

- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Has that letter been introduced?
- Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes. It is in the record, I am advised.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I thought it was.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. He asked you to suppress publication as of when? To refresh your memory-we have sent for the letter-to refresh your memory, did not that letter request that you immediately lock up the bill?—A. I think he did.
- Q. And to keep it there until Judge Ritter returned?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you know when Judge Ritter got back?-A. No, sir; I do not recall.
- Q. Did you have any further communication from Mr. Rankin with regard to this bill?—A. I do not think I did; not for the next several days.
- Q. I will ask you if this is the letter to which you refer. The letter is addressed to you:

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., October 10, 1929.

Hon. PALMER ROSEMOND,

Clerk, United States District Court, Miami, Fla.

DEAR Mr. ROSEMOND: Enclosed I am herewith sending you bill of complaint for foreclosure of a mortgage on property in Palm Beach, complaint for foreclosure of a mortgage on property in Paim Beach, which you will please file.

It is very important that we have a receiver appointed for this property immediately upon Judge Ritter's return next Tuesday. If you can possibly do so, it will be greatly appreciated by us if you will lock up this bill as soon as it is filed and hold it until Judge Ritter's return, so that we will not have any newspaper publicity before our application is heard by the judge for the appointment of Enclosed you will find check for $15 to cover filing fee.

If you will prevent any publicity concerning this bill before Judge Ritter returns, it will be very greatly appreciated.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) A. L. RANKIN.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk two interrogatories which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the first interrogatory.

The Chief Clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. KING, as follows:

Was it the custom of the clerk to lock up complaints or proceedings at the request of attorneys?

A. No, sir.

The Chief Clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. King, as follows:

Who appointed you as deputy clerk?

- A. I was appointed through the recommendation of Mr. Edmund R. Williams, clerk of the United States Court, Southern District of Florida, at Jacksonville, who recommended me to Judge Call and Judge Jones.
 - By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:
- Q. Mr. Rosemond, did you reply to Judge Rankin's letter?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the substance of your reply?-A. I acknowledged receipt of the bill, as I recall, and said something about publication would be avoided.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Did you introduce that letter, may I ask, Mr. Manager?
- Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I do not know, sir. I have been trying to get it now. It is numbered A-19. May I suggest that we read the letter as soon as we can get it, and have it follow the letter just read in the making up of the record?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Have you any further questions of the witness?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes; I have a question or two when you get through.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Here is the letter. This letter is dated Miami, Fla., October 11, 1929, addressed to A. L. Rankin, West Palm Beach. It says:

MIAMI, FLA., October 11, 1929.

A. L. RANKIN,

West Palm Beach, Fla.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of yours of the 10th, containing bill of complaint in re Bert E. Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co. et al., together with your check in the sum of $15 to cover filing fee.

As requested, I will file this bill and will see that publicity is avoided pending the arrival of Judge Ritter.

Yours very truly,

PALMER ROSEMOND, Deputy Clerk in Charge.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. This is signed by yourself. Is that the letter?—A. Yes. sir; that is the letter.
 - Mr. Manager SUMNERS. That is all.

REDIRECT EXAMINATION

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you lock up the bill?-A. No, sir.

RECROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

- Q. What did you do with it?-A. It was put in the file for that purpose.
 - Q. For what purpose?—A. Where we file all equity matters.

Q. Did you keep it out of sight?-A. No. sir.

- Q. You told Judge Rankin you were going to do it?-A. I told him that to suppress any argument.
- Q. Did you let anybody see it?-A. Anyone who might ask for it could have seen it.
- Q. You were requested by Judge Rankin to do a thing, and you wrote him that you would do that thing?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Then you say you did not do that thing, and you wrote him you would do that thing in order to suppress an argument .- A. I did not tell him I would lock it up.
 - Q. Let us see what you did say:

As requested, I will file this bill and will see that publicity is avoided pending the arrival of Judge Ritter.

How were you going to prevent publicity with reference to this bill if it was out where folks could look at it?

- A. When a paper is spread on the record I am powerless as to whether it shall become public or not.
- Q. What I am trying to find out is how you could assure Judge Rankin that you would see to it that publicity was avoided pending the arrival of Judge Ritter unless you locked the bill up and kept it away from people who might want to see something about it?-A. I could not keep it away from them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit two questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The legislative clerk read the first question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

Where was Judge Ritter, if you knew, when the bill was filed?

A. I think he was in New York.

The legislative clerk read the second question propounded by Mr. Walsh, as follows:

What date did Judge Ritter return after the bill was filed, if

A. I do not recall.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have a question I desire

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question submitted by the Senator from Tennessee.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

Was the bill actually published before Judge Ritter's return?

A. I do not know.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. I would like to ask you one more question. Is this the first time you ever told anybody that you did not do as you promised to do with reference to avoiding publicity?—A. The local attorneys have asked me to try to suppress publication. I would tell them I would do the best I could; but after it was spread on the record-

Q. I am asking about this particular matter. You testified in Miami with regard to this matter, did you not?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at that time indicate that you had not locked the bill up?-A. I do not think I was asked the question. I am not certain, but I do not think so.

Q. If you had been asked the question, you would have said that you locked it up?-A. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have a certificate which I desire to introduce in evidence, but I am sorry to say the gentlemen object. It is a certificate from the clerk giving the amount of business and the number of cases pending and disposed of in Judge Ritter's court.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We object. We do not see that it has any relevancy or bearing whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair cannot see the relevancy of it to any issue.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It is for the purpose of showing there is a large volume of business in that court. As the case has been presented here, it seems like an isolated case. I want to show it was a court crowded with business all the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no allegation, so far as the present occupant of the chair can recall, that involves an issue of that sort. It is purely collateral. The Chair does not think it is competent. If counsel desires, he will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to have the question submitted. I think the entire matter should be known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The question is, Shall the statement be admitted as evidence? [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the ruling of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Very well. Let it be filed with the clerk.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. Did I understand counsel to say he wished it filed with the clerk?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. I am just filing it with the clerk as an offer to prove.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. In other words, it is not to go into the RECORD?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Whatever is the custom.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I do not understand counsel has any right to offer that to the clerk after it has been ruled out of evidence.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will withdraw it.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I thank you, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I had no intention of having it printed in the RECORD. I supposed it was the custom to file such papers with the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel may proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I now offer another certificate, which I submit to counsel.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. We offer the same objection to this certificate which counsel has offered. It contains a statement of how business was conducted in the court.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It does not contain that kind of statement and is not offered for that purpose. There has been some reference to the Mulford fee and the reasons or imputed reasons why that fee was paid. I want to show by this affidavit that neither the Mulford Realty Corporation nor Vincent S. Mulford, nor J. R. Francis, nor Charles A. Brodek, nor either of them, has ever been party plaintiff or defendant in the court of Judge Ritter.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I misunderstood the statement. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let it be admitted.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). The affidavit reads as follows:

I hereby certify that an examination of the records of my office as of March 23, 1936, revealed no docket record of the filing or pendency of any case in the Miami division of the southern district of Florida, in which the Mulford Realty Corporation or Vincent S. Mulford or J. R. Francis or Charles A. Brodek, or either of them, as party plaintiff or defendant; nor does the records of this office reveal any litigation instituted or pending in said division of said district in which Charles A. Brodek, or the firm of Revolet Raphael & Figure or either of them, appear as coursel of Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, or either of them, appear as counsel of record.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and official seal this 10th day of April, A. D. 1936.

EDWIN R. WILLIAMS Clerk, United States District Court. By PALMER ROSEMOND Deputy Clerk, in Charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this witness the clerk of the court making the certificate?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). He puts it in the form of a certificate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. Let the certificate be given an exhibit number.

(The certificate was marked "Respondent's Exhibit No. 44.")

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee submits a question, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the question propounded by Mr. BACHMAN, as follows:

What argument did you seek to suppress by writing the letter to Mr. Rankin? From wrom did you expect argument?

A. From Mr. Rankin.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Is there anything else? If not, you may be excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You are excused.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Call Mr. J. W. Salisbury.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF J. W. SALISBURY

J. W. Salisbury, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By Mr. Walsh (of counsel):

Q. State your name, please.—A. J. W. Salisbury.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Salisbury?-A. West Palm Beach, Fla.

Q. And your profession?—A. Attorney at law.

Q. How long have you been practising there in Florida?-A. A little over 10 years.

Q. Do you hold any official position in the State of Florida?-A. I do.

Q. What is it?—A. State attorney for the fifteenth judicial circuit

Q. What counties in Florida are included in that district?-A. At this time?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. One.

Q. That is Palm Beach?—A. Yes, sir. Pardon me-there are two again; two counties in that circuit now.

Q. Palm Beach and what else?-A. And Broward.

Q. I desire to bring your attention to the time that Judge Ritter went upon the bench. Did you at that time go into the office of Mr. Rankin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the conversation between Mr. Rankin and Judge Ritter with respect to your entering that firm?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just state in your own way, please, what took place there.-A. Judge Ritter called me on the telephone and told me that Judge Rankin needed someone in his office and he had recommended me. At the time I had my own practice in West Palm Beach. He said that Judge Rankin had agreed to pay me 15 percent of his gross business if I would come into his office, and Judge Rankin was a little hard of hearing, and that I would probably have to conduct most of the cases in court and take care of most of the pleadings.

I had that talk with Judge Ritter before I saw Rankin. After that talk I had a talk then with Judge Ritter and Judge Rankin in the office in the Comeau Building, and Judge Rankin agreed to the 15 percent.

At that time there were several cases excepted from my arrangement. In other words, I was to share 15 percent of the gross fees collected from the business in the office, with the exception of several cases. Of those cases I can remember two very distinctly—the Brazilian Court fore-closure, and Matusek v. Palm Beach Bank & Trust Co. There were several others. Judge Ritter made the statement to me that the work had been substantially completed in those cases, and that he was to receive his share of the fee. On everything else I was to receive 15 percent of Judge Rankin's gross income.

Q. Did you enter into that agreement?-A. I did.

Q. And did you go into the office?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go into the office before Judge Ritter went on the bench?—A. Yes, sir; I moved my things in before Judge Ritter moved his out.

Q. I should like for you to look at a statement that I have been endeavoring to put in evidence here, and state whether or not you had anything to do with the preparation of the statement.—A. I did.

Q. Were you present during the time that the data were assembled for that statement?—A. No; I was not present when all of it was assembled. Mr. Callaway got together as much as he could. He called me. I met with Mr. Callaway and went through the old docket sheets that were available in Mr. Rankin's office. I went through the old files that were available, and I know that these cases were pending or in progress at the time I went into the office.

Q. I will ask you to look at the files which I hand you, docket sheets, the first one being marked on the back of Cases closed. What is that?—A. That is some of the old docket sheets taken out of the docket books when a case is closed or dismissed or disposed of.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to have that marked as an exhibit.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We object, may it please the Court, unless it is properly identified. We submit that the proper predicate has not been laid.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Are those the old docket sheets that were in that office when you were there?—A. I cannot testify as to all of them. I can testify as to the ones I am familiar with.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is all I am offering, Mr. Manager.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, as I understand, the witness has never even sworn that these were sheets from books kept by Ritter & Rankin.

The WITNESS. I do now.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We will ask the privilege of cross-examination on that point.

By Mr. Manager HOBBS:

Q. Do you mean to say that Ritter & Rankin kept a docket?—A. Absolutely.

Q. And they kept a set of books?—A. I did not say a set of books; I said a docket of the cases, the progress of each

Q. They kept a docket such as is indicated by those loose leaves that you have there?—A. Yes, sir; and you will see my handwriting on most of the ones I will tell you about.

Q. And they kept another book. Was that kept in book form?—A. I do not quite follow you. Another book?

Q. Was that kept in book form?—A. These sheets—at the time I went into the office there were two leather-bound docket books, loose-leaf docket books, one chancery and one common law; and the docket sheets that I am familiar with, that are here, and I imagine in the other one, were in those two books; yes, sir.

Q. Only two?—A. Well, that is all I remember. I remember two docket books that I took charge of.

Q. I understood that these sheets were from the finishedcase book.—A. These docket sheets were taken out of the docket books. These are disposed of, and were taken out of the active docket books, showing active cases, when the case was wound up, and put in here.

Q. By whom?—A. By me in some instances; by the stenographer in other instances, and I do not know who else.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. With that understanding, may it please the Court, we have no further objection to the introduction of those sheets that may hereafter be identified by his own personal knowledge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you please to examine the bundle of papers I now hand you and state what they are.—A. These appear to be old docket sheets. I am probably familiar with some of them, but some of them I am not.

Q. I will get you to state whether or not you took from those docket sheets, or had taken under your direction, the cases that were in the office at the time of the dissolution of the partnership.—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Callaway got up a sheet similar to this one. I met with Mr. Callaway, went over the record that he got up, I struck out a good many he had down and added a good many he did not have; and this is the result.

Q. I will get you to state, without going into the particular pages of these two docket packages, whether or not the cases that appear on that paper were in the office at the time of the dissolution of the partnership, when you went in there.—A. Yes; with this explanation: There are several of these cases that were started after I went in; but in each instance, from my personal inspection just before coming up here this time, I can testify that the correspondence and negotiations on those cases had started prior to the time I came into the office and prior to the time Judge Ritter left. In other words, many of these cases were started in 1928 and were still pending. Other cases were started in March or April of 1929; but there had been correspondence and negotiations in the office prior to that time with those clients, although suit had not been filed until after Judge Ritter left.

Q. Did you take part in the final suits? I think it would be better for you just to state what you did with reference to that business, to state the cases that were left in the office.— A. With the exception of a very few cases, I conducted them entirely myself.

Q. That is, as to correspondence, as to the preparation of pleadings, and as to appearances in court?—A. I might say this, that in these old cases the appearances in court continued to be in the name of Ritter & Rankin. On all new business, as the records will show, all appearances were in the name of A. L. Rankin. My name did not appear. I was working for Judge Rankin on his cases, and my name did not appear.

Q. But in those cases which had already been started and in which pleadings had been filed, the designation of them was continued in the name of Ritter & Rankin?—A. In many, many instances. In other words, the praecipe for withdrawal of Ritter & Rankin and the appearance of A. L. Rankin personally was overlooked in a good many of those cases.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I would like to have this statement marked for identification.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. You mean you are offering it?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). No; I said "marked for identification." To make it perfectly clear to you, Mr. Manager, I propose to draw from his statement what he knows about it. I was not present when you tried to agree last night; I understand there was an attempt to agree; but I will not offer anything, since I understand you are going to object, without giving you a full opportunity to make your objection.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I thank you.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should now like to read into the Record those cases about which the witness has testified, under the headings "Court No. —", "Date filed or appeared", "Style of case", "Representing", "Nature", "Amount involved."

Mr. Manager HOBBS. I did not understand that he had testified that every case on that list he knew to be pending, of his own knowledge.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask him again. I understood that he did. Perhaps I am mistaken.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Were all of the cases which now appear on this statement, which you say you checked up with Mr. Callaway, in the office at the time of the dissolution, or did they have correspondence or moving papers showing that there was going to be litigation?—A. I would have to make an explanation on some of them to show you how they were in the office, and why; but with that explanation I could make, they were.

Q. Have you a copy of this list?-A. I have a copy.

Q. Could you suggest any way in which I could shorten the matter? I am compelled to get all of these in evidence. The first case that appears is Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. v. Cherry. Was that in the office?—A. That case was in the office when Judge Ritter left and I came in.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. May I be pardoned for asking a question for the purpose of clarifying, with the consent of counsel?.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Certainly.

By Mr. Manager SUMNERS:

Q. Does the witness, when he speaks of cases in the office, mean that the case had been filed and was pending in court, or that there was correspondence in the office which afterward led to litigation?—A. In that particular case, it was actually filed in court and pending.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. As I read them, you can indicate.—A. That was a mortgage foreclosure.

Q. I will just read it across here, and that will save time. Mr. Manager HOBBS. He has not testified to anything except that they were in the office, as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). That is what I am now having him testify to. I want to show what cases were in the office. By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I read:

Date filed or appeared: 11/28.

Style of case: Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. v. Cherry. Representing: Plaintiff.

Representing: Plaintiff.
Nature: Mortgage foreclosure.
Amount involved: $3,700.

Is that correct?-A. That is correct.

Q. I will take you to the next case. Was that one that was in the office and upon which suit had already been filed at the time you went into the office?—A. I do not think suit had been filed. I think I prepared that bill. However, the business was in the office, waiting to be put into court. That bill was filed March 25, 1929.

Q. Very good. I will read this into evidence, then. "Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. v. Alma Gates." Representing "Plaintiff. Mortgage foreclosure." Amount involved, "$3,500."

Is that correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. The next case I see here is Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. v. E. A. Coates. I wish you would please say whether or not that was in suit or in preparation for suit.—
A. That never did go into suit. That was settled in this way: That was pending at the time Judge Ritter left. We filed, that is, for Mr. Rankin I filed probate proceedings on the estate of a Mr. Anadale, and in that way cleared the title up and a quitclaim deed, as I recall, was accepted from one of the parties in interest to the Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. that avoided or did away with the necessity for a mortgage foreclosure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Court and appeal to the Chair to make the suggestion that counsel get together. This is a very long statement, it seems, and in the light of the preliminary statement made by the witness, there should not be any difficulty in counsel agreeing upon those matters which were in court, or were so related to the court that they may be considered as a part of the statement made by the witness. I ask counsel whether they have not some other witness so that they can withdraw this witness and see if they cannot agree upon that matter.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Not at the present time.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. May it please the Court, as I understood it, and as the managers now understand it, we did agree, and we are perfectly willing to live up to that agreement, just as we told the gentlemen last night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the first time the attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that an agreement had been made. Of course, the Chair cannot determine whether an agreement has been made or not. It must be stated by the counsel representing the respective parties in the hearings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I again venture to claim the indulgence of the Court. Counsel states an agreement has been made. I suggest that he state the agreement, and see if there is any controversy between the managers and those representing the respondent.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I wish the managers would state what the agreement is, in the RECORD.

Mr. Manager HOBBS. With pleasure. I told your associate, the distinguished and honorable Carl Hoffman, last night in our conference in the Judiciary Committee room, in the presence of these other gentlemen and this witness and Mr. Callaway, that as to any case which he would swear on his own knowledge was in the office at that time, all he had to do was to initial it or indicate it in any other way, I do not believe I used the word "initial", and we would agree that that was his testimony.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Was there a distinction between cases that were in suit and cases which were not in suit:

Mr. Manager HOBBS. We understood that he would indicate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may make a suggestion to counsel without impropriety, the witness might, under that agreement, take the list of cases from which the counsel is reading and say whether the case to which he is immediately referring was in the office or whether it was not.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to take it and do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the meantime, I desire to ask the witness a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the question.

The Chief Clerk read the question propounded by Mr. McKellar, as follows:

As I understand, you said you received 15 percent of the fees coming to Ritter & Rankin as your part of the business. To whom did you pay the remaining 85 percent?

A. I did not collect any of the money due Judge Rankin under any of the cases, either the old ones pending or the new ones that came in. In other words, if, as, and when he collected the money, I was supposed to get my 15 percent of those fees.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you collect anything at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then I do not quite understand your answer.—A. I was supposed to receive 15 percent.

Q. And who got the other 85 percent?—A. Judge Rankin, Q. I do not know whether I helped any or not there.

I will get you to look at the paper which I now hand you, and ask you whether you made an inventory of the books that were in the library at the time of the dissolution of the partnership, and whether that is a correct statement of those books.-A. I went over this list with Mr. Callaway. I questioned several of the books that are down on this list. I questioned particularly Ruling Case Law; but since being up here we have wired the Cooperative Publishing Co., and I find that was purchased and in the office at the time I went in. I can say this: That when I went in that office there was one complete private office lined with bookcases to the ceiling, full of books, and to the best of my knowledge this is a statement of those books. Some of them down here might not have been there; I could not swear to that; but I know there was one complete room full of books.

Q. Did you take them off, to the best of your knowledge and recollection, and was there only put down on that list the books that were in the office at the time of the dissolution of the firm?—A. To the best of my knowledge.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to offer that list in evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well; it may be received.

(The list was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 45.")

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I offer that in evidence. We do not have to print it. I will give the total number of volumes. I will let the managers see it first.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you add these up?—A. No; I did not add them up. Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will have these added up and simply state the number of the volumes. I thought they were added up. Meanwhile I will ask a question.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you identify and check over for Mr. Callaway the furniture that was in those offices at the time you went into them?-A. I did.

Q. Have you a memorandum of that?—A. I have. There is only one thing that I am not sure of-whether it was in there when I went in, or whether it came in shortly thereafter-but at least there was something in its place if it was not there, and that is one safe cabinet. The rest, I am sure, were all there.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to have that marked as an exhibit, and show it to the gentlemen on the other side

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 46.") Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will read this inventory in evidence, if Your Honor please:

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will get you to state whether or not you had any information, from conversations with Mr. Rankin or Mr. Ritter, with reference to whether or not there was a sale of that business at the time of the dissolution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom did you have the conversation?-A. When I went into the office I had my conversation with Judge Ritter and Judge Rankin about the cases I would share in, and what percentage I would get. As I say, there were several cases that were designated by Judge Ritter that he retained, would get his fee in those cases—"they had been substantially completed", I think were the words he used. The other cases, they were to stay in the business. He said at that time and in my presence and to me, he said, "Jack, I have sold out lock, stock, and barrel to Judge Rankin, with the exception of that picture of Chief Justice Marshall, and I will give that to you"; and I still have it. I did not hear any price mentioned at that time, but I did hear that conversation.

Q. Did you hear the price mentioned later?—A. Yes, sir. Q. When, and under what circumstances?-A. After I had been with Judge Rankin for quite some time, about a year and a half, I became a little dissatisfied. I came to the conclusion that I had money due me that I was not collecting. I talked it over with my wife and a friend of mine-a client and a friend. The reason I talked with him, I borrowed a little money from him to pay on the mortgage on my house, and I happened to mention to him at that time that the collections, as far as I was concerned, were slow. That was Mr. Hugh Dillman. He advised me to sue for an accounting, which I hesitated in doing until I talked with Judge Ritter. Mrs. Salisbury and I made a special trip to see Judge Ritter either the next day or the day after. I walked in and talked with Judge Ritter. I told him that I was having difficulty collecting money, and that I did not service man of the World War to the office of postmaster at think I was being paid what was due me. During the course of that conversation I remember that Judge Ritter told me, "I think Judge Rankin is honest; he is slow pay; I know that; but it is bad for a young lawyer to sue an older one, and my advice to you is not to sue him. Keep after him and you will eventually get everything that is coming to you." He said, "As a matter of fact, he has not as yet paid me what he owed me from our dissolution."

I came back from Miami to West Palm Beach. The same friend, Mr. Dillman, happened to be at my house for dinner that night, and I related to him the conversation that I had with Judge Ritter that day; and I determined not to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. having arrived, under the order heretofore entered, the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

At 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m., the Senate sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, suspended its proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. Robinson, it proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3483) to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Golds-BOROUGH, Mr. REILLY, Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, Mr. HOLLISTER, and Mr. Wolcott were appointed managers on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4387) for the relief of Barbara Backstrom.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11617) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Coosa River, Ga., and its tributaries, with a view to the control of their floods, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2042. An act for the relief of Grace Park, a minor, the Westerly Hospital, and Dr. H. M. Scanlon; and H.R. 11053. An act authorizing the President to present the Distinguished Service Medal to Commander Percy Todd. British Navy, and the Navy Cross to Lt. Comdr. Charles A. deW. Kitcat, British Navy.

AMENDMENT OF SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT, 1928

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation extending for 2 years the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928. of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission, and extending until March 10. 1938, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the War Claims Arbiter, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Lloyd Spetz Post, No. 1, the American Legion, of Bismarck, N. Dak., favoring the appointment of an exBismarck, N. Dak., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by La Societe Des 40 Hommes Et 8 Chevaux, of Bismarck, N. Dak., endorsing J. F. Fortenberry, a member of that society, for appointment as postmaster at Bismarck, N. Dak., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of 814 citizens, being railroad employees, of the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COOLIDGE presented a resolution of Lodge No. 662, International Association of Machinists of Dorchester, Mass., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Paul Revere Chapter, No. 46, of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 11334) to incorporate the Military Order of the Purple Heart, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the president of the Boothby Fibre Can Co., of Boston (Roxbury), Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called Robinson-Patman anti-price-discrimination bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Grace A. Garaway, of Waltham, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BENSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4416) for the relief of Josephine Russell, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1810) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3191) for the relief of John C. Crossman, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1811) thereon.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11573) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey", approved August 19, 1935, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1812) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3441) for the relief of C. T. Hird, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1813)

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H.R. 11476. A bill to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Lamar Lumber Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the West Pearl River at or near Talisheek, La.", approved June 17, 1930 (Rept. No. 1814);

H. R. 11685. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind. (Rept. No. 1815); and H.R. 11738. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Mississippi to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pearl River at or near Monticello, Miss. (Rept. No. 1816).

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4391) authorizing certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Army to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1823) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 10583. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination of the San Diego River and its tributaries in the State of California with a view to the control of its floods (Rept. No. 1817): and H.R. 11793. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination of various creeks in the State of California with a view to the control of their floods (Rept. No. 1818).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3762) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans secured by receipts on account of national-forest reserves, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1820) thereon.

Mr. DUFFY, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 6719. A bill to amend the Canal Zone Code (Rept. No. 1821); and

H. J. Res. 412. Joint resolution to authorize an investigation of the means of increasing capacity of the Panama Canal for future needs of interoceanic shipping, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1822).

INVESTIGATION OF THE DOMESTIC POTASH INDUSTRY

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 274) authorizing the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate and report on the domestic potash industry and laws and other matters relating thereto (submitted by Mr. PITTMAN on the 1st instant), reported it without amendment, and the resolution was ordered to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of

EXPENDITURES FOR COTTON COOPERATIVES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a report (No. 1819), pursuant to Senate Resolution 185 (submitted by Mr. McKellar and agreed to Aug. 24, 1935), concerning expenditures by the Federal Government for cotton cooperatives, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Your subcommittee heretofore appointed under authority of Senate Resolution 185, which is as follows:

"[S. Res. 185]

"[S. Res. 185]

"Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the expenditures by the Federal Government for cotton cooperatives and their losses heretofore sustained. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

"For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words, and the expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $1,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the

Met in the city of Memphis, Tenn., on Monday, October 28, 1935, where it proceeded to take the testimony of some eighty-odd witnesses concerning the expenditures of the cotton cooperatives and the losses of such cooperatives and other matters allied, connected with, and pertaining to such cooperatives and their losses, and having considered the same, beg leave to report to the full committee as follows: ORGANIZATION

The American Cotton Cooperative Association is a Delaware corporation and was incorporated January 11, 1930, with an authorized capital stock of $30,000,000, of which $76,950 was paid in, $40,600 of which was capital stock, this being afterward withdrawn and returned to the marketing associations, leaving an actual net capital of $36,350 (vol. II, exhibit 25). The capital was supposed to be paid in by the cotton cooperative marketing associations under the Capper-Volstead Act (vol. I, pp. 33-38).

Prior to that time the cooperative marketing associations had been exhibited under a precise set of Cooperative marketing associations.

been established under a previous act of Congress. In the 1929-30 season the A. C. C. A. handled no current cotton; it merely looked after cotton that the Government had previously acquired. The Federal Farm Board, with a $500,000,000 revolving fund created by Congress in the Agricultural Marketing Act, approved June 15, 1929, authorized the establishment of this cotton cooperative association (vol. I, p. 34).

ciation (vol. I, p. 34).

Mr. Creekmore became associated with the American Cotton Cooperative Association in April or May 1930 (vol. I, p. 6). Previous to that time the head of the cotton cooperatives was C. O. Moser, who acted prior thereto in a similar capacity to Mr. Creekmore (vol. I, p. 402). The plan of organization was that the several marketing associations, amounting to some 14 or 15 in number, or State or regional associations, or affiliates, as they have sometimes been called, became stockholders in the A. C. C. A. (vol. I, p. 34). These marketing associations, like the Mid-South at Memphis, were rather loosely formed organizations, but each one under the practical control of its managing officer. In additional control of the managing officer. one under the practical control of its managing officer. In addition to that, the managing officer was usually a member of the board of directors of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. These other cooperative associations, some 15 in number, were all more or less insolvent when the Farm Board began making loans to them at nominal rates of interest (vol. I, pp. 303-305; vol. II, exhibit 26). The names of these several State or regional marketing associations are as follows: Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association; Brazos Valley Cotton Cooperative Association; California Cotton Cooperative Association, Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association; Mid-South Cotton Growers Association (Memphis); Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association; North Carolina Cotton Growers Cooperative Cotton Association; Oklahoma Cotton Growers Association; South Carolina Cotton Cooperative Association; South Texas Cotton Cooperative Association; Texas Cotton Growers Association; Texas Cotton Growers Association; Texas Cotton Growers Association; Texas Cotton Growers Association.

In exhibit G to Mr. Creekmore's deposition the common stock of these several associations, owned by the several State or regional associations, was shown as $100 each of $1,500 in all, and this indicates, in the absence of proof, that all of the $76,950 had been returned, and in lieu thereof 1 share of common stock had been allotted to each constituent association; to may have been $36,350, more or less insolvent when the Farm Board began making loans invested in the A. C. C. A. is concerned, it may have been $36,350, or it may have been $1,500, or it may have been at all. It is true that afterward preferred stock was issued, but that will be considered later. Suffice it to say that this mammoth concern had no substantial capital paid in by those who controlled it and only a nominal capital, if any.

A. C. C. A. NOT A COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

The A. C. C. A. and its affiliates above named are not cotton cooperatives within the spirit and letter of the Capper-Volstead Act, or in any other sense cotton cooperatives, for the following

The commonly accepted definition of cotton cooperatives, as dis-closed by the undisputed evidence, is that it is an organization of cotton farmers for the purpose of selling their cotton for better prices and at a lower handling cost, and of otherwise marketing their cotton to mutual advantage, in which organization, where their cotton to mutual advantage, in which organization, where there are profits all the members shall share in them, and where there are losses each member will be assessed for its or his respective share of the losses. This definition is in keeping with that stated by the National Cooperative Council, of which President Williamson, of the A. C. C. A., is a member:

"Business cooperatives are created by farmers as agencies through which they collectively sell their products or purchase their supplies. Such cooperatives, being owned and controlled by the members, should at all times have the whole-hearted participation of those members in the risks, gains, and losses of the business operations. Therefore the members, in building such cooperatives, should invest therein substantial amounts of their own funds commensurate with the needs of the business (vol. I, p. 166)."

Now, under this definition and under the proof taken by your committee, it is perfectly clear that the American Cotton Cooperative Association is in no sense, except in name, a cotton cooperative association at all. This is apparent by applying the following facts to this definition:

1. The profits are not divided equally or proportionally, even assuming that there have been profits, and this is a doubtful assumption (Henry, vol. I, pp. 204-205; vol. II, exhibit 6).

2. The losses are not made good by the so-called member (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 18, 47, 159, 282; Williamson, vol. I, p. 330).

3. The so-called members do not invest therein substantial

3. The so-called members do not invest therein substantial amounts of their own funds and have never done so (membership fee only, Cannon, vol. I, p. 458; Smith, vol. I, p. 624; Stewart, vol. I, p. 336).

4. The so-called members have not the slightest control over the marketing of their cotton (Henry, vol. I, p. 228).

5. The so-called members take no risks. The only risk taken in the hysiness at all is the risk taken by the Construct (Henry the business at all is the risk taken by the Government (Henry, vol. I, p. 191).

6. They do not sell collectively (vol. II, exhibit 20; Henry, vol. I, p. 205; Creekmore, vol. I, p. 157).
7. The A. C. C. A. is not owned or controlled by its so-called members (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 155-156).

8. It is owned and controlled by its officers (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 155-156).

9. The members are not directly responsible for losses which

pp. 155-156).

9. The members are not directly responsible for losses which the cotton cooperatives may incur as a result of operations (House, vol. I, p. 492; Creekmore, vol. I, p. 47).

10. Profits, if any, have not been distributed to the individual producer members except in one instance, and even then not to the members of all of the affiliated associations, during an existence of 5 years (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 26).

11. The methods of securing members are of doubtful legality and oftentimes of plain duress (Baker, vol. I, pp. 530-533; Waddell, vol. I, p. 537; Lattimer, vol. I, p. 552; Salvo, vol. I, p. 547).

12. Operating on Government money, which forms the basis of its credit, the A. C. C. A. makes loans to its affiliated associations, which have gone through an evolution as its officers claim (Hutchinson, vol. I, p. 374), whereby all cooperative features have been eliminated and the cotton cooperatives are simply operating as cotton merchants (Thompson, vol. I, p. 542; Valentine, vol. I, p. 478; Reed, vol. I, p. 483; Mitchell, vol. I, p. 544; Everett, vol. I, p. 479).

13. In dealing with its so-called members, the organization frequently resorts to what may be called duress in padding its so-called membership rolls (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 14).

14. The prices paid by the A. C. C. A. to its so-called members are not higher than those paid by private cotton merchants (Gibson, vol. I, p. 545).

are not higher than those paid by private cotton merchants (Chisson, vol. I, p. 545).

15. The cost of handling is greater than when sold by private cotton merchants (Salvo, vol. I, p. 548; Henry, vol. I, p. 196).

16. The A. C. C. A. is not cooperative in fact but is composed of a closely knit organization with an interlocking directorate largely composed of its affiliates, all of which makes it simply a cotton merchant, buying from substantially any seller at the cheapest price possible and charging the farmer a very high cost for handling his cotton (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 155-156; Valentine, vol. I, p. 478). p. 478).

17. It has no county or local organization which meets and passes on their problems and since the organization of the A. C. C. A. has not had (Everett, vol. I, p. 481).

18. It violates the Capper-Volstead Act in that it has bought more bales of "futures" than it has bought actual cotton, and "futures" were not bought from the so-called members (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 107-109).

19. It violates the Capper-Volstead Act in that it has formed a closely knit corporation with its affiliates by which a minority of the members completely controls and dominates the other members of the association, and this is contrary to the first requirement that no member shall have more than one vote (Creekmore, vol. I,

20. It is of no more value to the farmer than is Weil & Co., McFadden & Co., Anderson-Clayton & Co., or any other large cotton merchant (Reed, vol. I, p. 483; Sanders, vol I, p. 486; Hermes, vol. I, p. 489).

21. Finally, in essence, it is simply the Government, acting through a few favored persons, engaging in the cotton business, competing with other private cotton merchants, sometimes putting such other merchants out of business and reducing many of them to penury and want, the Government taking continued, drastic, and almost inconceivable losses, due in many instances to gambling in cotton, without the slightest benefit to the farmer or to the Government, the only benefits going to the small coterie of officers and agents of the A. C. C. A. and its affiliates.

It is true that it was claimed that the so-called members were indirectly assessable for losses in that the American Cotton Co-operative Association and its subsidiaries had accumulated reserves which belonged to the farmer-members, one-half of which was put in a reserve fund to be used to pay such losses if such reserve fund was sufficient. In the opinion of the committee, there were no reserves and are not now any reserves and have not been any at any time.

It was undisputed that the Government had saved these cotton cooperatives in 1929 at a cost of $79,286,384.13 and had saved them again in 1933 to the extent of $27,376,998.06, and Mr. Creekthem again in 1933 to the extent of $27,376,998.06, and Mr. Creekmore, the vice president and general manager, and the dominating official of that organization, testified that if the Government withdrew its support now, all operations would practically cease. His exact testimony is as follows: "I don't see how the cooperatives could continue." Under these circumstances, the reserves can at best be called, in formal banking parlance, "window dressing."

dressing."

The same is even more true of the affiliated associations.

It is quite clear that the American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates are not cotton cooperates, but with the practically unlimited backing of the Federal Government constitute simply another great cotton buyer or merchant.

It may be said in closing this paragraph that the business and operation of the American Cotton Cooperative Association not only violates the definition of cotton cooperatives heretofore stated, but it is in no sense such a cooperative association as is provided for in the Capper-Volstead Act under which it was organized. organized.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES

Six of the managing directors of six of the State organizations are also directors of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. Half of the salaries of these six directors are paid by the central organization of the A. C. C. A. These are: C. C. Selden, California association; W. R. Squires, Southwestern Irrigated Association; P. E. Harrill, Oklahoma association; A. D. Stewart, Mississippi association; J. A. Beatty, Alabama association; J. S. Hathecek, South Carolina association.

To these six must be added M. N. C. Williams

To these six must be added Mr. N. C. Williamson, of the Louisiana association, who receives no salary but a per diem of $25 is paid him, also Mr. Charles G. Henry, of the Mid-South Association at Memphis, who does not draw a salary from the A. C. C. A., but who is one of the directors, and it is easy to see from his testimony and from Mr. Creekmore's testimony the close cooperation between them (vol. I, p. 155).

The other six directors seem to be beyond the pale and certainly have no potential vote, as they receive no salary either from the central association or their own organizations (vol. I, p. 156).

It thus appears that the American Cotton Cooperative Association constitutes, with its affiliates, a close corporation managed solely for the benefit of the central association and the officers and employees of the favored members of its directorate.

MEMBERSHIP

The officers of the cotton cooperatives claim that their membership in the United States in these 15 associations numbers 259,000.

ship in the United States in these 15 associations numbers 259,000. A list of the members was requested by the committee, but the same was refused unless the committee would keep it confidential. Although the committee called for a complete list, it was furnished with a list of only two associations—that of the Mid-South and the Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Associations. The list of the two associations was accepted, but has not been opened (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 172). However, there was much evidence concerning membership. That evidence is practically undisputed.

undisputed.

Through the fiction of the immediate fixation pool, which is in effect an outright purchase of cotton by the cotton cooperatives, they sign up as a member every individual who sells them a bale or more of cotton and the bulk of their deliveries are secured through this immediate fixation pool.

Many years before the organization of the A. C. C. A. it seems there were associations formed in various cotton localities of the United States. Since the A. C. C. A. came into existence, there have been few members obtained except under what may be termed substantial duress. Since the organization of the A. C. C. A., they have come to adopt the following methods in obtaining members: Whenever a bale or a number of bales of cotton were delivered to the cotton cooperatives, there was included in the bill of sale, and whenever a base of a number of bases of cotton were derivered to the cotton cooperatives, there was included in the bill of sale, and afterward in the check by which the cotton was paid for, a state-ment to the effect that the seller or deliverer, by reason of his bill of sale, and of his receipt of the money, became a member of the cooperative association (Baker, vol. I, pp. 530-531; Black, vol. I,

p. 437).

To put it in the language of one of the witnesses, after the purchase was made and everything completed except the delivery of the money, the seller would be informed by the cotton cooperatives' agent that he would be paid only by the statement in writing that he was a member, and if he dealt for others, that by the signing of the draft, he made his principals members of the cooperative association.

of the draft, he made his principals members of the cooperative association.

A membership obtained in this way, in the opinion of the committee, is substantial coercion, and it is exceedingly doubtful if by any such proceeding membership in the organization could be legally or morally brought about. In the absence of local organizations where members met, and in the absence of any meeting for consideration of the cotton cooperatives' problems, it is perfectly apparent that such a membership is not real in any sense and doesn't make the seller of the cotton a member at all, although he states in his bill of sale or check that he becomes a member.

The fact is, however, that the undisputed evidence shows that with a few exceptions in certain counties in Mississippi and Greer County, Okla., and perhaps one or two more, there are no local organizations of cotton cooperatives anywhere, and even in Mississippi, judging from the testimony of the head of the A. C. C. A. in that State, whatever organizations there are were controlled by the same cotton cooperative association (Windle, vol. I, p. 367; Orr, vol. I, p. 592; Garner, vol. I, p. 604).

The proof shows that the actual membership of the organization is largely confined to those in the employ of the A. C. C. A. and its affiliates. While the membership was challenged time and again, the cotton cooperatives made no effort to show an actual membership except in the way above stated, and while the record is not at all clear, your subcommittee believes that the actual membership in the association amounts to only a few interested people.

interested people.

FINANCIAL STRUCTURE

The original financial structure of the American Cotton Cooperative Association is exceedingly interesting. The evidence of the cotton cooperatives was that $30,000,000 was the authorized capital, of which $800,000 was subscribed, and of this amount only $79,950 was actually paid in, as stated. Of the $76,950 paid in cash, the A. C. C. A. refunded in cash payments of the Oklahoma and other of the affiliated associations in the aggregate sum of $40,600, so the actual paid-in capital was $36,350; however, the revolving fund of $500,000,000 had been set up by the Hoover administration to be loaned the farmers, and it seems that a capital of $36,350 was ample to get a Government loan.

When the A. C. C. A. was organized and put under the direction of Mr. Creekmore, all of the cooperatives were in financial straits, and the most of them were in actual bankruptcy, as testified to by Mr. Legge, the then chairman of the Farm Board, in January of 1931. The original financial structure of the American Cotton Coop-

The first operation of the A. C. C. A. after its organization in 1930, was the Cotton Stabilization Corporation. By this operation 1,300,000 bales, in round numbers, of cotton owned by the A. C. C. A. and its affiliates were sold to the Cotton Stabilization Corporation, and that corporation agreed to hold the cotton at its original cost, plus charges, for the purpose of holding it off the market and to keep the various cotton cooperatives out of bankruptcy (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 34).

This Stabilization Corporation was a Delaware corporation, but its officers, agents, and offices were the same officers, agents, and offices as those of the American Cotton Cooperative Association. This was a matter of bookkeeping and of high finance, and in a short time about $80,000,000 was lost (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 34-36).

34-36).

Your committee will now consider these several losing operations of the American Cotton Cooperative Association.

THE STABILIZATION CORPORATION AND THE 16-CENT LOAN

The first major operation with regard to cotton after the Agricultural Marketing Act was passed on May 15, 1929, was the formation of the Stabilization Corporation and the 16-cent loan, taken together.

together.

The Stabilization Corporation was organized in May of 1930, with an authorized capital stock of $15,000,000, all of which was advanced from the revolving fund of the Farm Board (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 35). The first major operation with regard to cotton was announced by the Federal Farm Board on October 21, 1929. Exactly 10 days before this announcement, Mr. C. O. Moser, the then president and general manager of the American Cotton Growers Exchange (the central cotton-cooperative organization which preceded the American Cotton Cooperative Association), wrote a long letter to Mr. Carl Williams, cotton member of the Federal Farm Board, in which Mr. Moser urged the adoption of 16-cent loan as the "joint policy of the cotton cooperatives and the Farm Board."

The price of cotton steadily declined, and by the early spring of

The price of cotton steadily declined, and by the early spring of 1930 the cotton cooperatives were again confronted with bank-ruptcy. The losses, according to Mr. Creekmore's estimate, of the A. C. C. A. in its Stabilization Corporation and 16-cent loan, amounted to the enormous sum of $79,286,384.13. The Stabilization Corporation not only had this 1,300,000 bales of actual cotton, but it also had a large number of bales of "futures" which had been acquired from time to time.

THE DOLLAR-AND-A-HALF-PER-BALE LOANS

Although the Stabilization Corporation took over the 16-cent discovered that liens of private banks and balances due farmer members had to be paid before the Government could acquire title to the cotton. In order to do this, the Stabilization Corporation assumed $2,462,351.81 as an added cost of the cotton and the Farm Board loaned the cotton cooperatives $1.50 per bale, in the aggregate sum of $1,704,047.46.

Incidentally, the funds loaned under the $1.50-per-bale plan were lost by the Government in making compromise settlements of indebtedness with the Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Alabama cooperatives. Thus, for the second time within a few weeks the Government produced funds to save the cotton cooperatives from bankruptcy.

THE 90-PERCENT ADVANCE

Despite the efforts of the cotton cooperatives and the Farm Board, the price of cotton continued to decline; whereupon in August 1930 the cotton cooperatives and the Farm Board entered into an agreement whereby the members of the cotton cooperatives would be advanced 90 percent of the market price of cotton at the time of delivery (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 37). Although Mr. Creekmore testified at the agricultural conference and Farm Board inquiry in 1931 that he entered into the plan with a full realization of its hazards, he stated that he was optimistic as to its ultimate outcome (Creekmore, agricultural conference and Farm Board inquiry, p. 310).

The facts are that this operation again rendered the cotton cooperatives bankrupt, and in order to rescue them, the Government in 1933 had to assume another loss, which Mr. Creekmore testified amounted to $27,376,998.04 (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 37). According to Mr. Creekmore, he estimates that the losses on the two transactions (the 16-cent loan of 1929–30 and the 90-percent advance of 1930–31) aggregated $107,113,441.54 (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 37). However, Mr. Despite the efforts of the cotton cooperatives and the Farm Board.

aggregated $107.113.441.54 (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 37). However, Mr. Creekmore's estimate is based on his exception to the statutory allowances made for the cotton donated to the Red Cross. The actual loss sustained by the Government on the two transactions has been approximately $140,000,000.

THE PRAZIER BULL

Senate Joint Resolution 38, introduced by Senator Lynn Frazier, of North Dakota, proposes a reopening of the settlements made by the Farm Board with the wheat and cotton cooperatives on the theory that the various stabilization operations were done on the authority of the Farm Board which made the cooperatives, both wheat and cotton, its unwilling agents in carrying out these opera-

As far as the cotton cooperatives are concerned, such an argument is not sound, because the 16-cent loan was made at the earnest solicitation of and on the basis suggested by the cotton cooperatives; and by Mr. Creekmore's own admission he entered into the 90-percent loan with a full realization of its hazards, but with the hope the real with a full realization of its hazards, but with the hope it would work out eventually.

Now, it must be remembered that Mr. C. O. Moser was the predecessor of Mr. Creekmore, he being president of the American Cotton Growers Exchange. The evidence discloses an announcement by the Farm Board on October 21, 1929, as follows:

"The Federal Farm Board believes that the prevailing prices for tton are too low * * *. The Board will make supplemental cotton are too low to the cooperatives in amounts sufficient to make the average loan total 16 cents per pound."

Just 10 days prior to this announcement Mr. C. O. Moser, pres dent of the American Cotton Growers Exchange (which was the predecessor of the A. C. C. A.), wrote a long letter to Mr. Carl Williams, the cotton member of the Federal Farm Board, setting out the conditions as he saw them in reference to cotton, and strongly urging the Farm Board order just set out above. Among other things, Mr. Moser said:

"* * It is therefore at a time like this that it is possible for us to advance nearer the market price than it would have been earlier in the season, when the size of the crop is less a calculable thing than it is now. I believe the cotton cooperatives, with the aid of the Farm Board, may with safety, and they should immediately, advance 16 cents a pound, or $80 a bale, on unfixed cotton, basis \(\frac{7}{6}\)-inch Middling; and that wide publicity to such advance should be given as being the joint program of the cotton cooperatives and the Farm Board, and that the difference between 65 percent advanced at the time of delivery and the $80 a bale should be paid as soon as weight and grade of the cotton is established" (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 34; Williams, vol. I, pp. 399 through to 402).

The evidence discloses that the cotton cooperatives and the Federal Farm Board order, and no person who was then connected with either the Farm Board or the cotton cooperatives has testified to the contrary. It is therefore at a time like this that it is possible for with either the Farm Board of the cotton cooperatives has testined to the contrary.

Mr. Stone, the tobacco member of the Farm Board, who was put on the stand by the cotton cooperatives, testified that there were daily conferences. It is apparent from the evidence that this order of the Board, if not directly secured by the cotton cooperatives, was issued with the full knowledge, consent, and approval of the cotton cooperatives (Stone, vol. I, p. 570). Copy of this Moser letter was sent to all members of the regional or State cotton cooperatives (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 522).

Shortly after this operation began the price of cotton began to go down. Within 6 months it had dropped from 18.23 cents per pound to 12.41 cents per pound and continued to drop. The cotton cooperatives' loss on this cotton was something like $79,000,000 on the 16-cent loan (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 35).

In view of the Moser letter, relating to the 16-cent loan, and Mr. Creekmore's statements at the agricultural conference and Farm Board inquiry, and his letter to Mr. Carl Williams, under date of November 16, 1932, with regard to the 90-percent loan, the Frazier bill must fail as far as cotton cooperatives are concerned.

It will thus be seen that every attempt of the cotton cooperatives the farme the second of the cotton cooperatives are concerned.

It will thus be seen that every attempt of the cotton coopera-tives backed by the Farm Board to benefit the farmers by in-creasing their prices in these various ways was a failure; however, each one, it was developed, was advertised to the whole country as a panacea for the low price of cotton, with the result that not only were the cotton cooperatives, then controlling about 15 percent of the cotton, rendered backrupt, but the mills and the dealers and the farmers were all affected in the same way and their losses were tremendous.

These outside farmers and outside dealers and mills handled 85 percent of the cotton, and, of course, 85 percent of the loss fell on them, and neither the old Farm Board nor the cotton cooperatives was of any value or aid in the stabilization of the price of cotton, notwithstanding the enormous sums of money that were used in the various operations.

A year or two ago a bill was introduced by Senator Frazier, of North Dakota, which provided that the settlement of the Farm Board with wheat cooperatives be reopened for the purpose of giving the wheat farmers an opportunity of showing that their cooperative losses were the result of the action of the Farm

Board and not of the cooperatives.

Later on another bill was introduced in which cotton was added, and that bill has been pending in Congress for some time.

The bill provided as follows:

"[S. J. Res. 38, Apr. 15, 1935]

"Joint resolution for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative-marketing associations

"Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative-marketing associations dealing in grain during the stabilization operations of the Federal Farm Board in the years 1929 and 1930 when such cooperative-marketing associations were induced and requested by the erative-marketing associations were induced and requested by the Federal Farm Board to withhold grain and/or cotton from the market and to make advances to their members in order to stabilize prices, the Federal Farm Credit Administration is hereby authorized and directed to make such adjustments and settlements in accordance with the understanding that such cooperative-marketing associations had with the Federal Farm Board, and on the basis of a price or a sum equal to the amount directly loaned or advanced to such associations plus carrying charges and operation costs in connection with such grain and/or cotton from the date of the loans or advances to the date that such grain and/or cotton was finally taken over by the Federal Farm Board or delivered pursuant to its instructions."

This bill has delayed in the Senate from time to time.

It is perfectly apparent from the facts brought out in the investigation that the cotton cooperatives, through Mr. Moser, the predecessor of Mr. Creekmore, recommended this loan and urged the Farm Board to adopt it, and after they had urged such adoption they cannot now be heard to say that further losses by them should be paid by the Farm Board or by the Government.

It was also developed in the hearings that this claim for a reopening of the settlements heretofore made by the Farm Board with the cotton cooperatives was first made by Mr. Creekmore on the 16th day of November 1932, when he wrote Mr. Carl Williams, cotton member of the Farm Board, making the claim that the cotton cooperatives were entitled to certain losses which they sustained on the 16-cent cotton (Stone, vol. I, p. 573).

It is perfectly apparent, therefore, that Mr. Moser, the predecessor of Mr. Creekmore, acting for the cotton cooperatives, having in like manner recommended the settlement between the Government and the cotton cooperatives on the 16-cent loan, the cotton cooperatives are now bound by the action taken by Mr. Moser as cooperatives are now bound by the action taken by Mr. Moser as set out in his letter. The letter of Mr. Moser was sent to all of the cotton cooperatives (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 522).

Besides, in the memorandum put in the record by Mr. Creekmore

Besides, in the memorandum put in the record by Mr. Creekmore he states:

"After many conferences regarding a settlement, a compromise agreement was reached in May 1930 by a representative of the cooperatives with the Chairman of the Farm Board, in the presence of the Vice Chairman, the cotton member, and the general counsel of the Board, whereby the cooperatives were to be reimbursed by a stabilization corporation, to be later organized, on the basis of the loan value on all cotton on hand, plus carrying charges, plus $1 per bale overhead on deliveries received during the 1929 season (Stone, vol. I, p. 578)."

This agreement was disapproved by the Attorney General, and later on a settlement was made as follows:

later on a settlement was made as follows:
"The general basis of settlement, as finally worked out by the Farm Board, resulted in the Cotton Stabilization Corporation tak-Farm Board, resulted in the Cotton Stabilization Corporation car-ing over the cooperatives' cotton on the basis of the loan value, with an allowance of not to exceed $2.50 per bale for carrying charges, payable only to the extent necessary to meet the obliga-tions of the cooperatives after borrowing from the Farm Board $1.50 per bale listed on prior seasons' deliveries. This loan was to be repaid by deductions of 50 cents per bale from the members' proceeds on deliveries in future years (Stone, vol. I, p. 578)."

UNDER THE NEW ADMINISTRATION

UNDER THE NEW ADMINISTRATION

The foregoing is a history of the operations of the cotton coperatives with the Farm Board up until March 4, 1933. The Congress meeting that year repealed the Farm Board Act and passed what is known as the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which set up the Farm Credit Administration in place of the Farm Board. At that time the cotton cooperatives owed the Government $207,418,246.48. (See McNary report, p. 35.)

At that time cotton was worth somewhere around 5 or 6 cents a pound, and the Farm Board, which had had appropriations to be used as a revolving fund of $500,000,000, and the A. C. C. A. had been financed by the Farm Board, were all in a state of bank-ruptcy, and their debts had to be assumed by the Government, amounting to $27,376,998.06, as outlined in the 90-percent loan loss. Also the State associations benefited under the terms of the A. A. A. adjustment by additional payments authorized by Congress in connection with the settlement of the 1930-31 operations. Seven hundred and thirty-two thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and eighty-seven cents were paid in this adjustment.

tions. Seven hundred and thirty-two thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and eighty-seven cents were paid in this adjustment (S. Rept. No. 1456, p. 22).

In other words, the new administration of Mr. Roosevelt started off by wiping the slate clean and taking over all the cotton into what was known as the Oscar Johnson pool. Thus the cotton cooperatives were again saved from bankruptcy, and the Government, through Mr. Johnson, took over about 1,300,000 bales of actual cotton and approximately another million bales of futures which the A. C. C. A. had gathered in during the years of their reculation.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Government continued to loan money to the cotton cooperatives, but under the provisions of the A. A. A., acreage was reduced, through voluntary action, and Government rentals on land not cultivated in cotton was established.

Then the Bankhead Act was passed to regulate the number of bales produced.

bales produced.

Also the processing tax was put on to pay the cotton farmer for

Also the processing tax was put on to pay the cotton farmer for the rentals on land not used in producing cotton.

The above three enactments, passed in 1933, did what the Farm Board and the cotton cooperatives had tried in vain to accomplish since July 1929, namely, the price of cotton began to rise and the general trend has been upward ever since.

In March 1933 cotton was selling at between 5 and 6 cents a pound. By July 1933 cotton had risen to 9½ cents. By September 1933 it was 10 cents. By January 1934 it was 11½ cents, and by March 1934 it was 12½ cents. In July 1934 it was 13.15 cents.

In the fall of 1933, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Secretary Wallace announced a Government loan of 10 cents a pound on cotton, and this operated throughout the year 1933-34.

In August 1934 that loan was increased to 12 cents. The 10-cent loan did not seem to interfere with the movement of cotton. Indeed, it was under that loan that the price went from 10 to 13 cents, and it was thought that if the Government made a loan of 12 cents it would still further increase the price, but it did not have that effect and cotton went down some in 1934 and 1935, and in the summer of 1935 the loan offered by the Government was reduced again to 10 cents. Cotton is now selling at figures ranging from 11½ cents to 12½ cents.

11½ cents to 12½ cents.
This is the history of what has been done under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

THE A. C. C. A. UNDER THE A. A. A.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act the A. C. C. A. has continued to borrow money from the Government; however, it and its affiliates have from time to time discarded practically all of their cooperative features until now, through their central organization, the cotton cooperatives have become one of the largest cotton dealers in the country.

dealers in the country.

It will be remembered that Mr. Creekmore testified that the cotton cooperatives and affiliates would have failed in 1929 and 1930 and that they would have been bankrupt if the Government had not assumed their debts. He testified that again in 1933 the A. C. C. A. and its affiliates were bankrupt and would have gone into bankruptcy if the Government had not assumed their debts (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 16).

He also testified that at the present time without Government subsidies and bounties they could not continue to operate (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 120–121).

THE A. C. C. A. UNDER THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

The cotton cooperatives, under the present administration, have The cotton cooperatives, under the present administration, have undergone what one witness described as an "evolution." No longer do they advance money to their producer members on his cotton which is pooled with other cotton of like description and character. By means of the immediate fixation pool, the cotton cooperatives buy cotton just as any other merchant does, and the immediate fixation pool is simply a fiction whereby they can make outright purchases.

Under the present administration the A. C. C. A. has made or claims to have made approximately $2,500,000 from the handling of cotton owned or controlled by the Government, but during the same period it has lost about $1,500,000 on its operations for its own account.

own account.

INTEREST RATES AND PROFITS

But the Government continued to lend money to the coopera-But the Government continued to lend money to the cooperatives in 1933 and 1934 at ridiculously low rates of interest, and they were relending the money to their affiliates at a much higher rate of interest and making great profits thereby (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 52-53). They also made profits from the handling of the old stabilization corporation cotton, and in the 10-cent loan and in the 12-cent loan, and also on what is known as the Oscar Johnson pool cotton, which was the cotton accumulated by the A. C. C. A. under the 90-percent advance in 1930-31. They now claim to have made very substantial profits in 1933-34, that they had losses in 1934-35, and for the present it isn't clear whether they are making money now or not. they are making money now or not,

The American Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed money from the Government under a "joker" statute—that is to say, at rates of interest ranging from one-eighth of 1 percent to 1% percent. A statute had been passed by the Congress allowing money to be loaned to farmers at the same rate of interest that the Government paid for money.

the Government paid for money.

The purpose of this statute was this: At the time of its passage the Government was borrowing money on its bonds at from one-eighth of 1 percent to 1% percent and the Congress did not wish to have the farmer charged any more for the money than the Government was paying for it; however, Mr. Andrew Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury at the time and he gave this statute a different construction from that intended by the Congress. He held that the lowest rate of interest meant any low rate, and he had been borrowing money on some classes of temporary certificates at as low as one-eighth of 1 percent; therefore, the farmers got some of their money at rates of interest as low as one-eighth of 1 percent. This was never intended by the Congress, and when the matter came out an act was promptly passed allowing the of I percent. This was never intended by the Congress, and when the matter came out an act was promptly passed allowing the cooperatives to borrow money at 3 percent. As long as this statute was on the books, however, it seems that the American Cotton Cooperative Association borrowed money from the Government, of course, but when the new statute of 3 percent was passed, Mr. Creekmore looked about to see if he couldn't get the money at a small rate, and he made an agreement with the Chase National and other banks in New York to borrow the money at 11th percent (Creekmore, vol. 1, p. 53).

PINANCIAL OPERATIONS

Mr. Creekmore testified that the cotton cooperatives had a line Mr. Creekmore testified that the cotton cooperatives had a line of credit with the Farm Credit Administration of about fifteen and one-half millions of dollars and that he had a line of credit with private banks of something like $75,000,000 and that he had actually borrowed in 1 year $55,000,000. This Government credit, coupled with a practice by the Washington office of subordinating the Government loans to private loans brought about an immense change in the cotton cooperatives' business.

the cotton cooperatives the member would later receive what was called a "patronage dividend." It developed that only one patronage dividend had been declared in 5 years and that patronage dividend was 56 cents per bale in some districts, notably in Mississippi.

In one district, notably in Tennessee and Arkansas, the patronage dividend was credited on a debt due by the Mid-South (Henry, vol.

dividend was credited on a debt due by the Mid-South (Henry, vol. I, p. 205).

It is very clear that when the farmer sold his cotton and when the cooperatives purchased his cotton under the so-called immediate fixation pool, the farmer regarded it as a sale and the cotton cooperatives regarded it as a purchase, and the American Cotton Cooperative Association and its affiliates became nothing but a huge cotton-buying concern with Government aid.

The so-called patronage dividend might well be likened to a transaction by which when a person enters a drug store or any other store and buys an article, he is frequently given a coupon with his purchase, with the statement on the coupon that when the purchaser gets a million coupons he will be entitled to a prize box of candy.

box of candy.

This patronage dividend did not deceive the farmers at all, as appears from the proof, because they never expected to get anything further, but apparently it has deceived the executives in charge of the Farm Credit Administration up to this time.

ALADDIN'S LAMP

The Federal Government has been a veritable financial Aladdin's lamp to the American Cotton Cooperative Association. When the amp to the American Cotton Cooperative Association. When the cotton cooperatives could borrow money from the Government at from one-half of 1 percent to 1 percent interest and lend it out to their subordinates at from 5 to 6 percent, this was pretty easy financial picking. When the Congress passed the 3-percent loan, however, it was necessary to do some refinancing, and then the plan was adopted to borrow from private banks at 1½ percent with the Government at Washington subordinating its liens to those of the private banks. By what right the Government at Washington subordinating its liens to those of the private banks. By what right the Government at Washington did this has not been disclosed, but it was done, and the cooperatives borrowed as much as $55,000,000 in 1 year, with the Government's liens on the cotton made subordinate to those of the private banks.

Even with all this money the American Cotton Cooperative A Even with all this money the American Cotton Cooperative Association had to have working capital—and how to get it was the next problem. The private banks would not lend to them at 1½ percent unless the Government subordinated its liens. The Government, in the second year, decided it would not subordinate its liens, and thereupon the following plan was adopted: The A. C. C. A. in some manner that has not been fully explained, caused its State associations, each one individually, to borrow from the Farm Credit Administration sums aggregating $5,000,000, to be turned over to the American Cotton Cooperative Association, and the State associations to receive preferred stock in the American Cotton Cooperative Association for the money (Daley, vol. I, p. 93). In other words, the American Cotton Cooperative Association

In other words, the American Cotton Cooperative Association did not borrow the money, and, remarkable to tell, the individual State associations borrowed this money and took stock in the American Cotton Cooperative Association for it.

Exhibit C to Mr. Creekmore's testimony shows that the following companies borrowed from the Farm Credit Administration the $5,000,000 and turned it over to the A. C. C. A.:

ı	Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association	$400,000
ı	Brazos Valley Cotton Cooperative Association	425,000
ı	California Cotton Cooperative Association	175,000
ı	Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association
ı	Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association	800,000
ı	Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association	800,000
ı	Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Association	500,000
ı	South Carolina Cotton Growers' Association	200,000
ı	South Texas Cotton Cooperative Association	200,000
ı	Southwestern Irrigated Cotton Growers	200,000
ı	West Texas Cotton Growers' Association	500,000

Now, let's analyze these transactions.

The Alabama Cotton Cooperative Association had been wound up in receivership, and, of course, it is inconceivable that the Government would lend to this bankrupt concern $400,000.

The Brazos Valley Cotton Cooperative Association had no assets of any kind and this was admitted by its officers (McCrary, vol. I, p. 356).

The California Cotton Cooperative Association, Ltd., there was no proof about.

The Georgia Cotton Cooperative Association is now being wound up through a receivership (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 9, Williams, vol.

The Louisiana Cotton Cooperative Association, there was no evidence concerning ($365,000 stock in A. C. C. A.; Williams, vol. I, ordinating the Government loans to private loans brought about an immense change in the cotton cooperatives' business.

The cotton cooperatives gave up their seasonal pools and their optional pools and their long-time holding of cotton and began what Mr. Creekmore termed the "immediate fixation pool", and the proof clearly shows that the immediate fixation pool is nothing in the world but a purchase of the cotton from the farmer by the cotton cooperatives.

It is true that it was claimed that they held out to the farmer when they bought his cotton that if there was any profit made by

The Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association is supposed to be a going concern, but its assets were not disclosed (about $360,000; Stewart, vol. I, p. 342).

The Oklahoma Cotton Growers' Association had recently been sold by the Government, lock, stock, and barrel, to the A. C. C. A. itself, and the Government had lost something like half a million dollars by it, and yet this bankrupt concern was allowed by the Commodity Credit Corporation to borrow $500,000 and invest it in the stock of the A. C. C. A. (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 27-29).

The South Carolina Association had likewise had to compromise its affairs at a great loss to the Government (McCutcheon, vol. I.

its affairs at a great loss to the Government (McCutcheon, vol. I,

p. 152).
The South Texas Association; its assets were not disclosed.

The Texas Cotton Cooperative Association; its assets were not disclosed.

The West Texas Cotton Growers' Association admitted that they had no assets of any kind (Lee, vol. I, p. 361).

Thus we see that the enormous sum of $5,000,000 was loaned by the Government to the several associations, none of which were able to borrow any such sums with any expectation of paying them back, and none of which borrowed for themselves, but for the benefit of the A. C. C. A.

The whole transaction, in the opinion of your subcommittee, was a fraud upon the Government.

What was the purpose of this transaction? Although the A. C. C. A. had failed twice, costing the Government something like $140,000,000, and although it admits that it is now insolvent unless $140,000,000, and although it admits that it is now insolvent unless the Government continues its aid, yet it claims to have put some $4,000,000 in reserve and issued stock therefor, and that it has a line of credit, as testified to by Mr. Creekmore, of $15,500,000 with the Farm Credit Administration, and $75,000,000 with private banks; and under these circumstances the question naturally arises: Why did the A. C. C. A. have to erect this amazingly peculiar financial structure in order to obtain working capital?

It is the opinion of your subcommittee that these loans are virtually worthless and the Government will be unable to collect them.

THE COOPERATIVES AND THE SEED-LOAN BORROWERS

The Congress having passed a law that cooperatives should be encouraged in every way possible, the Federal Farm Credit Administration recommended that the seed-loan cotton should be turned over as far as possible to the cotton cooperatives, and this was done.

was done.

And look at the charges that were made: $1.30 per bale other than seasonal charges. What they were nobody knows; $5 for membership fee; 50 cents for a newspaper publication (Henry, vol. I, p. 197 through 202).

These charges were unconscionable and indefensible. Take the poor seed-loan borrower who can get credit nowhere else to make a crop, who was the poorest of the poor, and who in order to maintain himself and family had to borrow the pitifully small sum that he was allowed to borrow from the seed-loan office; and think of charges other than storage, insurance, and interest, mounting up to him of more than $11 per bale—more than 13 percent of the value of the cotton—taken out of the cotton for this enormous trust in the cotton-buying business known as the American Cotton Cooperative Association (Henry, vol. I, p. 232).

To my mind the most condemning fact brought out was the treatment of the seed-loan borrower by the A. C. C. A. and its affiliates.

GOVERNMENT BOUNTY AND FAVORITISM

Remember that the American Cotton Cooperative Association has been in existence for 5 years.

The following sums have been paid to the American Cotton Cooperative Association by the Government on Government-controlled cotton as services and expenses, by years:

1930-31	$531, 710.32
1931-32	907, 909. 87
1932-33	883, 032, 84
1933-34	789, 060. 65
1934-35	724, 499, 33
totaling $3,836,213.01, or an average per year of $767,4	99.33.

All of this is obtained from Mr. Creekmore's exhibit Q and his testimony.

testimony.

It is true that expenses apportioned to the Stabilization Corporation out of the above, amounted to $1,278,967.43, but since that corporation was officered and serviced by exactly the same people as the American Cotton Cooperative Association, that was a mere matter of bookkeeping (Creekmore, vol. 2, p. 215).

Over and above this income the A. C. C. A. made enormous sums out of interest annually by charging the member associations more than they paid the Government for the money. The interest sheets have not yet been furnished, but Mr. Creekmore says he will furnish them and the amount that the Government gave them under interest transactions will be shown and made a part of this paragraph. Over and above the income which the American Cotton Cooperative Association made, the affiliated associations made additional interest on the loans made by them to individual members (Creekmore, vol. I, p. 57).

In other words, the farmer paid the bill, except when there was a loss, and kindly Congress assumed these enormous losses.

RECONCENTRATION OF COTTON

Much of the $3,836,213.01 was for reconcentrating and otherwise handling Government cotton. But last spring or early summer another reconcentration of cotton was ordered. Announcements were made by the Federal Farm Credit Administration that bids would be received for reconcentration of cotton on which the Government had a lien, for the purpose of making room for the new cotton crop of 1935-36. It was estimated that it would be necessary to reconcentrate some three millions of bales. Bids were put in to do this handling by the A. C. C. A. by John M. Parker & Co., of New Orleans, and others.

Mr. Parker testified that they put in a bid to reconcentrate this cotton for 40 cents per bale flat (Parker, vol. I, p. 495).

The A. C. C. A. put in a bid for reconcentrating the first 500,000 bales at 48 cents, the second 500,000 at 45 cents, the third 500,000 at 40 cents, and any additional bales for 35 cents (Parker, vol. I, pp. 498-499).

pp. 498-499)

pp. 498-499).

Up to the time of the hearing only 1,600,000 bales had been reconcentrated. Whether there would have been any more was not known. But it must be remembered that the A. C. C. A. had received 48 cents a bale on the first 500,000 bales, 45 cents on the second 500,000 bales, and 40 cents on the third 500,000 bales—and then they handled very little more. So that the average price of handling the cotton was more than 43 cents per bale, while Mr. Parker offered to reconcentrate the cotton for 40 cents per bale, and if the Parker bid had been accepted—and he represented a and if the Parker bid had been accepted—and he represented a responsible firm—the Government would have saved some fifty to seventy thousand dollars by giving the bid to him. But the A. C. C. A. got the job.

Some question was raised as to whether the Department had the right to let this contract without advertising for bids. No bids were advertised for.

In connection with this reconcentration of cotton, Mr. R. L.
Taylor, president of the Federal Compress Co., which warehouses the cotton in the Memphis district, or a large part of it, stated that he offered to reconcentrate all of the cotton in his district necessary to be reconcentrated without charge. The bid to do it for nothing was declined (Taylor, vol. I, p. 420).

Mr. Parker testified that the reconcentration of this cotton was very expensive to the farmer, and this testimony was not in any way denied (Parker, vol. I, p. 502).

When the cotton goes in the warehouse it is sampled, and when it was reconcentrated the Government required it to be sampled again, and by regulation these second samples were destroyed so far as the use of them was concerned, but it was said that the A. C. C. A. credited the value of them to the Federal Farm Credit Administration. However, Mr. Parker testified that when the cotton is sold it must again be sampled.

Now, the amount taken out at each one of these sampling oper-

Now, the amount taken out at each one of these sampling operations ranges from three-quarters of a pound to a pound, and thus the farmer is deprived of these three samples, at the present price of cotton, or 3 to 35 cents per bale (Parker, vol. I, p. 501). In addition to that, when the cotton is sold under the third sampling the cost of that sample is from 35 to 50 cents. It will thus be seen that the reconcentration movement cost the farmer something like 65 to 75 cents per bale. But what is the poor farmer if he is not to be mulcted in this way? Who cares for him anybow?

poor farmer if he is not to be mulcted in this way? Who cares for him anyhow?

In addition to that, quite frequently the cotton was moved from warehouse to other points hundreds of miles away without the consent of the farmer, without the knowledge of the farmer, and how much delay and expense he may be put to to find his cotton in some far off warehouse is yet to be seen.

In connection with this last reconcentration of cotton southern Senators, almost to a Senator, and many southern cotton Congressmen, protested as vigorously as they knew how against this reconcentration of cotton. There was in their opinion no reason for it. It is doubtful if there was any reason for it, and the only ones to benefit by it was the cotton cooperatives, and the only ones to lose by it will be the farmers—unless the loss is so great that the Government will have to come forward for a third time and assume it.

The committee has tried very zealously to obtain figures on the total number of bales of futures that were bought or sold during the existence of the cotton cooperatives. Mr. Creekmore said it was very difficult to get these figures, but exhibits H and I of his deposition indicate the amount that he paid the futures brokers for 2 years, namely, for 1931–32 and 1932–33. For these 2 years commissions alone amounted to $1,246,815.24 (Creekmore, vol. I, pp. 109,109) pp. 108-109).

Each year shows futures brokers' total commissions, being separated into two divisions, namely, "brokers' commissions" an "brokers' commissions earned." What is meant is not shown.

The figure of $1,246,815.24 shown above constitutes commissions on some 8,000,000, plus bales of futures based on the brokerage as testified to, of 15 cents a bale. In other words, the cotton futures dealt in by the cotton cooperatives must have been many times the number of bales of spot cotton dealt in by them. Speculation at one time was freely admitted and, of course, cannot be denied.

COMPARISON OF CHARGES

It is undeniable, and for a large part undisputed, that the charges for handling cotton, and collected out of the cotton by the cooperatives, are considerably larger than similar charges made by private merchants and buyers. No better illustration of these charges can be given than the following typical statement from the seed-loan office:

KENNETH MCKELLAR. JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4464) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in celebration of the opening of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4465) granting an increase of pension to Amanda J. Branch (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions

A bill (S. 4466) declaring an emergency in the housing condition in the District of Columbia; creating a rent commission for the District of Columbia; prescribing powers and duties of the commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4467) for the relief of James B. McDonald; and A bill (S. 4468) for the relief of James B. McDonald; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4469) to authorize a preliminary examination of Buffalo Bayou, in Texas, and its tributaries with a view to the control of their floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11617) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Coosa River, Ga., and its tributaries, with a view to the control of their floods, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INVESTIGATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF-AMENDMENT

Mr. HATCH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 241) creating a special committee to investigate unemployment and relief (submitted by Mr. HATCH Mar. 2, 1936), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO STATE, JUSTICE, ETC., DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000, to be immediately available, for the acquisition by the Bureau of Fisheries of a site for a fish hatchery at Jessup's Mill, near Glacier National Park, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12098, the State, Justice, etc., Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REHABILITATION LOANS TO STORM-STRICKEN AREAS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Neely in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Wagner, Mr. Bulkley, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Couzens conferees on the part of the Senate.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3483) to provide for rural electrification, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Smith, Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Norris conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY DAY ADDRESS OF SECRETARY OF WAR AT CHICAGO

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record an address by the Honorable George H. Dern, Secretary of War, at Chicago, Ill., in commemoration of Army Day, April 6, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Throughout the United States patriotic groups similar to this one are gathered to observe Army Day. This observance marks the nineteenth anniversary of our entry into the World War and serves to remind us that war in any quarter of the world may sometimes involve even those nations remotely distant from the point where the struggle begins. Facility of transportation and communication has annihilated distance. All countries have be-come neighbors. Hence an international quarrel anywhere is a potential threat to world peace, and geographical remoteness no longer insures safety Recent events which have caused grave concern to statesmen throughout the world shock us into the realization that there is as yet no assurance of permanent peace. We still live in a world of men, not of angels, and it is still much the same old world. Asia, Africa, and Europe are resounding with the clash of arms or are fearful of impending disaster. Only in the two Americas does there appear to be an accord that warrants the hope of international temporality.

tional tranquility.

In this deplorable situation the statesmen of leading countries have again turned to increased armament as a means of providing have again turned to increased armament as a means of providing national security. The dream of disarmament has been abandoned at least for the present. The efficacy of security through antiwar, nonaggression treaties seems now to be generally doubted, and military alliances are coming back. Pronouncements of international tribunals are no longer regarded by some of the countries as final and binding judgments. Reliance on arms has become a more definite policy in the past few weeks than at any time in recent years. We may regret this backward step, but we cannot deny the obvious facts recent years. We may regret this backward step, but we cannot deny the obvious facts.

The concern that is felt by all Americans was forcefully expressed a few months ago by the President in his Armistice Day speech at Arlington when he said:

"I would not be frank with you if I did not tell you that the dangers that confront the future of mankind as a whole are greater to the world, and therefore to us, than the dangers which confront the people of the United States by and in themselves alone.

"Jealousies between nations continue; armaments increase; national ambitions that disturb the world's peace are thrust forward. Most serious of all, international confidence in the sacredness of international contracts is on the wane."

In America we are all hoping and praying that foreign nations

Most serious of all, international confidence in the sacredness of international contracts is on the wane."

In America we are all hoping and praying that foreign nations may compose their differences, and that the situation so alarming to the people of the world may be peacefully adjusted. We can point with pardonable pride to the policy of the good neighbor so happily inaugurated and so successfully carried on by President Roosevelt. This policy stands as a shining example of international amity. While we have had and will continue to have a sympathetic interest in the promotion of peace in every quarter of the globe, our first duty is to keep our own country at peace. Every action by the President and by the Congress in the field of international affairs has been undertaken primarily with this object in view. We are avoiding any step or commitment that might tend in any particular to involve us in any future conflict. This policy was stated with great clarity by President Roosevelt in the address to which I have alluded. He said:

"While, therefore, we cannot and must not hide our concern for grave world dangers, and while, at the same time, we cannot build walls around ourselves and hide our heads in the sand, we must go forward with all our strength to stress and to strive for international peace.

"Un this offert America must and will protect heavels. Under the same time, we have the same time the sam go forward with all our strength to stress and to strive for international peace.

"In this effort America must and will protect herself. Under no circumstances will this policy go to lengths beyond self-protection. Aggression on the part of the United States is an impossibility insofar as the present administration of your Government is concerned. Defense against aggression by others—adequate defense on land, on sea, and in air—is our accepted policy; and the measure of that defense is and will be solely the amount necessary to safeguard us against the armament of others. The more greatly they decrease their armaments, the more quickly and surely shall we decrease ours."

That, in a word, is the American policy of national defense "adequate defense on land, on sea, and in air." It is a policy It is a policy of "adequate defense on land, on sea, and in air." It is a policy of patriotism and common sense.

In declaring for adequate defense, the President is performing his constitutional duty. The Constitution states that one of the principal reasons for the formation of the Federal Union was "to provide for the common defense." It makes it the duty of Congress "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a Navy; to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia." It provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia." It also declares that a well-regulated militia is necessary to the security of a free State. The Constitution makes the President the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Those who advocate an adequate national defense establishment are obeying the mandate of the Constitution. date of the Constitution.

The observance of Army Day would seem to be an appropriate occasion for a brief review of the adequacy of our provision for the common defense. While we must have an efficient though small Regular Army as a nucleus to meet certain emergencies promptly Regular Army as a nucleus to meet certain emergencies promptly and for training purposes, yet under the clear implication of our fundamental law our main reliance is to be on our militia rather than on the standing Army. By militia we nowadays mean the National Guard and the Organized Reserves. This has been our settled policy in the past; it is our present policy and undoubtedly will always be our national policy.

There has never been any occasion for alarm lest our Army become dangerously large. On the contrary, there is ample justification for the belief that in the past and probably at the present time it is dangerously small. Throughout the century and a half of our history as a nation we have had half a dozen major wars. We were not prepared for any of them. It is the considered opinion of many capable students of history that if we had been better prepared we might, in some instances, not have been forced to fight; and it is the practically unanimous belief that with a proper fighting force we would have attained the final victory in a much shorter time and at a tremendous saving in blood and treasure. Military cemeteries, maimed veterans, national debts, pensions, and bonuses are the penalty we have paid, and will long continue to pay, for our fil-founded fear of militarism and our false economy in whittling down our Army and Navy.

Nineteen years ago today we entered the World War. Our Army false economy in whittling down our Army and Navy.

Nineteen years ago today we entered the World War. Our Army was small, widely scattered, and poorly equipped. One shudders to think what might have happened to us if we had suddenly and alone been pitted against a first-class nation prepared for war. It was many months before we were able to put an effective fighting force in the field. We were fortunate in that our Allies were holding the enemy while we prepared for war. It is not likely that we shall be so fortunate in the future. By the close of the war we had more than 4,000,000 men in the Army, and our industrial production had reached the point where these men could be supplied with all requisites from our own factories. But this was more than a year after we entered the war.

Following the war we possessed for a few years the most ade-supplied with all requisites from our own factories. But this was more than a year after we entered the war.

Following the war we possessed for a few years the most adequate defense establishment this country has ever had in peacetime. There were in civil life millions of men who had recently served as soldiers and who had been trained in actual combat. Our warehouses were filled with weapons, ammunition, and war supplies of all kinds. Our factories were in a position to resume the manufacture of munitions on short notice. The National Defense Act of 1920—the best piece of military legislation in our history—had been enacted, embodying the recommendations of statesmen and soldiers who had just undergone the harrowing experience of the Great War. This act provided for a Regular Army of approximately 18,000 officers and 280,000 enlisted men and a National Guard of 425,000 enlisted men, and this was regarded as the proper size Army to be maintained by the United States. However, this strength was never attained. The bitter lessons of the war were soon forgotten. Budgetary limitations progressively reduced the authorized strength of the armed forces so much that less than a year ago the strength of the Regular Army was 12,000 officers and 118,750 enlisted men and the National Guard about 185,000 officers and enlisted men.

The veterans of the World War have now reached an age which

The veterans of the World War have now reached an age which males them unavailable in an emergency, so we have lost the great potential reserve of millions of men trained during the World War. The weapons and other war supplies which once constituted an enormous war reserve have been largely consumed through issues or lost through deterioration or obsolescence. Stocks of war erves are now almost nonexistent.

reserves are now almost nonexistent.

Faced with the constitutional duty of providing for the common defense and the practical necessity of increasing the effectiveness of our small Regular Army and our National Guard and Organized Reserves, President Roosevelt, under the authorization of Congress, has caused certain definite advances to be made during the last few years. Today our Regular Army is composed of 12,000 officers and 147,000 enlisted men, still considerably short of the 14,000 officers and 165,000 enlisted men the War Department feels is immediately necessary, and scarcely more than half the number specified in the National Defense Act. Some increase in the strength of the National Guard has likewise been made. Provision has also been made to build up the Navy.

Coupled with these modest increases in numbers there has been a distinct advance in organization and training. Our military a distinct advance in organization and training. Our military forces have been divided into four armies, each with a definite territorial assignment. A General Headquarters Air Force has been formed, comprising practically all of the combat elements of the Air Corps in continental United States. Training maneuvers on formed, comprising practically all of the combat elements of the Air Corps in continental United States. Training maneuvers on a large scale are now held annually in different sections of the United States. These exercises involve considerable troop concentration, both of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

At last we are making progress in modernizing the equipment of our soldiers. We are still considerably behind the armies of other countries in this respect, but the results already accomplished have been highly satisfactory. Most of our airplanes are out of date, but we have in the process of production several hundred new planes which will be at least the equal of the best in use by other countries. Our old wartime tanks which we still have on hand are capable of about 4 miles per hour, whereas the few new ones we have recently acquired will have a speed of 40 miles per hour. We have converted nearly all of our National Guard and a considerable part of our Regular Army field artillery from horse-drawn to motor-drawn, with a tremendous increase in speed and efficiency. We are converting our field trains from wagons to motor trucks. The advantage of motor transportation over wagon transportation, particularly in areas served by great networks of fine highways, is readily apparent.

I do not need to tell my audience that these improvements in our national defense cost money. There has been some discussion as to the recent increases in War Department appropriations, with the assumption in some quarters that these increases meant a vast augmentation of our defense establishment. In the first place, there has been some confusion with reference to military vast augmentation of our defense establishment. In the first place, there has been some confusion with reference to military and nonmilitary items, which are included in the same act. The War Department Appropriation Act for the coming fiscal year contains nonmilitary items aggregating in cost about $200,000,000.

contains nonmilitary items aggregating in cost about $200,000,000. These represent estimated expenditures for river and harbor improvements, flood control, and the operation of the Panama Canal, all very important but not related to national defense. There has been some increase in military items, principally due to the increased strength of the Army, the increased cost of food, clothing and shelter, and the procurement of new aircraft.

In comparing the cost of our Army with that of any other country it is worth while recalling that wage and price levels in the United States are very much greater than in any other country. For example, the basic monthly pay of the soldier in this country is $21 per month, a small wage in comparison with that received by civilians, but several times that paid conscript soldiers in many other countries. The ration of our soldiers is more wholesome, more varied, more palatable, and much more expensive than that issued to any other army in the world. Items of clothing, equipment, and shelter are also much higher here.

Nevertheless, the per-capita cost of national defense in the United States is very much less than that of any other country of comparable importance. The last available figures, which are already out of date by reason of recent vast increase in armaments in foreign countries, showed that the annual per-capita cost of land, air, and sea forces in the United States was $5.08, in Germany $8.25, in Japan $13.39, in Italy $13.88, in Great Britain $15.28, in France $22.59, and in Russia $33.26. Since these figures have been compiled material increases in military expenditures have been announced for practically all of the countries listed, except the United States, where only a modest increase is in prospect.

The cost of national defense—including land, air, and sea except the United States, where only a modest increase is in prospect.

The cost of national defense—including land, air, and sea forces—amounts to about the cost of half a 3-cent postage stamp per day for each American. This is a very small premium to pay for insurance against national destruction, especially when we consider the territorial extent, the wealth of resources, and the liberties enjoyed by the people of the United States.

But we are told by a few individuals that our preparedness program is likely to lead to war, that the existence of defense forces is a potent cause of international conflict. History does not bear out this contention. We have had, as I have said, a half dozen major wars. Can anyone cite a single one of these that was caused by our Army? No; our Army has never started a war, but it has stopped all of them. It should be remembered that our Army and Navy are entirely under civilian control. The Commander in Chief is elected by the people. Wars can be declared only by the Congress, composed of the elected representatives of the people. We have never entered a war except with the overwhelming approval of the people of the United States. Our Army is thoroughly indoctrinated with the principal of subservience to the civil authorities of the Government.

Lovers of peace are very properly concerned at recent tremendous increases in armaments throughout the world. These armaments, however, I regard not as a probable cause of war, but rather as a symptom of international friction arising from other causes. It is oversimplifying the case, or putting the cart before the horse, to state that well-armed nations go to war and that therefore armaments cause war. Hostilities arise out of more deep-seated difficulties. Population pressure, the quest for raw materials, economic rivalries, old hates and jealousies engendered often by former wars, territorial aggrandizement, and racial and religious antagonisms have been among the causes of past wars. Overt acts that preparedness alone is a sure pre-wars. Overt acts that precipitated conflicts were usually the explosions of emotions long suppressed.

I have never believed that preparedness alone is a sure preventive of war, although it is probably true that if we had been strongly prepared Germany would not have provoked us into the war by sinking our ships. There is a great deal more to this war business than the mere question of armament, but there can be no dispute about the proposition that if a prepared nation is forced into war she is less likely to be defeated than if she were unprepared.

were unprepared.

We of the United States are fortunate in that we bear no grudge We of the United States are fortunate in that we bear no grudge against any other country. We have no fundamental cause for armed conflict with another nation. The United States has no territorial ambitions anywhere. This is evident from our decision to withdraw from the Philippines and to assist the people of those islands in establishing a republic, absolutely independent in every sense of the word. America wants only to be a good neighbor, respecting the rights of every nation, weak or strong, and cooperating with all countries in the promotion of peace and progress. We are not likely to be involved in any disagreement with any other power unless that nation seeks to invade our territory or to impair our sovereign rights. We feel we are less likely to be forced into any war if we have a defense establishment of sufficient strength to warn potential aggressors of the unwisdom of attacking us.

In maintaining our Army we are doing so primarily to safewisdom of attacking us.

In maintaining our Army we are doing so primarily to safe-guard our country against attack, but the Army is more than a defense agency. It is a vital, creative force that is closely identified with the growth and progress of our country. The Army opened up to settlement our vast domain. The hardy pioneers followed a trail from one frontier Army post to another, the soldiers providing protection and often food and shelter for the early settlers. Army engineers surveyed the routes of the early canals and the first railroads. They opened up our navigable streams and they built the Panama Canal. Army doctors pioneered in the field of preventive medicine, bringing under control the dread malaria and yellow fever. Army aviators led the way in the navigation of the air. Whenever disaster has visited a community the Army has promptly arrived to bring order out of chaos, to minister to the afflicted, to feed the hungry, and to shelter the homeless.

Within the last few weeks the northeastern part of the United States was visited by a series of the most devastating floods in history. Raging waters isolated communities, destroying hundreds of lives and hundreds of millions of dollars in property. Before the flood waters had begun to recede the Army was moving to aid the sufferers. When rall and highway communication was cut off Army aviators established contact and dropped food and other supplies to the people of the stricken communities. Army trucks sped ahead of raging waters and removed families and their belongings from the path of the torrent. National Guardsmen called into service by State Governors policed cities and restored normal conditions. C. C. C. workers under capable Reserve officers worked day and night building levees, guarding bridges, engaging in rescue work, and aiding local authorities.

From every flooded area I have received scores of telegrams and letters from State governors, mayors of cities, Red Cross workers. Within the last few weeks the northeastern part of the United day and night building levees, guarding bridges, engaging in rescue work, and aiding local authorities.

From every flooded area I have received scores of telegrams and letters from State governors, mayors of cities, Red Cross workers, and flood refugees, all expressing their deep gratitude for the splendid work of the Army personnel. It has often been said that governmental agencies are so bound up with red tape that it is impossible for them to act promptly. I wish you all might have seen the speed with which the Army cut red tape in the recent disaster. At the request of the President, I wired each corps area commander to take all steps necessary to cooperate with the local authorities in relieving distress. Further instructions were unnecessary. Army warehouses were opened and food and clothing issued without stint. Officers and soldiers were sped to every stricken community and emergency supply depots were established. Within a few hours every facility of the Army was utilized in the relief work. No appeal was disregarded. The speed and efficiency of the Army surprised even those of us who were intimately familiar with its work. The country is extremely fortunate in having an organized force ready for instant use not only against a foe but also in disasters that might otherwise overwhelm us. The Army has long been recognized as our Government's first-aid agency in great disasters, to act until the Red Cross can take over the task of relief and rehabilitation. The Army is capable of functioning just as effectively in the exigencies of peace as in the travalls of war. Its organization and operation of the C. C. C. camps is one of its brilliant peacetime achievements.

In paying tribute to the Army we must remember that the Army in the United States is ever the servant, never the master, of the people. The officers and men are under the civil authorities of the Government. Those who enter the Regular Army surrender many of the rights they possess as individuals. They forego the privilege of fixed abode, the o

While the soldier on entering his country's service voluntarily surrenders many of the rights and privileges of the civilian, he assumes a duty of which he is justly proud—that of being the guardian of his country. Statesmen make our foreign policy. Diplomats conduct our international relations. Officers of our executive and legislative branches may lose the peace, but to the soldier falls the task of regaining it.

Fach generation of our people has witnessed or participated in Each generation of our people has witnessed or participated in one or more major wars. If we learn anything from history, we must regretfully acknowledge the probability that future generations will undergo the same experience. This being true, we erations will undergo the same experience. This being true, we must turn to our Army as our hope of preserving or restoring peace. The glorious achievements of our soldiers in the past are written large on the pages of our national history. Let us unite in honoring and maintaining our present Army that we may face the future with the assurance that we will have alert, efficient soldiers jealously guarding American liberties. Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom. Tonight, as we conclude the observance of Army Day, uniformed sentinels are at every military post in the country, guarding the flag that symbolizes our Republic, ready to give their lives to keep that banner flying over American institutions. Let us unite for peace, but let us always defend something tions. Let us unite for peace, but let us always defend something more precious than peace—our God-given freedom. For, as Leonard Wood said, "We must not forget that there is many a peace which is worse than war."

TRANS-FLORIDA CANAL-WATER TRANSPORTATION

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the Congressional Record an editorial from the Marine News for April 1936, under the heading "Do the People Really Want Water Transportation?" and also an editorial appearing in the same issue of the Marine News under the heading "The President's Finest Commercial Initiation—Starting the Trans-Florida Canal."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Marine News for April 1936]

DO THE PEOPLE REALLY WANT WATER TRANSPORTATION?-USEFUL, BOONDOGGLING OR DIGGING IMPORTANT WATERWAYS?

We have been given to understand by the highest authority in the land that if no way can be discovered to provide honest useful labor for the out-of-job workers, then resort will be made to ful labor for the out-of-job workers, then resort will be made to boondoggling. Boondoggling is a new word grafted unto our special brand of the English tongue to indicate futile, inept activities. If we care to learn from the wisdom of 2,000 years ago, we have the authority of the Roman Jew Paulus for the dictum that: "If a man will not work neither should he eat." The problem of unemployment has been with humanity since the dawn of time, and was even more acute in the days of the Carpenter of Nazareth than today, for there were no factories and no machines to tend; agriculture and the activities that are associated therewith constituted the sole opening for the world's workers; there were a few artisans, but oh so few in contrast with the myriads that toiled in such work as building the pyramids of Egypt. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" "No man has hired us, Lord." That parable rings true as to labor conditions all the way down the ages. down the ages.

down the ages.

While it is perfectly true, that, in order to hold one's market every manufacturer must be alert to cheapen his product by reducing the number of hours' labor required to produce his goods, this process inevitably results in reducing the number of hands on the pay roll, while the cost of each hour's labor per individual steadily mounts. When the editor was learning the machinist's trade at the Rogers Locomotive Works, in Paterson, N. J., nearly 60 years ago, machinists were working 10 hours per day for $1.35. Yes; believe it or not, that was all a lathe hand was getting at that time whose job was turning siderods. There are people alive today who can recall when each loom had but one attendant. Check up and find out how many looms are cared for by one attendant today. The process is an inevitable one—higher wages, shorter hours, fewer hands. And what about the displaced workers? Their sole and only choice is back to the land or the sea. Nature will give them a living, but Nature never has, and never will, promise to give them any more than a bare living. Why not face facts? It is no solution to play Robin Hood and "rob selected Peter to pay collective Paul."

The only individual who can initate new enterprises is one who has more money than he needs to satisfy his immediate physical requirements. Soaking the rich is one form of national suicide. But soaking the rich and handing out the plunder in the form of doles not only exterminates the sole source of jobs, but pauperizes the jobless. No country can long survive the process. Facile descensus averni.

There is, however, something better to do with the taxpayers' money than boondoggling. Take a United States Coast Survey map and learn how many miles of water hauling might be saved between, say, Savannah and Pensacola, Savannah and Mobile, Savannah and New Orleans, Savannah and Port Arthur, Savannah and Galveston by digging the canal across Florida. And similarly there are substantial savings in distance between the ports of the Gulf of Mexico and all the ports of the Atlantic coast. But distances saved do not alone tell the whole story; there is the Gulf stream to be bucked going south around Florida, while there is a reverse flow toward the south close to the Atlantic coast.

But far more important than all other transportation economic factors is the fact that with the completion of our intracoastal waterways and canals the self-unloader and the vessel that carries its cargo above the water line become possibilities. Think of what the goal toward which the completion of our intracoastal waterways aims means to the Nation! It means the possibility of transporting miscellaneous freight at a rate as low as 1 will not formulated by the designs and towards of complete the self-transporting miscellaneous freight at a rate as low as 1 will not formulate the possibility of transporting miscellaneous freight at a rate as low as 1 mill per ton-mile of haul free of the dangers and terrors of ocean navigation. About the best that the land transport agencies can profitably handle the same freight for is at least five times as much.

much.

The digging of the Panama Canal set 50,000 at work and proved a God-send to industry in general. The demand for shovels, picks, crowbars, rock drills, wheelbarrows, tractors, diggers, ditchers, dredges, barges, wagons, carts, and trailers was felt all over the country and its repercussions were highly beneficial. Now the Panama Canal was only one-quarter as long as the canal across Florida, though its difficulties were very much greater. If the need arose, more men might be set to work digging the Florida canal than were used at Panama. Digging this greater. If the need arose, more men might be set to work digging the Florida canal than were used at Panama. Digging this Florida canal would prove a great boon in more ways than one. It would take out of the city individuals who are now slowly but surely sinking into pauperism. As we remark above, which is better for the nation and the individual, that these thousands should be fed, housed, and clothed while boondoggling or while improving the transportation facilities of our coast line? The choice is squarely up to you, O people. You are going to feed these jobless whether they boondoggle or dig your canals. We refuse to believe that you are so stupid or wicked as to prefer to support them in idleness or in boondoggling. The President was everlastingly right in starting the Florida canal, and it is simply stupid to include it in the same category as the "Quoddy" Power

Dam. Which is it going to be, boundoggling and idleness or useful digging of intracoastal waterways? The President is going to spend your money feeding, housing, and clothing these jobless any way you decide.

TURNING LOVELY FLORIDA INTO A SALT-CAKED WASTE: WHAT A SHAME!
THE PRESIDENT'S FINEST COMMERCIAL INITIATION—STARTING THE TRANS-FLORIDA CANAL

THE PRESIDENT'S FINEST COMMERCIAL INITIATION—STARTING THE TRANS-FLORIDA CANAL

On the principle, we suppose, that an objection that has no foundation in fact is better than no objection at all, the friends of the railroads have attacked the trans-Florida canal on the specious ground that digging a canal from the salt-water ocean into the interior of a piece of land would most surely permeate its ground with salt water and, accordingly, kill off all vegetation that needs fresh water. "Listens good", to use a modern colloquialism, at first blush, but a moment's reflection should convince any well-informed intelligent individual that it is absurd. If any such physical result followed the washing of the shores of a country with salt water, only salt meadow could adjoin the shores of the ocean, which is far from being a fact. Florida itself gives the lie to any such statement, for there are plenty of places on the coasts of Florida where luxurious vegetation grows close to the beaches that form her shores. A much more precariously situated country is Holland. Take a good look at the map. A substantial part of Holland is below the level of the North Sea, and for centuries windmills have been pumping water from drains in those same "hollowlands." But do they pump up salt water that has seeped in from the salt-water North Sea? They do not. They have been pumping up fresh water. The reason is simple enough. Because of rainfall lands adjacent to the ocean or any of its coastal indentations are constantly exuding into the ocean streams of fresh water; the flow is outward, not inward.

A special board of geologists and engineers recently submitted a is outward, not inward.

A special board of geologists and engineers recently submitted a report to the Ocala district engineer, in which occur the following conclusions:

conclusions:

"1. The Florida Peninsula is a nearly flat, very low-standing, wet plateau, having a 52-inch annual rainfall, which is equal to 900,000,000 gallons per square mile.

"4. The State is fashioned to absorb a large proportion of the rainfall. Much of the rain falling on the peninsula, therefore, percolates down into the rocks beneath. As a result, an immense underground reservoir of fresh water has been built up within both the upper and lower series of rocks.

"5. This fresh-water reservoir floats on salt water, which permeates the rock at the lower levels. The salt water has been depressed below sea level to depths depending upon the height of the fresh-water table above sea level. Thus a column of fresh water standing above sea level will be underlain by a much deeper column of fresh water above sea level, there will be about 38 feet of fresh water below sea level, there will be about 38 feet of fresh water below sea level.

fresh water above sea level, there will be about 38 feet of fresh water below sea level.

"6. Of the 195 miles of canal from deep water to deep water, excavation along only 14 percent, or 27 miles, will have any appreciable effect on the level of the ground-water table in the open reservoir, or on artesian conditions. The Ocala limestone will not be cut beyond the vicinity of Silver Springs. The artesian reservoir will not be cut anywhere."

Suppose we turn our attention to Holland for a moment. One-marker of the whole kingdom lies below the Ameterdam Zero, which will not be cut anywhere."

Suppose we turn our attention to Holland for a moment. One-quarter of the whole kingdom lies below the Amsterdam Zero, which is the average high-water mark of that branch of the Zuider Zee; and altogether 38 percent of the entire country lies within 40 inches of that same level. Holland is a whole lot lower than Florida, and vast areas are superimposed upon a sea-clay stratum that extends way out into the North Sea. When one bears in mind that this rich sea-clay stratum lies from 11½ to 16½ feet below the Amsterdam Zero, it must be evident that falling rain sinking down to this clay stratum prevents the incoming percolation of the waters of the North Sea, for the water within the "polders" is fresh, and it is only by pumping that its level is kept down so that the soil will not be too wet.

"Impoldering" is the process by which large areas of highly fertile land have been added to the agricultural acreage of this country. Land covered by water is first surrounded completely by dykes, and then continuously pumped out so as to maintain a ground-water table whose upper surface is sufficiently below the ground level. As most school children know, the water in these "polders" has been kept at the proper level by wind-mill driven pumps, and that process has been going on for the last 400 years. Recently steam engines have taken the place of wind mills. The rainfall in Holland is such that it requires 12 horsepower of pumps for every 100 hectares of land (a hectare being slightly less than 2½ acres) for each 40 inches the water must be lifted. And, stated in another way, the pumps must be powerful enough to raise 9 pounds of water 1 yard per minute per acre. In polders devoted to pasturage the water level is kept down to from 1 to 1½ feet below ground level; in agricultural "polders" the water level must be kept down to from 2½ to 3½ feet below ground. Such results can only be brought about by more or less continuous pumping. These "polders" are criss-crossed by drains, which cover 12 perce can only be brought about by more or less continuous pumping. These "polders" are criss-crossed by drains, which cover 12 percent of the area of the polder and serve to lead the water to the pumps. Kindly note that this water is not salt water, though what is generally known in this country as its "hard pan", or stiff clay, runs in a continuous layer right out into the North Sea.

The foregoing should convince the most fearsome that digging salt-water canals into and through a country does not introduce salt water into the subsoil. The fresh water which came down on the land in the form of rain, sinking down through the more or less porous soil, always forms an underground lake, which may carry in suspension plant food in the shape of salts of lime, but is never salt in the sense that salt water is salt. Even Florida might be proud to raise dairy products of as high grade as those raised in the "polders" of Holland; and the same goes for fruits, flowers bulbs and regetables. flowers, bulbs, and vegetables.

CEMENT PRICES AND CONTRACTS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by me and released today regarding the matter of fixing cement prices.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On April 2, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, I called attention to the fact that an investigation before the Interstate Commerce Committee disclosed that four cement companies bidding on six different items submitted identical prices to the Government all the way through to the fourth decimal. These figures were furnished to the committee by the engineer for the Reclamation Service.

The testimony of witnesses called to explain this apparent collusion brought out the fact that they were the result of using what is commonly known as the basing-point system in figuring prices. This is nothing more nor less than a juggling of freight costs so that all cement mills would arrive at an identical price to charge the Government. This practice has been going on for many years, and up to the present time the Secretary of the Interior and other departments of the Government have evidently been helpless to combat it, even though hids have been thrown out because they departments of the Government have evidently been helpless to combat it, even though bids have been thrown out because they appeared to be collusive.

On April 2 I called the Secretary's attention to the fact that the testimony of officers in some of the bidding companies disclosed their ability to make a good profit on this Government business at much less than the rate they were charging, but that they did not care to charge less, even though they sell to private consumers at a much lower rate of profit than that obtained from the Government. Government.

From the computation of my own staff I confidently believe the Republic Portland Cement Co., San Antonio, Tex., in this particular contract charged the Government a sum in excess of $165,000 over and above a fair profit. This alone can be laid to the fact that cement companies are permitted to use the basing-point system in establishing delivered prices.

Another monopolistic practice which has been brought to light during the course of the hearings on the basing point bill by the Interstate Commerce Committee is that, although every other industry in the country allows a discount for quantity purchases, the cement industry, with its closely integrated control among its cement industry, with its closely integrated control among its members, refuses to allow one penny discount on even a milliondollar order.

In other words, the Government must pay the same rate on an order involving half the output of a mill that a private individual pays when buying a single car. If the cement industry were to adopt even the rate of discount used by the steel industry (and no one will ever accuse the steel industry of being overgenerous in prices) this particular order which I am describing would save the taxpayers over $50,000.

These delivered price contracts by the cement industry in the aggregate are costing the taxpayers million of dollars a year in excessive charges. If the industry will not correct them from within, then the Government will have to correct them as clearcut violations of the antitrust laws

I am informed that this particular contract upon which testimony was given before our committee in hearings on the basing point bill was awarded yesterday because the officials of the Department of the Interior felt it would be useless to throw out the bids and readvertise.

recently. Some of them are very clever and ingenious. They amount to this, however: That we price this way in order to discourage monopolistic practices and to preserve free competition, etc. This is sheer bunk and hypocrisy. The truth is, of course—and there can be no serious, respectable discussion of our case unless this is acknowledged—that ours is an industry above all others that cannot stand free competition, that must systematically restrain competition or be ruined.

others that cannot stand free competition, that must systematically restrain competition or be ruined. * * ""

From 1933 to 1935, 76,000,000 barrels of cement were used on projects financed either wholly or partly from the Public Works fund. These purchases were made in order to place at work thousands of the unemployed. I have not had an opportunity to examine the other contracts for cement; but if this present contract for 365,000 barrels is any criterion of the way the Government has been gouged, I would say the cement industry has penalized the taxpayers of this country in excess profits an unbelievable sum.

Other industries besides cement use the basing point system, steel most prominent of all; and when it is enforced against the Government in its relief and emergency construction work, these industries are directly and deliberately adding greatly to the burden public debt and are taking in excess profits the money Congress thought it was appropriating to take care of the unemployed.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess.

SENATE

SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. RANDOLPH PERKINS, of New Jersey; and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, accompanied by the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, Elmore Whitehurst, and by Thomas M. Mulherin, special agent, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, appeared in the seats provided for them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, with his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., and R. O. Cullen, Esq., of Miami, Fla., associated with Mr. Hoffman, appeared in the seats assigned them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms by proclamation will open the proceedings of the Senate sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

On request of Mr. ASHURST, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, for Friday, April 10, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DIRECT EXAMINATION OF J. W. SALISBURY (CONTINUED)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to recall Mr. Salisbury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Call the witness.

Mr. Salisbury resumed the stand.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Salisbury, when you left the stand you were asked to go over a statement which I offered you with the request that certain notations be made upon it by you. Did you do that?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I should like to say to the managers that I have taken off this statement certain matters that were objectionable and which we could not agree upon. I am going to offer it in evidence in its present form.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We will object to it in its present form if it contains anything that is not admissible. I understand from the statement of counsel that it does contain matters that are not admissible.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You have misunderstood me. I did not say that. I said we cut off the objectionable matters, the matters that we could not agree upon, and now I think that everything in it is admissible.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. You mean to say that you prepared a new statement?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). No; but you objected to certain items of money as hearsay, and it was hearsay, as we stated, so we cut that off of this statement and we now are going to introduce it in that form. I wanted to give you an opportunity to look it over.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I do not know what counsel means when he says "he cut it off." Does he mean to say that there is anything in this statement that is not admissible?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We think everything in that statement now is admissible. What I meant when I said I "cut it off" was that the items to which you objected, and which we conceded were hearsay, were in the extreme righthand corner. So all we had to do was to cut it right through the center and leave that off; and we now believe that this is all admissible. Of course, you have an opportunity to object to any particular item.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We do not concede that the statement contains only admissible evidence. There are certain figures here which cannot be within the knowledge of the witness, and there are other statements to which we

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the situation exactly. Counsel for the respondent made a statement, as the Chair understood, that he had an agreement with the managers on the part of the House that a certain part of the statement was objectionable and that he cut out such portions as the House managers objected to.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is the case, there is no disagreement about it.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. It is our understanding that there was to be prepared a new statement and that from the of the case were to be paid out of the $300.

were not admissible under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the matter objected to by the managers on the part of the House is not admissible as evidence.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Mr. Salisbury, have you a copy of this statement?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to take the case of the Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. and state whether or not you have an independent recollection of that case being in the office at the time of the dissolution of the partnership between Judge Ritter and Mr. Rankin.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object. If the witness is to testify from independent memory, he may not use anything to refresh his memory. The objection is that the statement is not his own and there are items in the statement not within his knowledge.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I will ask you whether or not everything now left in the statement was not prepared under your direction and checked before you came here with Mr. Callaway, the accountant?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. I still press the objection. It is inadmissible for the witness to use a memorandum to refresh his memory if he has an independent knowledge of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is sound. By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Then I inquire, without your using the memorandum, do you recall whether there was in the office formerly occupied by Rankin & Ritter, at the time of the dissolution of the firm, a case known as Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against Cherry, in which the firm represented the plaintiff?— A. Yes. sir.

Q. What was the nature and character of that case?-A. That was a mortgage foreclosure.

Q. Do you know from memory the amount involved?-A. I think it was $3,750, but I am not sure.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether or not Judge Rankin collected any fee in that case?-A. Yes, sir; I know he collected a fee. I do not know how much.

Q. Did you look at a memorandum while you were in the office that indicated how much it was, and did you put it upon this sheet?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object. That is not testimony in a court of law. The witness now purports to testify from memory, and now it seems he is not testifying from memory. Counsel cannot bind the managers by that character of testimony.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I believe the law to be that if the statement is made under the direction of the witness he can testify to it with the same verity and with the same freedom as a witness as though he had made it himself.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We do not think that is the rule of evidence by any means. Many statements may be made in the presence of a witness that are not admissible afterward in evidence. The question is whether this witness, who looked at a memorandum that he did not make and of which he has already stated he did not know the amount or the details, can then be asked to testify.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the witness testify to what was within his own knowledge.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Can you give the amount of money that was collected in that case?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object unless it is within the witness' own knowledge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair just so stated. The Chair cannot determine whether it is within the knowledge of the witness.

A. I know what the agreement was. I do not know whether he collected that much money or not.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. What was the agreement?-A. That that case should be handled for $300 less the costs; in other words, the costs

- Q. And was the case disposed of while you were in the office?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Was there any fee collected to your knowledge while you were in the office in that case?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. I will call your attention to a case entitled "Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against Alma Gates." Do you recall whether or not there was such a case as that in the office?—A. Yes. sir.
- Q. Do you recall which side the office represented?—A. The
- Q. What was that case, if you please?—A. A mortgage fore-closure.
- Q. Do you know the amount involved from your own recollection?—A. It would be impossible to remember that. It was around three or four thousand dollars; all of those cases were. They were loans.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. We object to the statement of the witness that all those cases were like that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The witness is trying to testify to his own personal knowledge, and if he has none he cannot testify.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

- Q. Answer the question.—A. That was a mortgage fore-closure, but I do not remember exactly the amount involved.
- Q. Do you know from your independent recollection whether Mr. Rankin collected a fee in that case?—A. I know he collected some fee. I do not know how much.
- Q. Do you recall a case entitled "Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against E. A. Coates?"—A. That was not a case. That was a mortgage and was settled out of court by obtaining a quitclaim deed from one of the parties to the Indianapolis Life Insurance Co.
- Q. Do you or not, of your independent knowledge, know whether there was a fee collected in that case?—A. I know I made out a bill of $200. I do not know whether he collected it or not.
- Q. That was the charge that was made?—A. Yes, sir. I am sure I made out the bill myself.
- Q. Take the case of Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against Hutson. Do you recall that case?—A. That was not a case, as I recall. That was settled out of court.
- Q. Whom did the office represent?—A. The Indianapolis Life Insurance Co.
- Q. What was the disposition of it?—A. That was a case settled out of court I am sure. The memorandum will show. I cannot recall.
- Q. You cannot testify from the memorandum under the ruling of the Vice President.—A. That was a case either foreclosed in court or a quitclaim deed obtained and settled out of court, and I think it was the latter.
- Q. That is the Hutson case; Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against Hutson?—A. I am sure that did not go into court.
- Q. Did or did not Mr. Rankin collect a fee in that case?—
 A. That is another one where there was a charge of $200, and I do not know whether he collected it or not.
- Q. Did you make out a bill for the fee?—A. I do not know whether I made it out or whether I told him what I thought it was worth and he made it out.
- Q. Do you recall the case of Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. against H. J. Jury?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What kind of a case was that?—A. That was a fore-closure case.
 - Q. Did it go to final decree?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the fee in it?—A. I do not know of my own knowledge.
- Q. Do you know whether Mr. Rankin collected a cash fee in that case or not?—A. I know he collected a fee in all those Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. cases, but I do not know how much the fee was.
- Q. That was one of the Indianapolis Life Insurance Co. cases?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you recall the case of Lanfranchi, Inc., against Luckenbach?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the representation in that case?—A. We represented the plaintiff. In that case there was correspondence for several months before I came in the office, and a few Noel?—A. Yes, sir,

- months or weeks after I came in the office I prepared and filed a suit.
- Q. Was the suit disposed of while you were in the office?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. I will ask you to state whether or not Mr. Rankin collected a cash fee in that case?—A. I do not know for sure.
- Q. Then do not state.—A. I know a charge was made. I do not know whether he collected.
- Q. What was the charge made in the case?—A. I cannot recall that now.
- Q. Do you recall another case entitled "Lanfranchi, Inc., against Long and Baker"?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the nature of that case?—A. That was a suit to quiet title.
- Q. Was it disposed of while you were in the office?—A. I am sure it was.
- Q. Do you remember the amount involved in it?—A. No particular amount. It was to quiet title.
- Q. Was there any further claim or demand in the case than to quiet title?—A. It is difficult for me to say. It would be impossible for me to remember back to 1929. I am trying my best, but that is my best recollection of the case.
- Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Rankin collected a fee in the Lanfranchi case to quiet title?—A. I do not know.
- Q. Do you recall a case that was in the office entitled "O. J. Myers, receiver, against Lockhart & Stapper"?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Whom did you represent in that case?—A. We represented Lockhart & Stapper. That was a suit on a promissory note in Dade County, I believe.
 - Q. Do you know the amounts involved?-A. No, sir.
- Q. Was it a large or small amount?—A. It was a large amount, but I cannot remember what it was,
- Q. Could I refresh your memory by suggesting an amount, do you think?—A. It might.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. We submit that it is not proper for counsel to refresh the witness' recollection by suggesting an amount.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness testified he does not remember the amount.
 - A. I think I do now. I think it was $75,000 or $125,000. By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):
- Q. Was that case disposed of while you were in the office?—
 A. I think Judge Rankin handled the settlement of that case.
 I had nothing to do with it, although the docket shows that it was in the office and was pending at that time.
- Q. You remember that, do you?—A. I remember the case and that is all.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Mr. Rankin collected the fee in that case?—A. I do not.
- Q. Do you know the case of Nichols against Brown?—A. Yes. There was a mortgage foreclosure and a suit on a note at the same time. There were two cases of Nichols against Brown.
- Q. Do you remember the amount involved?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you remember whether it was a large or a small amount?—A. I cannot remember that. I just remember the case. I remember the caption and I remember the case.
- Q. Do you remember a case entitled Real Estate Building Co., Inc., against Stiles C. Hall?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. What was the character of that case?—A. That was a suit on a stock subscription.
- Q. Do you remember how much was involved in it?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you remember whether or not it was settled?—A. I am sure it was, but I do not know how.
- Q. Did you attend to any part of the settlement?—A. If I am not mistaken, I did, after judgment. I think I personally settled that case for a lesser amount than the judgment for cash.
- Q. Did you or did you not yourself collect some cash in that case?—A. Yes, sir; but I cannot remember what it was.
- Q. I will ask you, if you did collect cash, to whom did you turn it over, if anyone?—A. To Judge Rankin.
- Q. Are you acquainted with the case of Webb against Noel?—A Yes sir.

- Q. Whom did you represent in that case? When I say "you", I mean the office.—A. The office represented Mrs. Noel as a claimant, a third-party claimant, in that suit.
 - Q. Do you know the amount involved?—A. No; I do not.
 Q. Do you recollect whether or not a fee was collected in - that case by Judge Rankin?—A. Yes; I know there was.
- Q. Do you know how much it was?—A. I recall I fixed the fee. I think it was $50.
- Q. Do you recall a case entitled "Weatherby against Clayton"?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Which side did your office represent in that case?—A. Weatherby.
- Q. Do you remember the character and nature of that case?—A. I believe it was a suit for an accounting, or for fraud, or some—a suit for an accounting, I believe.
 - Q. How much was involved in it?-A. I cannot recall.
- Q. Do you know whether or not there was a fee collected in it?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you remember a case entitled "Tucker against Taylor"?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Do you remember which side you represented?—A. We represented Tucker.
- Q. What was the nature of that suit?—A. There were two Tucker suits. That was either a suit against an officer of a defunct bank, or a suit on a promissory note; I forget which.
- Q. Do you remember the amount involved in Tucker against Taylor?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you know whether or not Judge Rankin collected a fee in that case?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you recall the case of Tucker against Addison Mizner and Paris Singer?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Whom did your office represent in that case?—A. We represented the plaintiff. There are about five or six of those suits. That was a suit against the directors of a corporation to recover payments made on a land contract with the Mizner Development Co.
- Q. Do you remember the amount involved in the first case, Addison Mizner against Paris Singer?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Do you remember that they were large or small amounts?—A. I think all of them were fairly substantial amounts.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we may be able to curtail the proceeding and save some time. If counsel will submit to us just a list of the cases that he says were in the office, it being understood that this witness would testify that they were in the office, but not testifying as to the amount involved or the amount of fee received, that will shorten the proceeding a good deal.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). So far as I can do so by this witness, I am going to prove the amount of the fee received; so, of course, I could not stipulate that. I shall be glad to show you this statement.
- Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to transgress the rule for a moment to make a brief statement relative to the admissibility of this testimony.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.
- Mr. KING. Mr. President, the witness testified yester-day that when he came to the office there were books there and docket books, and in those books and the docket books a number of cases were shown as pending, more than 50; that he went over the docket and the books in the office, and from those books, plus additions which were made while he was in the office, in connection with another witness who has not been produced, the statement was prepared which counsel has produced here in evidence.
- It seems to me that the witness should be permitted to testify as to the statement, because it is a statement of facts which came to his knowledge from the books which had been kept in the due course of business, and which he found in the office at the time. He is subject, of course, to cross-examination as to his knowledge in regard to the matter. The memorandum was prepared under his direction and supervision. It seems to me counsel is entitled to offer the memorandum.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we did not object to the statement of the cases, but what we did object - to was the amounts involved, and the fees; and that is the part that the former occupant of the chair ruled out, saying that it was not admissible.

- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I did not understand that that was ruled out. Perhaps I am mistaken. I will apologize if I am.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the statement contains what purport to be the amounts involved or the amounts of fees received, it is evident from the testimony of the witness so far that the statement is incorrect in that particular. The Chair thinks the examination should proceed in the method in which it is being conducted.
- Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it was difficult to hear what the President pro tempore said. Did the occupant of the chair rule upon the subject matter?
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did rule upon the subject matter. The Chair will attempt to repeat his ruling.
- The witness has testified that in many cases he does not know the amounts of the fees, the amounts involved, or the amounts collected. The Presiding Officer ruled that if the statement, which was made up apparently from some memorandum, contains the amounts of the fees, or the amounts involved, it is not an accurate representation of the testimony of this witness, and should not be admitted without identification of each item.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, the statement does not purport to contain the amounts of the fees received, or any thereof. I have to draw upon his recollection for that, as I understand.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the statement does not contain the facts which you are now asking the witness as to amounts of fees and amounts collected, and he identifies that as the memorandum which he prepared from the cases in the office, then, of course, it is subject to admission.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will show it to the President pro tempore if he would like to see it.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House would like to suggest that the papers offered to the witness contain other memoranda about which the witness has no knowledge; and upon that ground the former occupant of the chair ruled that the statement was not admissible in evidence.
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the whole instrument is not admissible in evidence, if it contains matter not within the knowledge of this witness.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Would it be proper for me to ask the managers on the part of the House to look at this statement and say to which items that statement applies?
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, at a moment's notice we cannot sit down here and go over three or four sheets of paper and attempt to determine that; but I can easily see that in the right-hand column we have this: "Amount involved", and there follow, case by case, for some 30 cases, possibly—
 - Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Fifty cases.
- Mr. Manager PERKINS. There follow figures concerning which this witness has already said he has no knowledge; and it is on that ground that we ask that the paper be ruled out.
- In order to curtail this proceeding and save time, if counsel for the respondent will clip off the entire figures on the right-hand side of the sheet, we probably then can withdraw any objection to use of the paper, and it may go in without further testimony.
- Mr. WALSH (of counsel). But I must prove the amount involved if I can prove it by competent testimony. I have already taken out all statements as to fees collected; but I maintain that, as those are taken out, this entire statement is admissible, having been made under the direction of Mr. Salisbury. Would it be proper for me to submit this statement to the President?
- The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter that counsel for the respective parties here tried to stipulate were with regard to what this instrument contains. The Chair, of course, does not know what is in the instrument. If it carries the cases, with an estimate of values and fees, and this witness has already testified in response to a number of questions that he does not know of his own knowledge these facts, then, of course, the instrument would not be properly identified for the purpose of those items.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). It does not contain those items, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks, in that case, that time may be saved in this way:

No matter what the ruling of the Presiding Officer may be as to the materiality or competency of this instrument as evidence, it may be appealed to the Court. In other words, the Court will be the ultimate judge of the materiality and relevancy and competency of all this evidence. The Chair may submit that question. It is perfectly evident that a long document of that kind will have to be read and considered before the Court can pass on it. Therefore, the Chair rules that the instrument will be received, subject to any examination of this witness or any other witness that may be had on the subject.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I will ask to have the statement marked with an appropriate number as an exhibit of the respondent, and introduce it in evidence.

(The document was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 47.") Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, may I inquire of counsel for the respondent whether he has a copy of the statement that we may use?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have counsel a copy? Mr. WALSH (of counsel). I have two copies, and I shall be glad to let the managers on the part of the House have one of them while I am reading from the other.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Thank you.

(Mr. Walsh, of counsel, handed a paper to Mr. Manager PERKINS.)

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. I notice upon respondent's exhibit no. 47 you have made the notations which you were called upon to make yesterday evening, and the notations are "O. K., J. W. S." Is that correct?-A. That is correct.

Q. At the extreme outside there are check marks, or asterisks. What does that mean?-A. That means that in some of those instances it shows a suit was not filed until after Judge Ritter left the firm, but that those cases were in progress at least in the office, correspondence on them.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, may I ask permission just for a moment to inspect the original exhibit?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel may do that. (Mr. Walsh, of counsel, exhibited a paper to Mr. Manager PERKINS.) Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Those being so distiguishedthat is what we stopped to do last night-I will now read into the RECORD the statement without asking the witness any questions. We left off, Mr. Managers, at the case of 1/9/28. Palms Ice Company matter. (Office client.) Owner. Sale of plant and dissolution corporation.

Do you recall that case?-A. That was not a case. I recall the transaction.

Q. What was the general nature of it?-A. That was the sale of the Palms Ice Co. to the City Ice & Fuel Co.

Q. Do you recall whether or not there was a fee collected in that case?-A. Yes, sir; I handled that transaction.

Q. Did you collect the money yourself?-A. No. I gave the figures to Judge Rankin, what I thought a reasonable fee.

Q. And did he or did he not collect the fee in it?-A. Yes. sir; he did.

Q. How much was it?-A. Eight hundred and some dollars.

Q. [Reading:]

County Court. 3/25/29. Malcolm vs. Pace. Represented plaintiff. Claim. Amount involved, $200.

Was a fee collected in that case?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you collect it, or did Mr. Rankin?-A. I might have collected it and turned it over to him, but I cannot recall.

Q. How much was the fee in that case?-A. I cannot recall that.

Q. [Reading:]

Jessup. Do you remember a case called Jessup, Inc.?-A. Well, that was not a case.

Q. Do you remember the matter?-A. Yes. I do not know when the corporation was formed.

Q. The ones I am now reading-I will ask you whether this list were office clients without litigation:

Jessup, Inc. Watt-Sinclair, Inc. Worth Avenue Corporation. Worth Avenue Investment Co. Mulford Realty Corporation. Jno. J. Hanson. Michael J. Jennings Lanfranchi & Allied corporations.

A. Yes, sir; they were all clients of the office.

Q. And was there business with each and every one of those clients in the office at the time you went in?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether or not all those cases, or if not. what proportion of those cases, came into the office through Judge Rankin, as shown by the files?-A. Very few through Judge Rankin.

Q. I mean through Judge Ritter.—A. Practically all of that business came into that office through Judge Ritter.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we object to this. It is quite obvious this witness is testifying to something entirely outside of his knowledge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness was in the office at that time and was familiar with the correspondence. He had charge of the correspondence. The Chair thinks it is pertinent and material on that account.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. You have placed an asterisk at the left of the party that the office represented in each instance, and I understand that asterisk means that those are cases that the pleadings or the correspondence in the files shows came through Judge Ritter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been practicing law now for 10 years, I believe you stated on your direct examination?-A. A little longer than that.

Q. A little longer than that. You went into that office in '29. You had then been practicing how long?-A. A little over 3 years.

Q. A little over 3 years. I will ask you, from the knowledge you had at that time and from the knowledge you have today, what you would say was the reasonable value of a law business of that kind in February 1929?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. One minute. Mr. President, we object. This witness has not shown himself competent to testify to the value of a law business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the objection is well taken.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Have you observed during the 10 years that you have practiced law the character of cases, the number that are litigated, and the character of office business, from which you could draw a fair deduction as to the reasonable value of such cases in a law office?

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, we object. That is clearly not competent testimony, even under the interrogation now. To place a value on a law business would require someone who had knowledge of the purchase and sale of law businesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer would not consider it very competent, particularly in view of the fact that the counsel for the respondent has in detail shown an interest on the part of the witness in the office during this witness' presence there, and has attempted to show the value and the character of litigation and the fees to be paid, or paid. The Chair would not consider the testimoney of the witness competent in the matter.

By Mr. WALSH (of counsel):

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Rankin—first I am going to ask you, how long did you stay in that office with Mr. Rankin?—A. About 3 years.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Rankin later with reference to collecting some money that was due you?—A. I had several such conversations.

Q. I want to call your particular attention to one time that you talked to him, and that he gave you a reason why you had not been paid.—A. Yes, sir; I remember very well.

Q. When was that time? Fix it as definitely as you can.—A. Well, it was not very long before I left, and I left around the first of the year of 1933 or 1932. Of 1932 or 1933.

Q. Was that after this Whitehall fee was paid?—A. Yes.

Q. You had heard that he had received a fee from that source, had you?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Just state the conversation that you had with him.—
A. My first conversation regarding that fee—he told me that under the circumstances, as I did not do any of the work in the case, that I should not receive my 15 percent.

Q. Weil, had you done any work in the case?—A. Not in that particular case. And as a result of that conversation I went to see Judge Ritter, who had heard—in fact, made my deal with Mr. Rankin—to get his idea of my arrangement, whether or not I was entitled to that 15 percent, and Judge Ritter thought the same way I did. After that I collected little payments—as many as I could.

Q. May I shorten this by saying that he was very slow in paying it, and you dunned him many times for it?—A. Very slow

Q. On that particular occasion, after you heard that he had collected this fee in the Whitehall case, did you have a conversation with him with respect to that incident?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state the conversation.—A. I asked him for the money due me.

Q. That is, the money that was due you generally from the practice up to that time?—A. From the whole business.

Q. Not referring to this particular work he did?—A. No, no; my 15 percent under my arrangement—15 percent of everything we took in. And he told me he did not have it. And I asked him why he did not; that he was collecting money. He told me that he left a lot of bills in Alabama; that he paid those; and he would have to pay Judge Ritter $5,000 he owed him.

Q. Did he state whether or not he had paid the $5,000?—A. Yes; I am sure he told me he had paid it.

Q. Did he give you the details of any other payments which he had made as a reason for not paying you?—A. No; he just—his bills that he owed in Alabama.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). You may take the witness.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Salisbury, excepting so far as you have testified as to the amount of fees collected from the business enumerated, you have no knowledge, have you?—A. I have some knowledge of my recommendations to Judge Rankin of the fee that should be charged. I do not know whether he collected it.

Q. Are the lead-pencil emendations on the schedule just read from in your handwriting?—A. Yes, sir; all of them.

Q. And do they show your knowledge of the fees collected?—A. Those show my knowledge—

Q. Well——A. Just a minute. Those show my knowledge of those that I can testify under oath he did collect. As I tell you again, in practically all those cases that I handled, which was probably 90 percent, I recommended to Judge Rankin the fee that should be charged. Whether he collected it or not, I cannot tell you.

Q. Well, in the case of Highsmith against Okeechobee Co. have you not entered in a lead-pencil memorandum that the fee was $500 or $600?—A. You do not read that right. That is my writing; I remember it. I put that down there to show that, to my knowledge, it was either five or six hundred dollars in cash that he had collected in that case that I knew of. I do not know whether he got the balance of the $1,250.

Q. Then it seems to me that I have read it correctly; that is to say, that your memorandum here indicates that, so far as your knowledge goes, he collected five or six hundred dollars?—A. That is right.

Q. And not $1,250, as you testified?—A. I testified, if you will pardon me, that the office share of the $2,500 fee was $1,250.

Q. You are qualifying that by stating that you do not know whether the fee was fully collected or not?—A. That is right, Q. Mr. Salisbury, in the right-hand column of this exhibit appear numerous numbers apparently expressing the amount involved in various suits?—A. That is right.

Q. That was not made from any knowledge of your own?— A. Yes. sir.

Q. By whom was it made up?—A. That was made up in connection with Mr. Callaway from the docket sheets, from the files in the office; it showed the amount and what was involved in the various suits.

Q. That was knowledge that came from examining other documents. Is that true?—A. Some of the documents I prepared myself; yes; the documents in the office and court records.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. Mr. President, so far as the further examination of the document is concerned, I am going to ask the indulgence of the Court to let our cross-examination of this paper be deferred, and ask Mr. Salisbury with reference to it a little later; and, if it meets with the approval of the Court, I will complete my ordinary cross-examination on the rest of his testimony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. Mr. Salisbury, you testified before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary in Florida?—A. Yes, sir; that is right.

Q. In that testimony you related your knowledge of the transactions between Judge Ritter and Mr. Rankin?—A. I will explain to you, if I may.

Q. Please answer my question. I am asking the question.—A. I am trying to explain it just like you want it answered. I did testify in that hearing, and the first conversation I had with Mr. Judge Ritter's attorney was about 2 minutes before they put me on the stand. If you will read that record, you can see they did not know what they were talking about when they examined me, because they did not know I was to be a witness.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. One minute. Mr. President, I object to the characterizations of the witness. They are voluntary, incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant.

A. I am explaining to you.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness has a right, after answering, to explain, if he desires to do so.

Mr. Manager PERKINS. The only interrogation on the part of the managers was whether he testified as to transactions between Judge Ritter and Mr. Rankin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This witness has said that he testified, has he not?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Manager PERKINS:

Q. You were examined and cross-examined in that investigation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the extent of four or five pages?—A. No; to the extent of a few questions. You can see how many there are.

Q. You say there were not four or five pages but a few questions. Is that right?-A. If you will give me the book, I will tell you the number of pages. I cannot tell otherwise. [After examining document.] Three and a half pages.

Q. You were asked on that examination, were you not?-Question. Your name and occupation and place of business, Mr. Salisbury.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you answered-

J. W. Salisbury, attorney at law, West Palm Beach, Fla.

Q. You were asked, were you not?-

Are you engaged in the practice of law at this time?

A. Yes. sir.

Q. And you answered, "Yes, sir?"-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were asked, were you not, this question?-Do you hold any official position in your county at this time?

And you answered, did you not?-

I am State attorney for the circuit.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were also asked, Mr. Salisbury, were you not?-Do you know Judge Rankin and Judge Ritter?

And you answered, "Yes, sir?"-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were asked this question, were you not, and you made answer as follows:

Question. Did you know them at the time they were in partner-ship in the practice of law at West Palm Beach?

Answer. I have known Judge Ritter for quite a few years before that. I knew him in Colorado.

A. That is right.

Q. You were asked this question, were you not?-

Question. Did you know Judge Rankin at the time of the existence of the partnership?

And you answered, "Yes, sir?"-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were also asked this question, were you not?-

Question. When the partnership of Ritter & Rankin was dissolved, did you go into the office of Judge Rankin in association with him in any way?

And you answered as follows, did you not?-

Answer. Yes, sir; under this arrangement. When Judge Ritter left he talked to me one day and said that Judge Rankin would have so much business he would not be able to handle it alone and that he wanted to get someone in his office that could handle trial work for him, as he was a little hard of hearing, and draw pleadings, and help him with the work, and in return for that Judge Rankin would pay, and that I could carry on my own practice, and in return for the work I would do in Judge Rankin's office that I would get 15 percent of his fees, and I at once took that proposition and moved in.

A. That is right.

Q. You were then asked this question, were you not?-Was that at the time of the dissolution of that partnership?

And you answered-

Yes, sir; I believe that was in February of 1929.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were then asked this question, were you not?-Did you make that arrangement with Rankin?

And you answered-

Yes; in the presence of Judge Ritter.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you not also asked this question?—

After you went into the office of Judge Rankin was there considerable business there, or was there practically no business?

And you answered as follows, did you not?-
